January 20, 1904.

DEAR SIRS,—I feel it both a duty and pleasure to thank you for your two magnificent Concert Grand Pianofortes used by me during my first tour in Great Britain. I cannot speak too highly of the brilliant and sympathetic tone and responsive touch possessed by them. I can confidently say you need fear no rival.

Yours faithfully,

WILHELM BACKHAUS.

January 22, 1904.

DEAR SIRS,—It affords me the greatest pleasure to state that the Concert Grand Pianos of your manufacture used by me at my Concerts at Queen's Hall and St. James's Hall, London, met with my entire approval.

I consider the tone of a remarkably sweet and sympathetic quality, and of unusual sustaining power, the touch very responsive and light. Having always been used to Pianos of German make, it was a great and agreeable surprise to me to find such a perfect instrument of English manufacture.

Yours faithfully,

(Dr.) RICHARD STRAUSS.

ŠEVČÍK'S NEW VIOLIN METHOD.

HERR HEINRICH DITTMAR

(Certificated by Professor Ševčík to have entirely acquired his teaching method.) Twenty years' Teaching experience.

The Times, November 13, 1905.—"Miss Crow, another new violinist, has been a pupil of Professors Heinrich Dittmar and Ševčík, of whose clever training her playing bears marked evidence."

Morning Post, November 13, 1905.—"The fact that Miss L. Crow is a pupil of Herr H. Dittmar and Professor Ševčík, speaks well for her attainments, which proved to be of a high order. The playing was a triumph of executive skill, and she has a magnificent technique."

Daily Telegraph, November 11, 1905.—"Miss Crow gave a violin recital in the Bechstein Hall with pronounced success. Her talent has been carefully developed, and her playing commanded attention and excited esteem by firmness of technique, clearness, and significance of phrasing."

Studio, 40, Wigmore Street, London, W.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS (Tenor).

Barnstaple Festival Society's performance of Gounod's "Faust," May 3, 1905.

"Mr. Samuel Masters had a good deal to do, and he did it in a manner that won golden opinions. His interpretation of the Cavatina, 'All Hail,' was exquisite."—North Devon Journal.

"Mr. Samuel Masters made a sympathetic hero, the purity of his true tenor quality, conspicuous on high notes, combined with artistic perception and accurate sense of intonation, being special features of his performance."—Western Morning News.

"As Faust Mr. Samuel Masters was the passionate lover to the life, and his singing was a triumph from start to finish."—Devon and Exeter Gazette.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS.

Performance of "King Olaf," Colchester Musical Society, May 4, 1905.

"Mr. Samuel Masters was in fine form, and the lengthy, but by no means monotonous solo, 'And King Olaf heard the cry,' was sufficient to display a powerful, yet well-controlled, voice, the B flat being splendidly taken. His other solos were equally good, and his duet with the Hon. Mrs. Clifford evoked quite a storm of applause."—East Anglian Daily Times.

"Mr. Samuel Masters was very successful in his solo work, 'And King Olaf heard the cry' being a distinctly artistic effort, the top B flat being remarkably well taken. All his singing was vigorous and in perfect tune."—Essex Telegraph.

MR. SAMUEL MASTERS.

Performance of "Creation," Northampton Musical Society. "Mr. Samuel Masters excelled in the tenor part. His recitative work exemplified the superb descriptive power of this feature of the oratorio. His portion of the concerted numbers was sung with infinite good judgment and charming tunefulness, and his solos were rendered with equal facility and expressiveness."

Address, 6r, Alexandra Road, Wimbledon, S.W.

MISS FLORENCE BOWNESS

(SOPRANO VOCALIST).

Oratorio, Concerts, &c.

Peers Clough Hall, Lumb-in-Rossendale, Manchester.

MISS

(SOPRANO). Pupil of Miss ANNA WILLIAMS.

Oratorios, Concerts, &c. For terms, apply, 24, Sutton Court, Chiswick, W.

"I have much pleasure in recommending Miss Gertrude Fletcher as a solo soprano. Miss Fletcher is an earnest worker, good musician, possesses an excellent voice, and would, I am sure, give satisfaction in everything she undertakes."—ALLEN GILL.

MISS ESTELLA LINDEN

PRINCIPAL SOPRANO SOLOIST, Southwark Cathedral (last six years).

Special terms for Churches. Has sung 60 Oratorios—at Sheffield (Dr. Coward's), Bristol (Mr. Riseley's), Derby, Banbury, Todmorden, Bury, Margate, Sevenoaks, Bermondsey, Luton, Peterborough, &c.

"Miss Linden has sung the solos for me in the principal Oratorios at Southwark Cathedral with great distinction. She has a beautiful voice and artistic feeling. I have always found her thoroughly efficient and reliable."—Dr. A. MADELEY RICHARDSON.

For vacant dates, 35, Lancaster Road, South Hampstead, N.W.

MISS AMY SARGENT

A.R.A.M. (SOPRANO).

MR. GEORGE STUBBS

(BARITONE. St. Paul's Cathedral).

For Oratorios, Concerts, &c.

Address, 129, Fawnbrake Avenue, Herne Hill, S.E.

MR. HENRY BEAUMONT

(THE GREAT ENGLISH TENOR).

For Oratorio.

The King, Aug. 19, 1905, says: "Mr. Henry Beaumont is an oratorio tenor of eminence, and in this direction few English tenors are so widely popular as he, or so much in demand. His voice is wonderfully reminiscent of Sims Reeves; there is the same timbre, the same expression."

The Buxton Advertiser, Aug. 30, 1905, says: "Mr. Beaumont is one of the best, if not the best of oratorio tenors, and his voice reminds one very forcibly of the late Mr. Sims Reeves. He received the heartiest of welcomes, and sang with all that verve we are accustomed to in him."

The Derbyshire Advertiser and Journal, Dec. 30, 1904, says: "To say that Mr. Henry Beaumont is a tenor recalling with credit to himself Mr. Sims Reeves is a high compliment, but it is not undeserved."

Address, 11, Warwick Avenue, Maida Vale, London, W.

MR. C. W. FREDERICKS

(TENOR VOCALIST).

Of the Trocadero, Paris; Crystal Palace, London; and Principal Provincial Concerts, is still open to accept engagements for Oratorio, Ballad, or other Concerts, and to supply High-class Concert Parties to suit any requirements. Up-to-date Press Notices, &c., forwarded on application. Address, Cathedral, Lichfield.

Maryport News, December 16, 1905.—"Mr. Fredericks possesses a tenor voice of rich quality, and sang with pathos and expression 'The Sailor's Grave.' His renderings of 'Lend me your aid' and 'Ever and always' were rapturously received, and he was recalled in each case."

MR. JAMES HORNCastle

(PRINCIPAL TENOR, St. Anne's, Soho, W.).

WORCESTER FESTIVAL, 1905.

BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL.

WORCESTER FESTIVAL CHORAL.

Change of Address—

35, Vereker Road, West Kensington, W.

MR. HENRY PLEVY

(TENOR).

"ANCIENT MARINER."—"Gave complete satisfaction. He sang the words of the Wedding Guest most artistically, but it was his rendering of the air illustrating the great calm that was his finest effort, and Mr. Plevy deserved all the applause awarded him."—Grimsby Telegraph.

For terms and vacant dates apply—

88, Yale Court, West Hampstead, N.W.

BREARLEY REDFEARNE

(TENOR).

For vacant dates, apply, care of Messrs. J. Norwood & Sons, North Lancashire Music Warehouse, Preston, Lancs.

Extensive repertoire of over 120 works, standard and modern compositions.

Marlbro' Grove, Leeds.

MR. VIVIAN BENNETTS

(TENOR)

Westminster Abbey.

BRISTOL FESTIVAL, 1905.

The Standard.

Berlio's "LELIO."—"Mr. Vivian Bennetts, at very short notice, took the tenor part with skill."

The Bristol Times and Mirror.

Berlio's "LELIO."—"The tenor solo, the 'Fisherman,' was finely taken by Mr. Vivian Bennetts."

The Western Daily Press.

Swindon Evening Advertiser.—December 5, 1905.

"MESSIAH" (Swindon).—"Mr. Vivian Bennetts' pleasing tenor was heard to advantage in the opening Recit. and Aria 'Comfort ye' and 'Ev'ry Valley,' and he gained vociferous applause for his 'Thou shalt break them.'"

North Wilts Herald.—December 5, 1905.

"MESSIAH" (Swindon).—"Mr. Vivian Bennetts showed himself a capable performer, and although he gave each of his solos in excellent style, he shone most in 'Ev'ry Valley' and 'But Thou didst not leave.'"

Bath Herald.—December 6, 1905.

"MESSIAH" (Bath).—"Mr. Vivian Bennetts scored a legitimate success, and received an ovation for his spirited rendering of 'Thou shalt break them.'"

The Hampshire Observer. December 9, 1905.

"ST. PAUL" (WINCHESTER).—"Mr. Vivian Bennetts, who possesses a mellifluous tenor voice of great beauty and extensive compass, discharged his duties in the somewhat trying recitative passages with great brilliance, and his singing of the air 'Be thou faithful' was really magnificent. The audience demanded an encore, which had to be complied with to satisfy them."

Hampshire Chronicle. December 9, 1905.

"ST. PAUL" (WINCHESTER).—"Mr. Vivian Bennetts could hardly have been better received than he was, and the skilful manner in which he acquitted himself certainly deserved all the appreciation possible. His most striking performance was probably the most difficult of the many which fell to his share—viz., the air 'Be thou faithful.' To this a 'cello obbligato was played, and the whole was so strikingly effective that the audience would be content with nothing short of a repetition."

The Cheshire Observer. December 16, 1905.

"ELIJAH" (CHESTER).—"Mr. Vivian Bennetts was a thoroughly efficient and enjoyable tenor. His work was characterized by dramatic rendering and clear enunciation. His 'Ye people' and 'If with all your hearts' were fine performances."

Blandford Mansion, East Street, Manchester Square, London, W.

MR. ARTHUR WALENN

(BARITONE).

Now Booking for Next Season.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S "EVERYMAN."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, RICHMOND, May 3. Of this Concert—The Herald says: "Mr. Arthur Walenn's fine baritone voice was heard to much advantage in the exacting solos for Everyman."

The Surrey Comet: "Mr. Arthur Walenn gave to the character of Everyman the deepest expression and impressiveness, at the same time avoiding that exaggeration which would tempt a singer of less culture."

The Richmond Times: "Of the soloists, the place of honour must certainly be given to Mr. Arthur Walenn, who, as Everyman, had so much to do. It was always difficult, requiring great variety and expression, to ward off a suspicion of dullness that might otherwise have crept in. In Mr. Walenn's hands nothing of the kind happened; he has a bass voice of very pleasing quality, well under control, and was evidently thoroughly acquainted not only with the music itself, but with the spirit of the work."

South Wales Daily Telegraph: "HIAWATHA" (conducted by the composer).—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was heard to real advantage. The first part was full of poetry and imagination, and in the 'Vision' ('True is all Iago tells us') he sang with a dramatic intensity which was little short of a revelation."

Tunbridge Wells Courier: "ELIJAH."—"Mr. Arthur Walenn afforded us an intellectual and musical treat in his embodiment of the idea of the Prophet Elijah. To enact a character of this kind, an arduous duty is imposed on the singer, who not only requires a voice of good power and range, but an artistic insight into the nature of the subject to be dealt with is imperative. That Mr. Walenn fulfilled these attributes is undeniable, and nothing but praise can be accorded him for a really superb delineation of the part."

Liverpool Daily Post: "The MESSIAH" at Liverpool.—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was very successful in sustaining the bass solos, both voice and vocalization being excellent."

20, Ashworth Mansions, Elgin Avenue, London, W.

MR. JAMES COLEMAN

(BASS)

(Vicar Choral, Lichfield Cathedral).

Of the Crystal Palace, London, Birmingham Festival Choral Society, and principal Provincial Concerts.

YORK MUSICAL SOCIETY.—"THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA."—"Miss Helen Jaxon and Mr. Jas. Coleman sang the soprano and baritone soli, and their vocalization was highly meritorious."—Yorkshire Herald, Dec. 13, 1905.

SUTTON CHORAL SOCIETY.—"KING CONOR" (conducted by the composer).—"One would not desire to hear the solo parts better rendered than they were by Mr. J. Coleman, a worthy favourite with Sutton audiences. . . . In the second part he sang 'The spirit of the storm' (Adams) in a manner that could not be too well spoken of, and 'Believe me' (Erik Normann), following the latter with 'A posy of roses'—a composition of his own—in response to repeated recalls."—Sutton News, Dec. 16, 1905.

YORK SYMPHONY CONCERT.—"Mr. J. Coleman sang with great dramatic expression Coleridge-Taylor's 'Beat, beat, drums,' and 'Shoshone's Adieu' (the composer conducting). He also gave 'O star of eve' with artistic expression, and the audience were not content until he had repeated it."—Yorkshire Post, 1905.

"ELIJAH."—"Mr. J. Coleman as Elijah was an unqualified success from first to last. . . . His voice is admirably adapted to the music, and he has evidently made a careful study of it."—Smethwick Telephone, Nov. 11, 1905.

NOTTINGHAM.—"Few basses have come to the front of late years so finely equipped for their work as Mr. James Coleman. . . . He created quite a triumph in 'Honour and Arms,' which was magnificently sung. . . . In lighter selections he demonstrated a rare control over his voice, which is big in register as in volume, and throughout he sang with the fineness and touch of a true artist."—Nottingham Daily Guardian, Nov. 8, 1905.

SOUTHPORT.—"Mr. Coleman's singing was greatly admired, and he was warmly received. Full scope was given him in his songs to display his powerful bass voice. . . . The song he gave for a determined encore, was capitally sung, and gave him an opportunity to display a wonderful amount of sympathy and control."—The Southport Visitor, Nov. 25, 1905.

BIRMINGHAM.—"Mr. J. Coleman gave some capital songs, not the least pleasing of which was one of his own compositions, 'I think of thee, my love.'"—Birmingham Daily Mail, Dec. 6, 1905.

Engagements booked for 1906 include: Birmingham Festival Choral Society, "The Apostles"; Coventry Mus. Soc., "Elijah"; Stourbridge Concert Soc., Brahms's "Requiem," &c., &c.

COWEN'S "ROSE MAIDEN" (ST. ALBANS).—"Mr. Henry Sunman was the most successful of the soloists. With a fine voice of splendid power and scope, true artistic feeling pervaded all his singing, which made him indeed popular with the audience. His interpretation of the solo 'Where gloomy pine trees rustle' was a fine example of his all-round excellence, and his work with the other singers was marked with ease and skill."

"Mr. Henry Sunman's rendering of two Hungarian songs met with a very flattering reception."—Hertfordshire Standard, Dec. 8, 1905.

"The baritone (Mr. Henry Sunman) was an excellent artist in every respect."—St. Albans Times, Dec. 8, 1905.

Address, Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford.

LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.

It is a far cry to Saxon times and the year A.D. 633, when, according to the Venerable Bede, there was a farming village called Loidis, or Leeds. We learn that it had 'its ten acres of meadow, its church, priest, and mill (of 4s. value),' and that the population (less than 300 souls) were the proud possessors of fourteen ploughs! Those agricultural Loidisians must have had a church wherewith to satisfy their spiritual hunger—perchance a rough-timbered structure, its roof thatched with reeds from the river-bank. Such a primitively constructed edifice would offer little resistance to devastating Danes when they were led to Leeds. Anyhow, Domesday Book, under Loidis, records 'There are a church and a priest,' a proof, if proof be wanting, that the world did not come to an end in A.D. 1000 as, according to common belief, it was expected to do. The Norman church must have been in existence in 1089, when, in the reign of William Rufus, there was founded at York the Benedictine monastery of the Holy Trinity: it is then that the advowson of Leeds is first recorded. Destroyed by fire in the 14th century, the Norman structure gave place to a new church in the Decorated style—which, much altered and added to, remained in situ until the year 1838, when it was pulled down to make way for the present stately edifice. Throughout all these centuries—the 7th to the 20th—the various parish churches of Loidis, or Leeds, have stood on the same spot of holy ground, consecrated by the devotions of countless worshippers.

The present Parish Church of Leeds—dedicated like its forerunners to St. Peter—was consecrated September 2, 1841. Designed by Robert Dennis Chantrell, a local architect, it is a stately edifice of the Transitional style between the Decorated and Perpendicular periods. The old Edwardian church had its tower in the centre of the building: in its successor this imposing feature stands at the centre of the north side, having a large door at its base which forms the principal entrance to the church. This tower, 144 feet high, is very elaborate, its massiveness being relieved at the belfry stage by the rich ornamentation of Perpendicular tracery and projecting canopies. There is no west door. At the east end of the church a new choir vestry was erected in 1901, which harmonises very well with its surroundings and, as the Precentor says, 'in a very few years it will become as black as they.'

On entering the church one cannot help being struck by its general gloom, which even its spaciousness—2,000 people can see and can hear the service—fails to relieve. The nave and choir have north and south aisles running the whole length of the church, and in addition there is an extra side-aisle on the north side of the nave and a side chapel on the north side of the choir. The south transept is completely filled with the elaborate organ-case of open screen work, as shown in our illustration (p. 14), from which it will be observed that not a single pipe is visible. The stalls for clergy and choir are almost on the same level as the pews for the congregation, and placed among the worshippers to the east of the transept: a raised position would be a great advantage in the rendering of the musical service. The spirit of modernity which must inevitably characterize a church built within seventy years is toned down, so to speak, by a few ancient features. For instance, the elaborate and very lofty pulpit contains three good panels of early 18th century work, representing the Annunciation, and the Nativity and Baptism of our Lord. There are also some monuments preserved from the tottering old church of Edwardian times. One of these is the mutilated effigy of a knight clad in armour, an unknown member of the Manston family, the monument being described in 1584 as 'an ould knight lying cross-legged, all in male [mail] with his sword and his targett [shield] on, his armes cut in stone.' Another relic of the past is the monument to Thomas Hardwicke, who died in 1577. Of the numerous frescoes which adorned it there can still be dimly seen the figure of Death shaking a spear at Mr. Thomas Hardwicke, his wife and family. Epitaphians may like to be furnished with specimens of the eulogistic verses which record the virtues of this 16th century citizen:

Here lyeth Hardwicke lately layde
Whose comely corpes are gone,
Here lyeth the man that always hade
The love of every one.

Thus hym to God I do commend
Qui nutu regit omnia,
Trusting that He will us defend Per singula pericula.

My slender help cannot discuss Hardwicke his worthy praise;
So uprightly from time to time
He dealt in all his wayes.

A memorial to Ralph Thoresby (1658-1725), the eminent antiquary of Leeds, justly finds a place within these walls. The results of his painstaking and accurate investigations are contained in the two volumes dealing with the Parish Church and its vicars, entitled 'Ducatus Leodiensis' and 'Vicaria Leodiensis.'

The foregoing monuments—which do not exhaust the list—take a very secondary place in the order of antiquity compared with the Saxon Cross which occupies a prominent position at the east end of the church, but which probably stood at the head of the grave of a person of distinction, and dates from the first half of the 10th century. To quote from Mr. Hodson's interesting booklet on the Parish Church*: 'The stones which compose the shaft were found in the tower and clerestory of the old Parish Church when it was pulled down to make way for the present structure in 1838. It was soon discovered that they formed part of an ancient Cross; but owing to various legal difficulties it was not until Dr. Gott [then vicar of Leeds, now Bishop of Truro] had paid £25 over the counter of a grocer in Rottingdean that the precious relic became the property of the Vicar and Churchwardens of Leeds in 1876.' From the appended illustrations it will be seen that in restoring the Cross it was necessary to insert some new stones, though unfortunately these are not always correct—e.g., the topmost stone (No. 1) which supports the Cross, almost certainly bore on the north and south face of the original two figures, instead of the interlacing patterns now to be seen. Mr. Hodson, following Bishop Browne, of Bristol, says: 'The figures most likely to be found sculptured on such a Cross would be those of our Lord and four Evangelists. The latter are here represented with the heads and bodies of men, while the feet and hands are replaced by the extremities of the figures usually associated with them as symbols.' In regard to these symbols and the remaining figuration on this old-world memorial, the remarks of the Precentor may be quoted in full, the numbers in brackets referring to the accompanying illustrations:

About half-way up the north-side of the shaft there is a figure [No. 2], one-half of which has been restored, and careful examination will show that it is the bust of a man with claws of a leopard or lion in place of hands. This seems to indicate S. Mark. On the south side there are two figures in the upper half of the shaft. The lowest one [No. 3] carries in his right hand a book, and represents S. Matthew. At the top of the stone, carrying the uppermost figure, there are some curious fragments of sculpture, representing apparently the tips of the wings and tail of an eagle. This points to the fact that the missing stone at the top of the shaft, where now the restored stone shows an interlacing pattern, bore a figure of S. John, whose symbol is the eagle. The remaining Evangelist on the south side [No. 4] would therefore be S. Luke; while our Lord Himself would be represented on the north face of the missing stone.

On the north side is another remarkable figure [No. 6]. He grasps a sword in his right hand, while above him stands a bird. The interlacing figure below the hand is, according to Bishop Browne's ingenious conjecture, the knotted coils of a dead serpent. If that is so, we have here the story of Sigurd Fafnesbane. A serpent-dragon called Fafner exacted human victims from the district in which he lived, but was slain by Sigurd as he went on his way to water. Sigurd cut the reptile's heart from the body and roasted it, and happened to suck his fingers after putting them upon the meat to see if it was sufficiently cooked. He thus was the first person to taste the flesh of the dead snake, and thereby was enabled to interpret bird-language and understand its meaning. He heard one bird say to another that Sigurd ought to anticipate his comrade, who was meditating treachery, by slaying him before he had time to act. He readily took the hint, cut off his companion's head, and so became the sole possessor of the hoard of gold which Fafner had guarded.

Has this Saxon Cross any musical connection? Yes, and a Wagnerian one, according to the Precentor, who tells us that 'the story of Sigurd is nothing more than part of the old German fairy tale of Siegfried in a northern dress.' (The photographs of this Saxon Cross are from original drawings made by Mr. P. A. Horrocks in December, 1903, which, with a full description, are exhibited on one of the pillars of the church.)

The Registers of the church, which date back to 1572, contain, as might be expected, some quaint entries. Here are a few specimens:

1632. Nov. 20.—Richard Sawer, of Vicar Lane, had two strange children baptized 'Richards, Quare et Mirare. They were joined together, having but one body below the waist.

1643. Jan. 23.—This was the day when Leeds was taken by Sir Thos. Fairfax; 11 soldiers slain, buried 24th: 10 unpaid for. [Poor sexton!]

1679.—The chimes first begun to goe; Brian Tesseman, churchwarden, promoter.

1685.—John Thompson, dying at Hilhouse, Bancke, was excommunicated, and was brought into Church porche, and ther left in hys wynding shete the fift Augst, and afts buried by some of his frends in the nettles under the churching wall, out of the common place of buryall.

A man may be frequently nettled during his lifetime, but here is an instance of that condition after death. On August 28, 1737, the burial is recorded of Richard Turner, a taylor, Kirkgate. This used to preach extempore in the Church porch.

The various virtues of one William Cookson, whose 'buriel' is recorded in July, 1743, are concluded with the information that he was 'a complete gentleman.' The two following entries speak for themselves:

1745. Decr.—For two nights about 13,000 of the king's foot (with 20 pieces of brass cannon) encamped in the closes on the west side of Shipscar Lane, English, Dutch, and Swiss. Rebellion is a plague. When broke out it has no bounds; fury triumphs, and the devil the postillion, and knows how and when to throw his charioteer into a snare.

1764. Jany. 31.—Buried—Henry and Elizabeth, son and daughter of John Ripley; these being the 5th double burden born to him one after another.

Poor Mr. John Ripley!

We may now turn to the consideration of the music of Leeds Parish Church, not by any means its least interesting or important feature, for was not Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley its 'chief musician'?

The first recorded reference to an organ is an entry in the diary of Thoresby, the antiquary, on October 10, 1713:

After prayers, with Mr. Shelton, &c., about placing of the organ, to prevent its fixing against the Commands, at our end of the church, and succeeded.

Although Thoresby succeeded in preventing the organ being fixed 'against the Commands' and getting it away from his end of the church, the selection of its site in a gallery under the central tower was disastrous, as the instrument was 'often out of tune from the continual motion which the bells gave to it.' This initial organ, built by Henry Price, of Bristol, in 1714, probably owed its erection in a great measure to the generosity of a Mr. George Bannister, who, in 1708, gave the rents of a farm amounting to £6 per annum, clear rent, at Sutton, near Ferry-Bridge, to take place after his death, for a salary to an Organist, when an organ shall be set up in the Parish Church of Leeds.

Here is an interesting instance of an endowment of the office of organist. Byfield added a swell-organ about the year 1764, and it would seem that Snetzler must have supplied the trumpet stop in the great organ. Benjamin Blyth, of London, was paid (in 1806) the sum of four guineas for 'cleaning and rectifying the movement of the organ.' In those days the blowing arrangements of organs were very different from the mechanical appliances of the present time. At Leeds Parish Church, in 1795, 'Widow Metcalf' was paid the sum of £1 16s. 9d. for 'bellows blowing,  $\frac{1}{2}$  year.' Several names of provincial artificers appear in the records as those who repaired the organ at various times. They may be mentioned as a contribution to the history of organ-building in this country—Thomas Gwyn (1743), Mr. Haxby, of York, in 1760 and 1778, concerning whom the following minute is recorded :

1760. February 3rd.—At a Vestry held pursuant to notice given in ye Church to consider ye repair of ye Organ :—

Ordered that ye consideration be adjourned to ys day 3 weeks and that in ye meantime Mr. Alderman Denison be desired to write to Dr. Nares, touching ye character and abilities of Mr. Haxby from whom an estimate of repair has been produced.

J. KERSHAW, Vicar.

Dr. Nares had been organist of York Minster, and doubtless Haxby had tuned the organ in that stately fane. John Donaldson and Robert Boston, both also of York, effected repairs early in the 19th century, and in 1815 Thomas Greenwood, of Leeds renewed the instrument, and Messrs. Greenwood Brothers laid the foundations of the present magnificent organ. It should be added that in 1859 Holt, of Leeds, added a hydraulic blowing apparatus, and made everything ready for the pipes of Schulze, the famous German artist, Messrs. Hill being responsible for the swell organ inserted at the same time. Mr. Abbott remodelled the instrument and made many additions in 1883, and in 1899 his firm (Messrs. Abbott & Smith, of Leeds) again reconstructed the organ and added the fifth manual thereto. The following is the specification of the organ as it now stands, with the names of the various builders against the stops severally supplied by them :

Prior to the year 1714 the church appears to have been organless. The first intimation of an organist occurs in the burial register!

1714. August 29.—This day was ye first Sunday that ye Organ playd.

JOHN CARR, Organist.

Without the name of the organist it might be assumed that 'ye Organ playd' of its own accord. Two important events in the life of Mr. John Carr, who hailed from Norwich, are recorded in the registers; his marriage to 'Mistress Beatrix Buck,' of Leeds, in 1717, and his death in 1756. To John Carr succeeded John Crompton, from Rochdale, whose 'benefit' (in the church) is thus notified:

1770. May 31st.—For the benefit of Mr. Crompton, Organist of the Parish Church of Leeds, will be performed at the Parish Church of Leeds, the 'Messiah,' a sacred Oratorio, by a band of upwards of seventy select performers, and on Friday, the 1st June, the Oratorio of 'Judas Macchabeus.' The choruses will be accompanied with Trumpets, French Horns, Kettledrums, Clarinets, &c.

The whole to be conducted by Mr. Jobson, the Organ by Mr. Crompton. The Hautboys, Clarinets, &c., by Mr. Tatnall, Mr. Perkins, Mr. Turner, Mr. Lincoln, and Mr. Muchman from London. The vocal parts by Miss Radcliffe, Mr. Nield, Mrs. Nield, Mrs. Radcliffe, &c., from Hey Chapel. The rest of the performers from Wakefield, Halifax, Manchester, Sheffield, and other parts adjacent.

The doors to be opened at nine, and the performance to begin at ten o'clock in the forenoon.

Tickets at 3/-, 2/-, and 1/- each, to be had at the Old and New King's Arms, Talbot, Golden Lyon, White Horse in Boar Lane, &c.

There is no need to give the names of all the organists prior to 1842. Reference must however be made to the extraordinary excitement caused at the election to that office in 1821. We quote from a local newspaper :

ELECTION OF ORGANIST.

We have in Leeds this week all the animation of a scot and lot election. The appointment of an organist for the Leeds Parish Church has excited a strong local interest, and the right of election being vested in the parishioner lay-payers, the attendance at the Parish Church on Wednesday, July 4, 1821, at noon, the hour appointed for the purpose, was so numerous that it soon became evident that a wider and more appropriate field of action was necessary for the purpose of the business of the day. At 12 o'clock the Rev. Richard Fawcett, the vicar, took the chair in the vestry, where an adjournment to the area of the White Cloth Hall was immediately proposed and carried. The numbers assembled in the

The year 1841 marks the beginning of the splendid musical traditions of Leeds Parish Church. And in this connection the name of Walter Farquhar Hook—vicar from 1837 to 1859, and afterwards Dean of Chichester—is held in ever-grateful remembrance. The grandson of James Hook, composer of upwards of 2,000 songs, cantatas, &c., Hook, on coming to Leeds, found the church and services in a deplorable condition. With determined zeal and unwearied energy he at once set to work to transform the cold formalism of the church services into a well-spring of spiritual life. Having built the present church—the funds for which he largely collected by his own earnest endeavours—the new vicar instituted a daily full-choral service, the only instance of a service of that nature in any Parish Church. He records ('Life of Dean Hook,' by Dean Stephens, ii., 124): 'I have secured a man named Hill and his nephew. I am to pay them £120 a year. How I shall raise the money I know not; but this I know, a good choir must be formed, if I go to prison for it.'

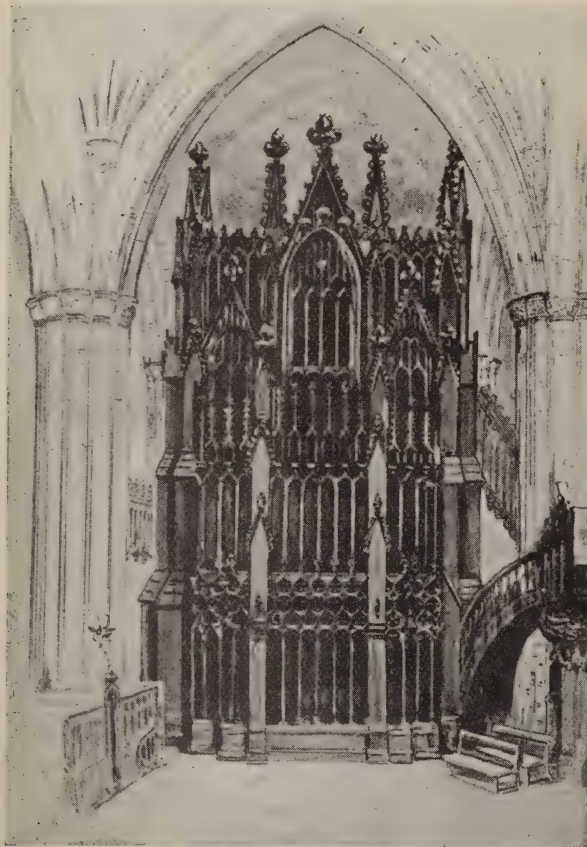

Hook had a splendid right-hand man in the person of Martin Cawood, an enthusiastic musical amateur, who advised him to secure the services of Samuel Sebastian Wesley, then organist of Exeter Cathedral, to open the organ of the newly erected church. This ceremony took place on October 18, 1841. In a preliminary announcement of the organ-opening the Leeds Intelligencer (now the Yorkshire Post) said :

Dr. S. S. Wesley's reputation is so established that it is needless in us to speak of him, save as perhaps the first organist in Europe, and one whose works will live long after perhaps even his name is forgotten.

The notice then went on to give a forecast of the Order of Divine Service: Evening Psalms (double chant) and 'Magnificent' (sic), both by Wesley, the Nunc dimittis to a single chant by Purcell, and an Anthem—the last named (as the subjoined notice will show) proved to be 'The Wilderness.' 'Immediately after Divine Service' a selection from the 'Creation' and the 'Messiah' was to be sung, in addition to five 'Organ Voluntaries' played, of course, by Wesley; and at the end a collection was to be made 'towards defraying the expenses of the organ and choir.' Here is an interesting account of this organ-opening service :

OPENING OF THE ORGAN AT THE LEEDS PARISH CHURCH.

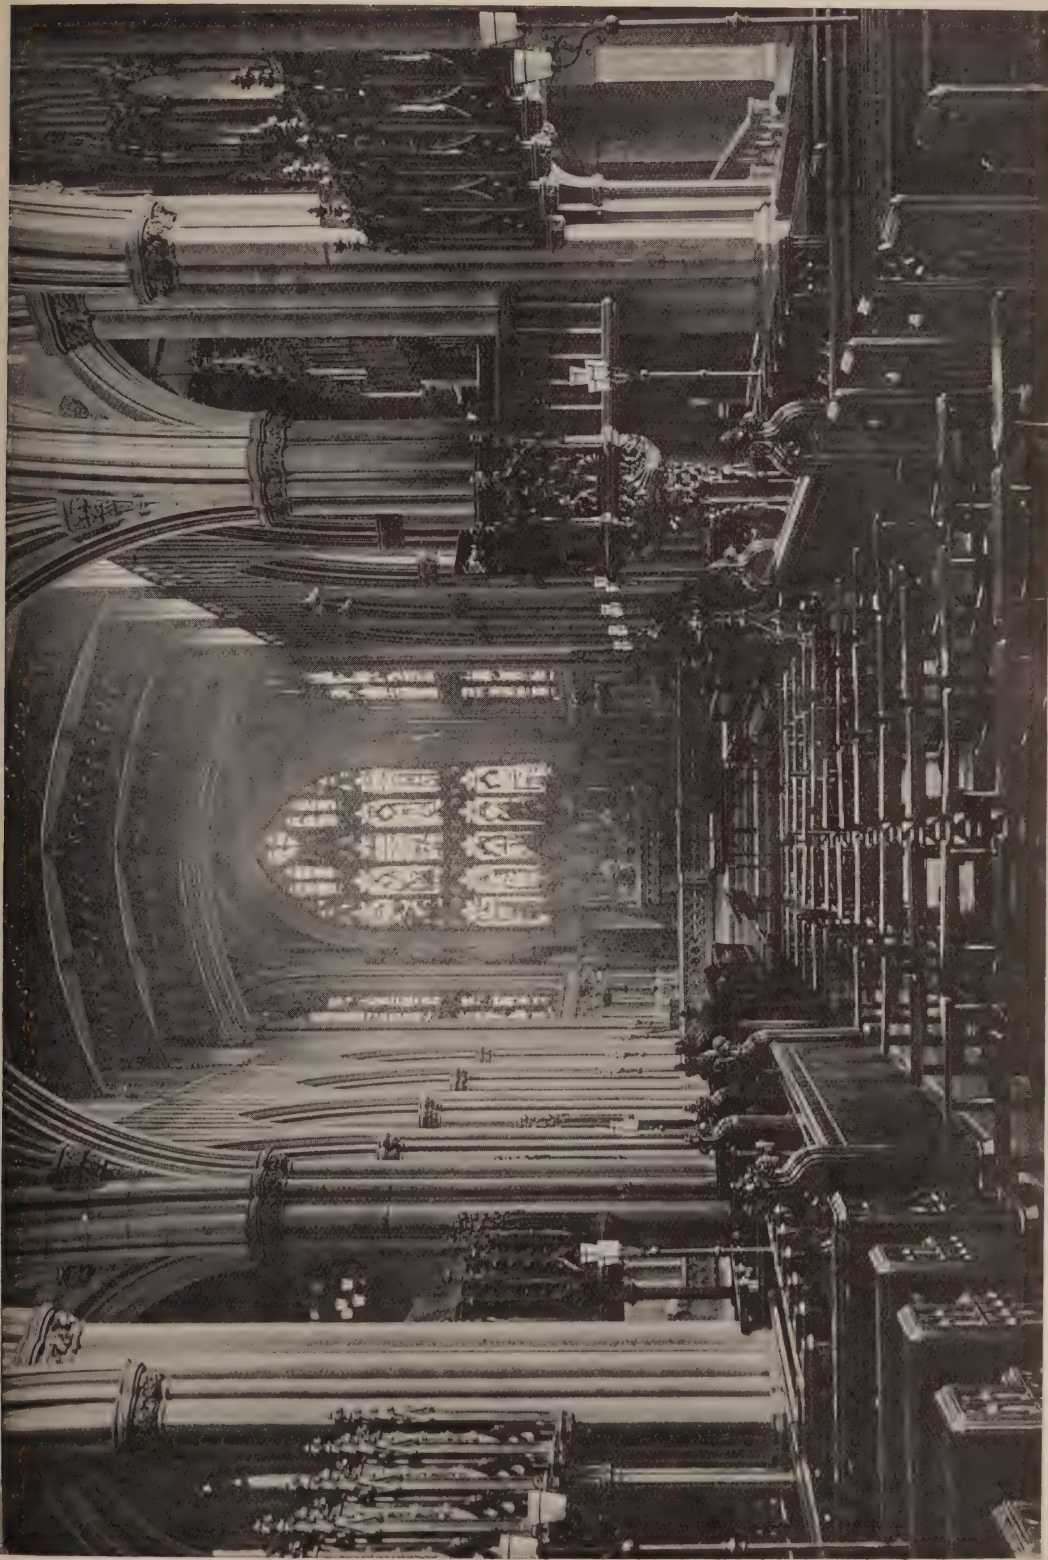

On Monday last this splendid instrument was performed upon by Dr. Wesley, whom our readers of last week would perceive came over from Exeter specially for the purpose. The selection of music we have already announced. The anthem we omitted to notice until we had had an opportunity of hearing it performed by Dr. Wesley, and assisted by the full choir. The words are the 35th chapter of Isaiah. The music is composed by Dr. Wesley, and so beautifully in keeping with the words that we doubt if ever we have heard so choice a specimen of composition. It stamps Dr. Wesley's character as a course of the afternoon could not be short of from six to eight thousand persons. Music and standards accompanied some of the divisions of voters from the neighbouring villages to the poll, and the scene exhibited in this part of the town wore all the features of a contested election, with the exception of the riot and dissipation which so frequently prevail in Parliamentary contests.

There were three candidates for the post (salary £50) and a three days' poll of the 'parishioner lay-payers' of 'the township of Leeds and the villages within the parish' was demanded. Assuming that no one adopted the American plan of 'vote early and often,' no fewer than 4,089 Leeds folk were sufficiently interested to record their votes, whereby John Greenwood was elected.

composer amongst the very highest rank. Of Dr. Wesley's style of performance we may speak with equal confidence; there is a chasteness and delicacy of feeling in his accompaniment of the vocal parts rarely to be met with, whilst in bolder and more prominent performances, his mighty and herculean grasp of all the varied powers of the instrument displays the great vigour and power of his mind. The Voluntaries which he played were really admirable, particularly one of his own composition and J. Sebastian Bach's celebrated Fugue in E flat major. We observed that the instrument was a little out of tune, but we believe this was chiefly caused by the great heat of the church which was crowded to excess. The organ (which is not yet fully finished) will, we think, be one of the best in the country when completed.—Leeds Intelligencer (now Yorkshire Post), Oct. 23, 1841.

(By permission from 'Leeds Parish Church.' By the Rev. M. O. Hodson. Leeds: Richard Jackson.)

Dr. Wesley made such a good impression, as of course he would, at the organ opening that, as matters were not running very smoothly with him at Exeter, he accepted the offer of the vicar and churchwardens to become organist of Leeds Parish Church at a salary of £200 per annum, guaranteed for ten years. Thus began 'the glorious Wesley period,' as it has been happily designated. He entered upon his duties on Sunday, February 6, 1842. An entry in the bell-ringers' book of that date reads:

Dr. Wesley new organist of the church ... £1 0 0
a payment apparently made by the Wardens. In these days of monster organs in churches and a multiplicity of mechanical appliances, it may be interesting to give the specification of the comparatively modest instrument upon which Wesley poured forth his magnificent extemporizations. It will be observed that the Great and Choir organs were of G compass; that the Swell went down to tenor C only; and that the single stop on the Pedal (of two octaves) appears to have been a '32 feet.' There were doubtless the usual couplers.

At that time (1842) the pitch of the organ was 'at the Philharmonic of Sir George Smart's fork,' the builders (Greenwood) having moved all the pipes a semitone upwards and provided new GG pipes for the great and choir organs.

One of the earliest special musical services organized by Wesley was that in celebration of the anniversary of Queen Victoria's Accession, when 'a full cathedral service was solemnized in the great parish church by an augmented choir, under the direction of the celebrated organist Dr. S. Wesley, and the indefatigable choirmaster Mr. Hill,' as the Musical World records. Later in the year (1842) the same journal contains the following paragraph:

Leeds.—Dr. Wesley and a few other benevolent gentlemen have it in contemplation to establish an institution similar to that of the Royal Society of Musicians, with a view of affording assistance to aged and indigent sons of song, who may require.

Whether this kindly proposal ever came within the range of practical politics is not recorded.

There can be no doubt that Wesley was in the plenitude of his powers during the Leeds period of his life—from the age of thirty-two to thirty-nine—covering the years 1842-49. To this period belongs his noble Service in E, with its remarkable preface dated 'Leeds, February, 1845.' Except the Creed, which was composed at Exeter, this service was written at the request of Mr. Martin Cawood, to whom the composer assigned the copyright in exchange for the sum of fifty guineas. There is no doubt that the fine choir at Leeds helped to inspire Wesley in creating those noble strains. As a contrast thereto and as evidence of his versatility, he composed a clever Set of Quadrilles published as: 'Jeux d'esprit. Quadrilles à la Herz. Composed and dedicated to Mrs. Martin Cawood by Samuel Sebastian Wesley.'

* This specification is copied from 'The seven sermons preached at the consecration and re-opening of the Parish Church of Leeds, with an introduction.' Leeds, 1841.

The two sets of Organ Pieces (which include such favourites as the Choral Song and Fugue, the Andante in G, the Air with Variations in F sharp minor, &c.), though written at Exeter, were published while he was at Leeds. There he compiled and issued his Psalter and wrote and published his remarkable pamphlet—a manifesto, in fact—entitled ‘A few words on Cathedral Music and the Musical System of the Church, with a plan of reform.’ By Samuel Sebastian Wesley’ (1849). The words, if few, were strong and the ‘plan of reform’ lacked nothing on the score of drastic changes that have still to come to pass. For further details of Wesley’s career at Leeds the reader is referred to the biographical sketch of him which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, June, and July, 1900.

A pleasant incident marked the departure of Dr. Wesley from Leeds to become organist of Winchester Cathedral—the presentation to him of his portrait painted by Mr. W. R. Briggs, a local artist, and bearing the following inscription :

Presented to
SAMUEL SEBASTIAN WESLEY, Mus. Doc., Oxon., by a few gentlemen connected with the Leeds Parish Church Choir as a mark of their friendship and high appreciation of his musical genius. 1849.

A reproduction of this portrait, by the kind permission of the Rev. F. G. Wesley, M.A., forms the special portrait supplement to the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES.

The Leeds Intelligencer (now the Yorkshire Post) of December 1, 1849, contains the following appreciative remarks on the presentation and the recipient thereof :

The selection of this description of testimonial to one who has so greatly improved the taste for Church music in this town, does honour to the gentlemen from whom it has emanated, as we consider it the highest compliment which could be paid to the Doctor and his family by his friends and admirers. We exceedingly regret his departure from Leeds; his loss will be much felt by those who have been accustomed week after week to hear his grand and sublime accompaniments to the Psalms, Services, and Anthems. His wonderful extemporaneous music never degenerated into a mere brilliant, showy exhibitional style too often adopted by organists of the present day; but always was calculated to produce and maintain devotional thoughts and feelings in the church.

Dr. Wesley was succeeded in the organistship by the following gentlemen :

1849 to 1880.—Mr. Robert Senior Burton.

1880 to 1891.—Dr. William Creser (afterwards organist and composer of the Chapel Royal).

1891 to 1905.—Mr. Alfred Benton.

The present organist and choirmaster is Dr. Edward Cuthbert Bairstow, who is just entering upon his important duties. He was born on August 22, 1874, at Huddersfield, the birthplace of Sir Walter Parratt and Dr. A. L. Peace. As a boy he studied the pianoforte and harmony under the late John Farmer, to whom ‘I have always been thankful’ (to use his own words) ‘for giving me a thorough grounding in piano technique and keeping me from wasting my time on the organ in those early days.’

‘In 1893,’ continues Dr. Bairstow, ‘I went to Sir Frederick Bridge and remained with him until 1899, first as a pupil and afterwards as a sort of “devil.” I gained much valuable experience from him and from the work which he was kind enough to allow me to do for him.’ From 1894 to 1899 he was organist of All Saints’ Church, Norfolk Square, of which the vicar (the Rev. W. Boyd) is the composer of the tune to the hymn ‘Fight the good fight’ in ‘Hymns Ancient and Modern.’

Six years ago Dr. Bairstow became organist of Wigan Parish Church, a post formerly held by Sir Walter Parratt, the late Mr. Langdon Colborne (subsequently organist of Hereford Cathedral), and

Mr. C. H. Moody (organist of Ripon Cathedral). He conducted the Southport Philharmonic Society for three seasons, which appointment he resigned in 1903 in order to conduct the Blackburn St. Cecilia and Vocal Union, of which he is now conductor, in addition to that of the Wigan Philharmonic Society. He took the degree of Mus. B. in 1894 and Mus. D. in 1900, both at Durham, and obtained the Fellowship of the Royal College of Organists in 1898. His compositions include an album of songs, organ pieces, anthems, and other church music, part-songs, &c. His carol-anthem ‘Come, ye gentles, hear the story’ appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of November, 1902. Dr. Bairstow, who has many well-wishers for full success in his new sphere of work, may be relied upon to maintain all the good traditions associated with the name of Dr. Samuel Sebastian Wesley.

No account of Leeds Parish Church would be complete without reference to its choir and especially to Mr. Henry Cawood Embleton. Not only has Mr. Embleton rendered splendid service to the choir of the church for thirty years, and occasionally officiated as deputy organist, but he has done much to further the musical interests of the city artistically and financially, especially in connection with the Leeds Choral Union. One of the treasures of the choir library is a copy of the first edition of Wesley's 'Wilderness' (1840). The cost of the church services averages from £650 to £700 per annum, according to figures kindly supplied by Mr. W. Whitehead, the Honorary Treasurer. The average membership of the choir is twenty-six men and twenty-eight boys. For the performance of Bach's 'Passion' Music, given annually in Lent, the choir is increased to 150 voices principally from the ranks of the Leeds Choral Union. That the choir has good traditions to maintain, an extract from the 'Life' of Dean Hook may be quoted:

Dr. Wesley says that our service is most sublime: beyond anything he ever heard in any cathedral.

So may it continue!

For kind and valued help in the preparation of this article the writer's best thanks are due to Mr. Henry C. Embleton; Mr. W. Whitehead, the Hon. Treasurer of the choir; and especially to the Precentor, the Rev. Morris O. Hodson, B.A., who has freely offered many facilities for gathering together the historical information; also to the Rev. F. G. Wesley, M.A., for the photograph of the portrait of his father, which we believe is reproduced for the first time.

THE REQUIEM OF BRAHMS.

SOME NOTES ON ITS EARLY PERFORMANCES.

Brahms was thirty-three years old when he composed his choral masterpiece—'Ein deutsches Requiem.' The death of his mother—on February 2, 1865—and the affection which he felt for her undoubtedly inspired him to compose this most beautiful In memoriam. Unlike the Requiem service of the Roman Catholic Church, the words, selected and arranged in perfect sequence by Brahms himself, are taken from the Bible and the Apocrypha. It may be useful, before proceeding further, to give these scriptural references:

- No. 1. Matthew v. 4; Psalm cxxvi., 5, 6.
- No. 2. 1 Peter i. 24; James v. 7; 1 Peter i. 25; Isaiah xxxv. 10.
- No. 3. Psalm xxxix. 4-7; Wisdom iii. 1.
- No. 4. Psalm lxxxiv. 1, 2, 4.
- No. 5. John xvi. 22; Isaiah lxvi. 13; Ecclesiasticus li. 27.
- No. 6. Hebrews xiii. 14; 1 Corinthians xv. 51, 52, 54; Revelation iv. 11.
- No. 7. Revelation xiv. 13.

The autograph score—now in the possession of the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde at Vienna—is inscribed 'Baden-Baden im Sommer, 1866.' Miss Florence May, in her recently-published 'Life of Brahms,' gives an interesting extract from the private diary of Madame Schumann, written early in September, 1866, relative to the work in its initial stages:

'Johannes has been playing me some magnificent movements out of a Requiem of his own and a string quartet in C minor. The Requiem delighted me even more, however. It is full of tender and again daring thoughts. I cannot feel clear as to how it will sound, but in myself it sounds glorious.'

Here it should be noted that the wonderful march movement in B flat minor, 'Behold, all flesh is as the grass,' originally formed part of a symphony which Brahms, as a young man of twenty-one, had composed twelve years earlier (in 1854). At the time of writing the Requiem he had so to struggle against poverty that, as Miss May records, he was fond in later life of saying, as he pointed to the manuscript, 'The paper is of all sizes and shapes, because at the time I wrote the work I never had money enough to buy a stock.'

More than a year elapsed before even a portion of the Requiem was heard in public. On Sunday, December 1, 1867, the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde at Vienna gave a concert to the memory of Schubert. What could be more appropriate than that the first part of such a commemorative music-making should consist of the first three numbers of the Requiem of Brahms? Herbeck conducted this concert, Dr. Pänzer, of the Imperial Chapel, sang the baritone solo, and the choruses were rendered by the Singverein. The performance does not seem to have been above reproach. For instance, at that marvellous pedal-point on D, the drummer simply drowned the chorus by rolling out his part fortissimo! Thus this tonic D, in its dominating assertiveness, proved to be too strong a dose for some of the venerable Viennese in that audience, so much so in fact, that manifest expressions of disappointment greeted the composer when he appeared on the platform in response to some, at least, friendly calls. However, Hanslick, most severe of critics, warmly greeted the work, or rather that portion of it which had been presented. He judged it to be (we quote from Miss May's book) 'One of the ripest fruits in the domain of sacred music, developed out of the style of Beethoven's late works. . . . The harmonic and contrapuntal art learned by Brahms in the school of Bach, and inspired by him with the living breath of the present, is almost forgotten in the expression of touching lament, increasing to the annihilating death-shudder.' Hanslick goes on to rebuke the 'half a dozen gray-haired fanatics of the old school' who had hissed Brahms, by stigmatizing this ebullition of bad feeling as 'a requiem on the decorum and good manners of a Vienna concert-room which astonishes and grieves us.'

Brahms was by no means dismayed at the mixed reception accorded to his work. In sending the manuscript to Marxsen, his old master, he wrote:

'I send you some novelties and beg you, if time allows, to write me one or many words about them. I enclose also something from my Requiem and on this I earnestly beg you to write to me. It looks rather curious in places and perhaps, in order to spare my manuscript, you would take some music paper and put down useful remarks. I should like that very much. The eternal "D" in No. 3. If I do not use the organ it [the note] does not sound. There is much I should like to ask. I hope you have time and some inclination; then you will perceive at once what there is to ask and what to say.'*

The first performance of the complete work (except the afterthought No. 5, to be referred to later) took place on the evening of Good Friday, 1868 (April 10), in the Cathedral Church of St. Peter, Bremen. The occasion was of a benevolent nature—a sacred concert given in aid of the Bremen musicians' provident fund. The Requiem was divided into two parts, and separated by a miscellaneous selection. The latter included violin solos by Bach and Tartini, also Schumann's 'Abendlied,' all played by Joachim; 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' and the contralto air (violin obbligato, Joachim) from Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion, both sung by Frau Joachim; and Handel's 'Hallelujah Chorus.' The baritone solo in the Requiem was in the safe keeping of Julius Stockhausen, while Brahms conducted his own work, and Reinthaler the rest of the music on that eventful occasion. Brahms was the guest of Reinthaler during his stay at Bremen, and the two musicians soon became intimate. A great surprise was in store for the composer on that Good Friday evening. At the door of the cathedral he was unexpectedly greeted by two ladies, the elder of whom he escorted on his arm up the nave of the church—they were Frau Clara Schumann and her daughter Marie. One English musician, at least, was present at this initial performance, in the person of the late John Farmer. At a largely-attended supper after the concert Mr. Farmer made an unfortunate impromptu speech, belittling the musical interests of his own country, and adding, that if Brahms (who was present) came to England to perform his Requiem, Englishmen would say, 'Is this fellow crazy?' This exhibition of bad taste drew from one of the company, Herr Lehmann, the following spontaneous remarks by way of rebuke:

I would venture, nevertheless, to say a word in England's honour. So many artists have met with an encouraging reception or have found a happy home there; there are so many Englishmen who understand and sympathize with German art and German life, that I would beg leave to propose a glass to the honour of art-loving England.

Who knows but what Farmer's ill-judged and unsolicited observations—imperfectly expressed in German—upon so auspicious an occasion, may have prejudiced Brahms against the English people and have helped to deter him from visiting this country? English musicians cannot be too cautious in their public utterances.

After attending the Lower Rhine Musical Festival, held at Cologne at Whitsuntide, 1868, Brahms settled for a time at Bonn, that he might be near his friend Dr. Deiters, in order to consult him about the final touches to the Requiem preparatory to its publication. When playing to Dr. Deiters the fifth and newly-composed number of the work, 'Ye now that are sorrowful,' Brahms said that in setting the words he had thought of his mother, 'As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you.' Those, like the present writer, who have listened to the ideal rendering of this number at St. Paul's Cathedral, will realize the tenderness of the thought in the mind of the composer. And how supremely beautiful and perfectly in keeping is the augmentation (in the tenor) of the main theme:

Ye shall a-gain be-hold me, and your heart shall be joy-ful, &c.

The first performance of the complete work took place at the Gewandhaus Concert, Leipzig, on February 18, 1869, under the direction of Carl Reinecke.

Now let us turn to England. In regard to its introduction into this country, Brahms's Requiem shared the fate of Beethoven's Mass in D, in that it was first performed in a private house—the latter stupendous creation on Christmas Eve, 1832, as set forth in THE MUSICAL TIMES of April, 1902, p. 236. It was a happy thought on the part of the late Lady Thompson (née Miss Kate Loder), wife of the eminent surgeon, Sir Henry Thompson, Bart., to arrange a performance of the Requiem of Brahms in her drawing-room at 35, Wimpole Street, Marylebone. This took place on July 10, 1871, under the direction of Julius Stockhausen, who trained the chorus and also sang the baritone solo. The chorus who assisted on that interesting occasion included such well-known names as Lady Macfarren, Miss Macirone, Mrs. Ellicott (wife of the late Bishop of Gloucester), Miss Sophie Ferrari (Mrs. Pagden) and her sister, Miss F. J. Ferrari, Canon Duckworth, and Mr. William Shakespeare. Madame Regan-Schimon sang the soprano solo, and an English version of the text was used.

As the available space in the room did not allow of an orchestra, the accompaniments, in the four-hand arrangement of the composer, were adapted and played on the pianoforte by the hostess, Lady Thompson—herself an excellent pianist and thorough musician—and old Cipriani Potter, then in his eightieth year. Sir George Macfarren, one of the audience, in recording the performance* says: 'The audience were all aglow with interest in the work and its rendering; but, conspicuous in the whole assembly, was the small figure of that aged musician [Potter], the dearly beloved of everybody, who was as youthful in spirit, as ardent and as active as the youngest, yes, and as the wildest, person in the room. It was impossible then to think of him as one standing on the brink of eternity,† and yet many of us who were then present treasure the memory of that day as of the last on which we were in Potter's presence, a memory wherein music and the musician are inseparable.' It is specially interesting to recall the fact that Potter, who took so prominent a part in the first performance of the Requiem of Brahms, knew Beethoven at Vienna. He used to tell that Beethoven invited him on one occasion to dinner. They were sitting at the table when a certain dish was served which Beethoven had not ordered, whereupon he seized the unordered dish and threw it at the servant's head. The result of this display of Beethoven's spleen was a meal of bread and cheese, but Potter enjoyed the company. Who would not? To return to the Requiem at Lady Thompson's house. Lady Macfarren, in recalling the event after an interval of thirty-three years, specially for this article, writes: 'The weight of the performance rested on the two players at the pianoforte, Mr. Potter playing the bass, and Lady Thompson the upper part. The refined charm of Lady Thompson's playing of the violin passages that so often hover like angels' wings over the voices, I can hear still at this distance of more than thirty years, and Mr. Potter's sensitive musicianly reading no less.' As Sir George Macfarren has said Potter's 'enthusiasm extended itself to everyone concerned in the performance: and the occasion was memorable as introducing a composition of rarest merit to a first hearing among us.'

The next performance in England of the work—or a portion thereof—was, so far as is known, that given by the students of the Royal Academy of Music, at a 'Public Rehearsal,' conducted by John Hullah, on the afternoon of April 1, 1873, at the Hanover Square Rooms. The programme of this music-making—printed in the Musical World of April 5, 1873—opened thus:

A selection from Requiem in F (Op. 45):

Chorus, 'Blessed are they that go mourning'

Chorus, 'Behold, all flesh is as grass'

Solo and Chorus, 'Ye now are sorrowful'

(Solo, Miss Jessie Jones)

Solo and Chorus, 'Here on earth'

(Solo, Mr. Pope)

[Then follows the remainder of the programme]

Conductor: MR. JOHN HULLAH

Mr. Walter Fitton, who accompanied (pianoforte) at all the choral rehearsals and played the organ at the performance, is strongly of opinion that the entire work was performed, and Sir Charles Stanford, who was present on the occasion, says 'I am almost sure that it was all done, but not quite sure.' Dr. McNaught, then a second violinist in the Academy orchestra, is unable to say definitely whether the whole or a part of the work was performed.

On the evening following the Royal Academy of Music 'Public Rehearsal,' Brahms's Requiem was performed at St. James's Hall by the Philharmonic Society, under the conductorship of Mr. (afterwards Sir) W. G. Cusins. The soloists were Miss Sophie Ferrari and Mr. Santley. The performance was a melancholy failure, and when one remembers the achievements of hired chorus-singers in London thirty years ago, it is not to be wondered at. One who was present, and who is fully competent to judge, says: 'I never remember a more depressing occasion. A complete absence of conviction made itself felt in the whole mass of the performers, especially the singers, and the inherent difficulty of singing the phrases according to the metronomic directions, deepened the gloom.' It is recorded that as the audience left the hall on that evening one of England's most illustrious musicians went up to Prof. Macfarren and said: 'Well, Macfarren, if this is music, then I am no musician.'

The Philharmonic performance does not appear to have attracted the attention of the critics of the great daily newspapers—even The Times is silent in regard to this masterpiece of Brahms, and the † Cipriani Potter died September 26, 1871, two months after the Requiem performance, aged eighty.

Musical World is equally dumb. THE MUSICAL TIMES—which even in these days of multitudinous music-makings at least tries to record events of importance—thus refers to the occasion :

At the second concert, on the 2nd ult., Brahms's 'Requiem' and Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' were the principal attractions. Were we inclined to hazard an opinion upon the 'Requiem' from a single hearing, we certainly should not do so when performed as a concert-piece, surrounded by compositions in such violent contrast ; and we must content ourselves therefore with saying that the unemotional character of the subjects, notwithstanding the brilliancy of the instrumentation, produced a feeling of weariness in the audience, which, although we cannot accept as any tacit criticism of the work, sufficiently evidenced that the Philharmonic concert-room is not the place for a funeral service.

One redeeming feature—apparently the only one—was the eloquent and deeply appreciative analysis which the late Sir George Macfarren wrote for the Philharmonic programme-book. Two extracts may be quoted as showing the poetic grace of Macfarren's language :

Like all works of highest excellence, like all men of noblest virtue, the German Requiem reveals not its fulness of beauty to a first glance ; the listener is happy when he perceives enough in its subtle refinement to attract him to another and another hearing, and this experience will show him the gradual unfolding of its beauties, like the leaves of a flower until it stands disclosed, its very heart laid bare, the queen rose of the garden.

Macfarren's peroration is no less eloquent. He says :

It is impossible in the space of these comments even to hint at all the extraordinary merit, technical and æsthetical, of the composition under notice ; let, at least, the admiration, the reverence, they aim to express indicate to the reader that the work abounds in matter for high esteem, and invite him to do himself the justice of leaving his attention open to the perception of its beauties. The name of Brahms is growing into familiarity through performance of his Serenade, his Sextets, his Quartets, Pianoforte concerto and other of his productions ; and when his most extensive work, the German Requiem, becomes known, the lovers of music in England will feel, indeed, that their art has a living representative, that the greatest masters have a successor, and that the line of Purcell, Handel, Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Beethoven, and those great men who have yet shone since and through the blazing of his transcendent light, is not extinct.

Could appreciation be expressed in more beautiful or more generous words ?

THE MIDDLE TEMPLE MASQUE.

On the night of February 15, 1613, being Shrove Monday, there was performed at Whitehall 'a shoue at all parts so novell, conceitfull and glorious as hath not in this land been ever before beheld.' The occasion was the marriage of the Princess Elizabeth, daughter of James the First, to the Elector Palatine Frederick, afterwards King of Bohemia ; and the entertainment was a masque presented by 'the Two Honorable Houses or Inns of Court, the Middle Temple and Lyncoln's Inne.' A full description of this masque, with the text of the dialogue and songs, was printed at the time, and is reprinted in the second volume of Nichols' 'Progresses of King James the First.' It was 'invented and fashioned' by Inigo Jones, and 'supplied, applied, digested and written' by George Chapman. The music was evidently of an elaborate nature, both vocal and instrumental, but we are not told by whom it was composed. The singers and players had to take their part in the performance in character, as will appear from the following extract :

Fiftie Gentlemen, richly attired and as gallantly mounted, made the noble vant-guarde of these Nuptiall forces. Next (a fit distance observed betweene them) marcht a mocke-maske of baboons, attired like fantasticall travellers [i.e., travellers] in Neapolitane sutes and great ruffes, all horst with asses and dwarf palfries, with yellow foot-cloathes, and casting cockle-demois [? cockle shells] about, in courtesie, by way of lardges. After them were sorted two carss triumphall, through-varied with different invention, and in them advanc'd the choice Musitions of our Kingdome, sixe in each, attir'd like Virginean priests, by whom the sun is there ador'd, and therefore called the Phœbades. Their robes were tuckt up before, strange hoodes of feathers and scallops about their neckes, and on their heads turbants, stuck with severall-coloured feathers, spotted with wings of flies of extraordinary bignesse like those of their cuntry.

One's curiosity is naturally aroused as to who these 'choice Musitions of our Kingdome' may have been, but their names are never mentioned. Evidently six of them were vocalists and six instrumentalists, for the opening song is directed to be sung by the six Phœbades or Priests of the Sunne to the accompaniment of six lutes ; and as we find at intervals directions for 'other musique and voices,' the performers must have been more than twelve in number. The Middle Temple Records are of no assistance : the only entry relating to the masque is under date June 18, 1613, when it was resolved to repay two loans of £50 and £215 'borrowed for the charges of the late masque.' But the Records of Lincoln's Inn throw an altogether unexpected light on the day's doings. Under date June 22, 1613, there is entered at length 'The Charge of Mr. Christofer Brooke, Expenditor for the Maske.' It shows that the money disbursed by Lincoln's Inn alone amounted to £1,086 8s. 11d., a very large sum in those days. The Middle Temple contributed only £450, if Sir William Dugdale is correct in saying that the total expenditure was £1,536 8s. 11d. The payments include £50 'for stuff and lace,' £182 13s. 'for divers parcells of clothe of silver,' £100 'to Mr. Ingoe Johnes, towards the work for the Hall and streete,' £190 'for feathers and trimminge of suites and head attires,' £1 15s. 'for 14 payre of shoos for the Baboones,' and many other curious items. Those relating to music and musicians are of such interest that I take the liberty of transcribing them in full:

Here are 'choice Musitions' indeed! Robert Johnson—who one may suppose from the size of his fee had the general direction of the music—wrote the original settings of Shakespeare's 'Tempest' songs, 'Full fathom five' and 'Where the bee sucks,' and in 1621 composed the music for Ben Jonson's 'Masque of the Gypsies.' Thomas Ford was the composer of 'Since first I saw your face,' which was published in his 'Musicke of Sundrie Kindes' in 1607. John Dowland and his son Robert, Philip Rosseter and Walter Porter, these are all notable names of the period, for which reference need only be made to Grove's Dictionary. The other names are less familiar, but some details are known about most of them.

Thomas Cutting was a lutenist of the first rank, as one may infer from his being one of the four—Cutting, John Dowland, Rosseter, and Ford—who are paid at the higher rate of £2 10s., the other four lute-players receiving only £2 apiece. In March, 1603, he was in the service of Lady Arabella Stuart, and in that month both Queen Anne, consort of James the First, and her son Prince Henry, wrote begging her to allow him to enter the service of King Christian IV. of Denmark (brother of Queen Anne), who had recently lost the services of John Dowland. Lady Arabella gave her consent, 'although,' she writes, 'I may have some cause to be sorry to have lost the contentment of a good lute.' But Cutting did not stay long in Denmark, for in June, 1611, his name appears in a list of Prince Henry's musicians, a list which also includes Robert Johnson, Thomas Ford, John Mynors, Thomas Day, John Sturte, and Matthias Johnson. He may perhaps have been related to the Francis Cutting who was a contributor to Barley's 'New Booke of Tabliture' in 1596.

Mathias Johnson and John Sturte were musicians in the service of Prince Henry, who died in 1612. Robert Taylor, or Tailour, published in 1615 Sacred Hymns. Consisting of Fifti Select Psalms of David and others, paraphrastically turned into English Verse, and set to be sung in five parts, as also to the Viole, and Lute or Orph-arion.

On the accession of Charles I. his name appears in a grant of July 11, 1626 (Rymer's Foedera xviii. 728) as one of the King's musicians in receipt of a salary of £40.

Mr. Jonas, I suspect, should be Jones. A Mr. Jones was one of Prince Henry's musicians. Robert Jones, possibly the same person, was one of the contributors to the 'Triumphs of Oriana' in 1601. He published several collections of Ayres and Madrigals, and was associated with Philip Rosseter and others in 1616 in an abortive scheme for the establishment of a theatre for the use of 'The Children of the Revels to the Queen' (see Grove's Dictionary). Possibly, however, Mr. Jonas may be the 'Luke Jones of Poules,' who was admitted a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal on September 30, 1606. He took Holy Orders, and became 'pisteler' and 'gospeller' in the Chapel Royal and Sub-dean of St. Paul's. He died on July 18, 1627. John Mynars, or Miners, was one of Prince Henry's musicians in June, 1611. He was afterwards in the choir of Exeter Cathedral, but resigned his post there on June 4, 1615, when he was admitted a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal. He was to have taken Holy Orders, 'thereby to doe his Majestie the office and dutie of a Deacon in his Royal Chappell,' but died within a month of his admission, on July 2, 1615.

Thomas Day was also one of Prince Henry's musicians in 1611. On September 30, 1615, he was appointed a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal in succession to John Mynars. On the accession of Charles I. he appears as one of the King's musicians at a salary of £40. From 1625 to 1632 he is said to have been Organist and Master of the Choristers at Westminster Abbey. Before 1636 he had become Master of the Children in the Chapel Royal, and in that year he was appointed 'Clerk of the Check' in the same establishment. He died in 1654 and was buried on April 10 in the Cloisters at Westminster. His will shows that he came of a Hampshire family and was a kinsman of Sir Anthony Ashley Cooper, Bart., whom he named one of his executors. John Drue, or Drewe, was one of the King's musicians in receipt of a salary of £40 at the accession of Charles I. John Frost, of Westminster, was elected a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal on November 5, 1611. He took Holy Orders, and in 1623 had become 'Chaunter' at Westminster Abbey, a post which he held till his death. He was buried on May 10, 1642 'in the North Aisle, near Solomon's Porch.' His wife and daughter were

DIPLOMATIST AND SOLDIER IN THE REIGN OF QUEEN ELIZABETH.

In the above reproduction 'the maskers march in order round the table, where the musicians are seated; going up the flight of steps to the left come up into the chamber, where the company are sitting at dinner [not shown in the reproduction]. The chief masker is Diana, who is preceded by Mercury; before him stand two Cupids, the one black, the other white, and a messenger is bearing a paper (which might perhaps contain the intention of the mask) which he presents to one of the chief personages at the feast. Diana is followed alternately by two of her nymphs, and two Cupids, each of them bearing a torch, the one in white, and the other disguised as a black: each of the nymphs, who walk two and two, bear in one hand a bow, and in the other a wreath or garland—which garlands were most likely to be distributed amongst the surrounding guests.' (From Joseph Strutt's 'Horda Angel-cynnan,' 1776, vol. iii., p. 143.)

also buried in the Abbey. From his will it appears that he was a native of Colebrooke, Devon, and that he was brought up at Exeter Cathedral. There is some confusion, which has not been altogether cleared up, between the Westminster man and another John Frost, 'a base from Salisbury,' who was sworn in as a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal on April 14, 1623.

The music of this Masque has not hitherto been traced. There is manuscript music of Thomas Ford at Christ Church and of Robert Johnson in the Music School at Oxford, but, so far as I remember, nothing that can be connected with this occasion. The following are the first lines of the four songs that are printed:

1. Ope, Earth, thy womb of gold.
2. Descend, fair Sun, and sweetly rest.
3. Bright Panthea, born to Pan.
4. Now, Sleep, bind fast the flood of air.

In conclusion I may perhaps be allowed to quote a contemporary private letter in which this masque is described. It is written by John Chamberlain to Alice Carleton under date February 18, 1613, and is preserved at the Record Office among the Domestic State Papers of the reign of James I.:

On Monday night was the Middle Temple and Lincoln's ynne mask presented in the hall at court, wheras the Lords' (presented on the previous evening after the wedding) was in the bancketting roome. Yt went from the Rolles vp fleetstreet and the Strand, and made such a gallant and glorious shew that yt is highly commended. They had forty gentlemen of best choise out of both houses rode before them in theyre best array, vpon the K's horses: and twelve maskers with theyre torch-bearers and pages rode likewise vpon horses exceedingly well trapped and furnished: besides a dousen litle boyes drest like babones that serued for an anti-maske, (and they say performed yt exceedingly well when they came to yt), and three open chariots drawne with fowre horses apeece, that caried theyre musicians, and other personages that had parts to speake: all which together with theyre trumpetters and other attendants were so well set out, that yt is generally held for the best shew that hath ben seen many a day. The King stode in the gallerie to behold them and made them ride about the tilt-yard, and then were receued into St James parke and went all along the galleries into the hall, where themselves and theyre deuises (which they say were excellent) made such a glittering shew that the King and all the companie were exceedingly pleased and specially with theyre dauncing, which was beyond all that hath ben yet. The King made the maskers kisse his hand at parting, and gaue them many thanckes, sayeng he neuer saw so many proper men together, and himself accompanied them at the banquet, and tooke care yt should be well ordered, and speakes much of them behind theyre backs, and strokes the master of the rolles and Dick martin, who were the cheife doers and undertakers.

Then, after describing how the masquers from Gray's Inn and the Inner Temple, headed by Sir Francis Bacon, came up to Whitehall by water on the following night, but had to return without presenting their masque, because 'the King was so wearied and sleepe with sitting vp almost two whole nights before, that he had no edge to yt,' the letter concludes with a piece of news which doubtless interested Mistress Carleton, and may be not without interest to the ladies of to-day, who are said to be threatened with a revival of the 'verdingale' or farthingale of our ancestors:

One thing I had almost forgotten for hast that all this time there was a course taken and so notified that no Lady or gentlewoman should be admitted to any of these sights with a verdingale, which was to gaine the more roome, and I hope may serue to make them quite left of [i.e. off] in time. And yet there were more scaffolds and more prouision made for roome than euer I saw both in the hall and banketting roome, besides a new roome built to dine, sup, and daunce in.

One of the shortest, certainly not the least amusing, biography of Berlioz is to be found in the 'New Opera Glass,' a book made and printed in Germany. We give it verbatim et literatim:

B. Dec. 11th 1800 at Côte St. André (France), was studying at first medicine, afterwards music without permission of his father, of whome he did not received any support. A short time afterward he left the school of music and was working on his own style. His first musical work did not received any succes and he entered the second time at the School of music and was gaining the roman price for one of his "Cantates". Returned from Italy he lived as a composer, but his compositions were received with a greater applause in the strange as in his own country. He is one of the most important composer of intrumental music. His other opera "Benvenuto Cellini" (1838), "Beatrice and Benedikt" (1862) and the "The Troyens" (1863) are also gained a good succes. He died as librarian on the conservatory at Paris the 9th Mars 1869.

The preface to this 'New Opera Glass' (4th edn.) reads:

This new edition, revised and augmented from the author through nearly thirty new operas, may find the same kindly reception which has been proved to the fare-gone editions.

This is the only wish from

Occasional Notes.

When the Master was in Ts'e he heard the Shaon, and for three months did not know the taste of flesh. 'I did not think,' he said, 'that music could have been so excellent as this.'

The Master said, 'If a man be without the virtues proper to humanity, what has he to do with the rites of propriety? If a man be without the virtues proper to humanity, what has he to do with music?'

CONFUCIUS. B.C. 550-480.

Many readers of THE MUSICAL TIMES who have heard of John Playford's 'A Breefe Introduction to the Skill of Musick,' and may, perhaps, possess or have seen copies of the later editions of that once popular treatise, may never have 'set eyes' upon the extremely rare first edition. We have therefore much pleasure in giving an exact reproduction of the engraved title-page of the earliest issue, published in 1654. This will supplement the interesting preface to the little tome which we gave in our issue of October, 1905, p. 656.

The 'Occasional Note' in our last issue (p. 791) anent Handel's house in Brook Street evidently caught the sharp eye of Mr. Algernon Ashton, and so fired him with indignation that he returned to one of his old loves—writing letters to the newspapers—by sending the following communication to the Daily News:

VANDALISM AT HANDEL'S HOUSE.

SIR,—In November, 1900, I complained that the memorial tablet which adorned Handel's house in Brook Street, Mayfair, had become so dirty, and the inscription so undecipherable, that it was about time that this tablet be thoroughly cleansed and renovated. Well, what has just happened to Handel's dwelling-house, this precious and unique relic of the past, and one which Londoners, I should have thought, would guard and keep sacred for centuries yet to come?

The whole lower part of the house has been turned into a common shop by a so-called 'decorative artist,' the original doorway completely demolished, and even the renovated tablet taken away, with the result that the beautiful old house, which was splendidly preserved, has been spoilt beyond recognition. After this incredible occurrence, one may now expect anything in the way of disgraceful and wanton vandalism.—Yours, &c.,

ALGERNON ASHTON.

The 'Handel vandal,' pace Mr. Ashton, replied to the charge of wantonness in these words:

SIR,—With reference to Mr. Ashton's letter, I, being the 'Common Decorator' alluded to, beg to say that some months ago I attempted to buy out my neighbour on the other side, but without success. The lease of No. 25, Brook Street, becoming later for sale, I took it over, and, having regard to the requirements of my business, was compelled partly to rebuild.

Mr. Ashton now attacks me. I have no wish to deface any historical building; but I should like to point out that property in the West-End is far too valuable to be left to rot because some genius of a past age happened to have lived in a particular spot at one time.

The condition of the house when taken over by me was such that it required practically reconstructing; and I doubt whether Mr. Ashton with all his love and enthusiasm for the preservation of old landmarks, would have been prepared to have kept the house in its original condition.

I had even arranged that the tablet should be put over the door in a much more conspicuous position than it had ever been before.—Yours, etc.,

25, 27, 29, Brook Street, W. C. J. CHARLES.

This did not satisfy Mr. Ashton, who still protested in a second letter, which reads:—

SIR,—I have to thank Mr. C. J. Charles for his reply to my communication protesting against the partial rebuilding of Handel's house in Brook Street. Mr. Charles states that he is the 'Common Decorator' to whom I am supposed to have alluded in my letter. The assertion is, however, not accurate, as I called the owner of the shop 'a decorative artist' and certainly not a 'common decorator.' I was not quite so rude as that!

Your correspondent further remarks that 'property in the West-End is far too valuable to be left to rot because some genius of a past age happened to have lived in a particular spot at one time.' That may be very true, but nevertheless one cannot help deeply regretting that a house in which so illustrious a man as Handel lived for more than half his life could not have been preserved for all time. Mr. Charles promises 'that the tablet should be put over the door in a much more conspicuous position than it had ever been before.' But it seems to me that the replacing of this tablet would be somewhat of an absurdity, considering that the house is now totally different from what it formerly was.

There the matter rests, and, as so often happens, sentiment has had to give way to business.

The King has graciously consented to become a Patron, as also has President Loubet, of the two concerts to be given in Paris on January 10 and 12 by the London Symphony Orchestra in co-operation, at the suggestion of Sir Charles Stanford, with a Leeds chorus. The choral force of the best Yorkshire type numbers 292 picked voices—87 sopranos, 77 contraltos, 60 tenors, and 68 basses—all of whom may be safely trusted to uphold the best traditions of English choral singing. A sum of about £1,000 has been raised in order to defray the expenses of the choir, but upwards of forty members are going to Paris at their own cost. As we stated last month, each member of the London Symphony Orchestra is not only foregoing his fee, but paying his own expenses, and the soloists are giving their services. The complete programmes of the two concerts—to be given in the Châtelet Theatre—are as follows:

FIRST CONCERT, WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 10.

- (M) Poeme Symphonique—'Phaëton' .. .. Saint-Saëns.
 (S) Ode—'Blest pair of sirens' .. .. Parry.
       Leeds Chorus, and Orchestra.
 (M) (a) 'Dance of nymphs and reapers' .. .. Sullivan.
       From 'The Tempest'.
       (b) 'Benedictus' .. .. Mackenzie.
       (c) Scherzo from the 'Scandinavian' Symphony. Cowen.
 (M) Symphonic Poem—'Don Juan' .. .. Strauss.
 (M) Overture—'Meistersinger' .. .. Wagner.
 (S) Motet—'Sing to the Lord' .. .. Bach.
       Leeds Chorus.
 (S) Andante and Finale from the 'Irish Symphony' Stanford.
 (S) Chorus—'The horse and his rider' ('Israel') .. Handel.
       Leeds Chorus.
 (M) Conducted by M. André Messager.
 (S) Conducted by Sir Charles V. Stanford.

SECOND CONCERT, FRIDAY, JANUARY 12.

- (C) Overture—'Benvenuto Cellini' .. .. Berlioz.
 (S) Chorus—'The Challenge of Thor' ('King Olaf') Elgar.
 (S) 'Quaerens Me,' 'Lacrymosa,' 'Offertorium,' from the 'Requiem' Stanford.
       Miss Perceval Allen. Miss Marie Brema.
       Mr. John Coates. Mr. Plunket Greene.
 (S) Sanctus, from Mass in B minor .. .. Bach.
 (S) Choral Symphony .. .. Beethoven.
       Miss Perceval Allen. Miss Marie Brema.
       Mr. John Coates. Mr. Francis Braun.
 (C) Conducted by M. Colonne.
 (S) Conducted by Sir Charles V. Stanford.

As doubtless many English people will desire to attend these interesting music-makings—unique in their conception—it may be stated that tickets are to be obtained at Mr. L. G. Sharpe's concert agency, 61, Regent Street. The occasion is one that calls for sincere congratulation and heartiest good-wishes to all concerned.

The good work which Mr. John B. Lott has done for twenty-five years as conductor of the Lichfield Musical Society received pleasant recognition on December 11, at St. James's Hall, in the city of Dr. Johnson. On that occasion Canon Lonsdale (in the absence through illness of the Dean) presented the cathedral organist with an easy-chair and a purse containing forty guineas. In felicitous terms Canon Lonsdale referred to the 'credit, tact, perseverance and energy, and that never-say-die spirit' of Mr. Lott, and expressed the hope that he would long continue his conductorship of the Society. The conscientious and unobtrusive way in which Mr. Lott has so long and faithfully discharged his duties at Lichfield calls for full recognition and publicity beyond the region where he exerts so beneficial an influence for music.

The composer of the delightful madrigal 'Sister, awake'—which forms the extra music supplement to our present issue—is Thomas Bateson, who was organist of Chester Cathedral three hundred years ago. In 1602 the Dean and Chapter paid 6s. 'for a little deske for Mr. Bateson his organ book.' In 1609 he became a vicar-choral and organist of Christ Church Cathedral, Dublin, and in 1631 he died. That is practically all that is known of his career, and the date of his birth has not been discovered. But he has left a good name as the composer of madrigals, of which he published two sets in 1604 and 1618—works which have secured him a high place among English composers of the Elizabethan period. The preface to his first set of madrigals, from which 'Sister, awake,' is taken is so quaint that no apology is needed for quoting it in full, at the same time retaining the actual spelling of three centuries ago :

To my honorable and most respected good friend :
Sir William Norres, Knight of the honorable order of the Bath : Thomas Bateson wisheth long lyfe, health and happinesse, with increase of honour.

Syr, I am bould to present vnto you these few MADRIGALES, and I pray you as you haue heeretofore (rather for your exceeding loue to mee, then for any worth that I acknowledge of the Songs) giuen them your priuate applause & liking, when I sent them to you euer as they were composed in loose papers, so you wil much more now, (for now in-deed when they come to the worlds eye and censure, they had more need of it than euer) Vouchsafe to give them your good countenance and publick patronage. In trueth
I must confesse, they are like young birds feared out of the nest before they be well feathered, & finde no place so fit to light on as on the branches of your fauour :
where (such is your loue to me and Musick) I hope they wilbe so shrouded in the leaues of your good liking, that you will giue leaue neither to any rauinous Kite nor craftie fowler (I meane neither to any open mouthed Momus nor more slye detractor) to deuoure, or harm them, that cannot succor nor shift for themselves.
I could wish them a Cage of as many sweet singing Nightingales to salute your eares with the choisest of delightful Notes and the melody of most eare-pleasing harmony, that your idle time might not passe without delight, if they might yeeld it to you. But whatsoever they are, yours they are, & for you onely they were made. It was your good countenance that did encourage mee to this ; Your loue to Musick doth not onely challenge it of mee, but euen the vttermost that Musicks art can afford ; which if it were in mee, I would most willingly offer to you ; Now let these my affectionate indeuours be accepted, since this is all that I can performe : except the honoring of your Vertues, and obseruance of your worthinesse.

Yours in all loue and so obliged

THOMAS BATESON.

The twenty-first Annual Conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians is announced to be held at Lowestoft on January 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6.
The following papers are promised :

'Modern harmony, as exemplified in the works of Elgar, Strauss, and Debussy'—Dr. F. J. Sawyer.

'Some East Anglian Musicians'—Dr. A. H. Mann.

'Some notes on the improvement of popular musical taste in England'—Mr. A. E. Grimshaw.

'Is modern music decadent?'—Mr. H. A. Keyser.

'Church Festival Services'—Dr. A. Madeley Richardson.

Henry Purcell's 'Ode to St. Cecilia' (1692) is to be performed at one of the concerts to be held in connection with the Conference.

The article on Schumann's Music in England which appeared in our November and December issues can be amplified by the record of two 'first performances' in this country of the master's works.
On June 8, 1869, 'The Luck of Edenhall' was performed for the first time in England by the Exeter College Musical Society, Oxford, a flourishing organization under the direction of Dr. (afterwards Sir John) Stainer, then organist of Magdalen College.
The accompaniments to the work were excellently played on the pianoforte by an undergraduate of the College, Hubert Parry by name, who has since been heard of. The Hon. Secretary of the Society at that time, Mr. A. Heathcote Long, has placed on record the following account of the performance :

The pièce de résistance of the concert was highly creditable to the Society. The composition was performed for the first time in England and is a very difficult work. Mr. Parry played the exacting accompaniment well, and the various choruses and solos were all admirably rendered.

The other 'first performance,' so far as England is concerned, was that of Schumann's 'Hymn to Night' (Op. 108), given on November 23, 1880, by that enterprising organization of past days, the Borough of Hackney Choral Association. A notice in THE MUSICAL TIMES of this 'really excellent concert' concludes thus : 'Mr. Prout conducted with his accustomed intelligence and precision.'

On more than one occasion we have referred to the worthy efforts that are being made to collect unwritten English folk-songs. There is urgency in this matter because it is certain that as modern communication annihilates time and space, local customs die out, and we must realise that the singing of folk-songs by folks—so far, at least, as the most characteristic specimens are concerned—is doomed to extinction.
Unsophisticated old people can still croon the old ditties, but their descendants, having eaten of the fruits of 'progress,' do not seem to care to perpetuate the practice. Whether the apparently inevitable death of the custom is for good or for evil is a point for discussion, but quite apart from this consideration, it is clear that unless the old folks can be induced to pass on their songs to competent collectors they will be irretrievably lost. It may be contended that after all many folk-songs are but poor, dreary stuff as to both words and music, and therefore that the game is not worth the candle. But recent experience proves that unmistakably beautiful songs are occasionally discovered. The plain, common-sense course then is to collect galore, and to postpone investigation as to value until a later stage. In connection with this matter we draw the attention of readers to the report of a lecture by Mr. Cecil Sharp given on p. 43.

Dr. W. H. Cummings has kindly drawn our attention to the fact that the Roubiliac statue of Handel in Westminster Abbey gives a representation of the composer without a head-covering of either wig or cap, and that the death-mask of Handel—by the same sculptor and in the possession of Dr. Cummings —is likewise modelled. This information, from so reliable a source, modifies the statement on p. 788 of our December issue.

'Why should we not have monuments to perpetuate the fame of those who neglect their duty, as well as of those who perform it?'—Dr. S. S. Wesley.

with a new accompaniment in flutes, oboes, and horns, thus :

No. 3. Flute & Oboe.

And this is worked until the 'second subject' is reached. The first portion, with which we have hitherto been engaged, though in the same tempo as the rest of the movement, has a more pompous character, and conveys the impression of its being an Introduction. With the new key, however, the movement seems to assume a more suave Allegro character. The second subject is as gay as gay can be, just as if intrigues and cabals, and debt and illness and disappointment—poor Mozart's daily bread—had no existence whatever. It is in the orthodox key of the 'dominant,' or G, and in two halves, of which we quote the first only, noting as we do so the charming effect produced (at b) by the happy repetition in the bass of the phrase which has just been heard in the treble :

No. 4. Strings.

The second half closes on the key-note of G, and is followed by a further melody by way of codetta :

No. 5.

and this again calls us to notice the fragment of the first theme (No. 1) which appears in the bass (at a).

One of the characteristics of this Symphony is its remarkable use of counterpoint and imitation, not to stiffen but to enrich and adorn the work, and the above examples show how early in the piece and how easily Mozart introduced his learning.

The character of the second subject is kept up after the passage last quoted, notwithstanding a momentary change into C minor ; and is further heightened by a third melody of the brightest nature, by way of episode or coda ; its gay turns, its staccato notes, its pizzicato bass, all combining to make it exhilarating. It starts forth in the strings after a bar's rest as follows :

Vns. 1 & 2, in octaves.

This charming tune is almost identical with an air which Mozart had composed in the previous May, to words beginning 'Voi siete un po tondo,' to suit a bass singer who was not satisfied with his part in Anfossi's opera of 'Le Gelosie Fortunate.*' An episode of this kind is a rare innovation with Mozart, and it is rarer still to find him employing an existing air for the purpose. The character of hilarity, so remarkable in the last three quotations, is kept up to the end of the first portion of the Allegro.

The repetition of the first portion completed, the 'development' begins by a sudden change into E flat, in which the episode last quoted is worked with great ingenuity. As Mozart proceeds, a group of notes in the latter part of the air (see a in No. 6) seizes his fancy, and he gives it in close imitation between the violins and basses, bringing in the stiff chords out of No. 2 as an accompaniment :

No. 7.
Flute & Oboes.

After a few bars he abandons this, and uses a modification of the same group in a 'canon' which is almost 'strict' :

No. 8.

Thus, in a dozen bars or so, we arrive at the key of E major, and thence again by a masterly transition of four bars into F, in which key the first theme appears as quoted in No. 3, first with the accompaniment in double counterpoint (below, in the bassoons, instead of above, in the flutes), and then in its former shape. The semiquavers and demi-semiquavers of Nos. 1 and 3 are then employed in the violins as a melody to cover a great deal of fine, bold modulation, and at last by a recurrence of the imitative passage, quoted as No. 7, the key of C major is regained, and the réprise of the original theme is thundered forth as at first.

In the recapitulation of the first section there is a great deal of change, very remarkable considering the date of the composition. Amongst the rest the passage No. 3 returns, not in C major as before, but in C minor, leading at once into E flat, and we remain in flat keys for some little time, as if the previous working out had not satisfied the wandering propensities of Mozart's soul—as if he had more to say than he had yet found opportunity to express. And not only the keys, but the instrumentation and the forms of the accompaniment are changed, to a degree which, to say the least, is very unusual in Mozart's recapitulations, and at that date was very much of a novelty. But here, for this movement at least, the erratic proceedings of the master cease. The second subject (No. 4) is brought back in C, and the episode (No. 6) in the same key, and a short Coda of four bars (added to the real Coda of the episode), ends this noble movement.

II. The form of the Andante cantabile is much the same with that of the G minor and Mozart's other Symphonies. It opens (with muted violins) with a lovely melody of ten bars' length in F, beginning as follows :

The first four bars of this are repeated by the basses in the same key, with a figure of exquisite embroidery in the fiddles, thus :

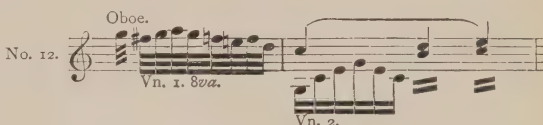

and then a new melody is heard in the oboes and bassoons :

(of which there are two employed throughout the Andante with consummate art and effect) accompanied, in the violins, by a syncopated arpeggio figure and broken triplets.

Then comes the 'second subject' proper of the movement, in the oboes in C, introduced by a beautiful figure of which Mendelssohn was surely thinking—or not thinking—when he wrote the Con moto of his Italian Symphony, and breathing the very soul of peace and repose :

Then the fiddles have this delicious little figure :

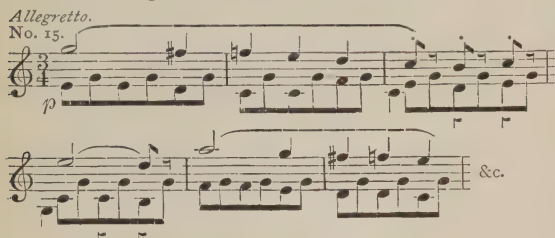

and next these two phrases, alternating in violins and flute :

with which delicious melody we reach the end of the first part of the movement.

Such is a bare catalogue of the materials of this beautiful Andante: but the art with which they are woven together, and the long stream of lovely melody, produced by the union of phrase and instrument, can best be appreciated by attentive listening. In the next portion of the movement these materials are worked out, and many an artifice of double counterpoint, contrivance, and modulation employed in the process, but without even a passing cloud of obscurity, or a momentary interruption of the beauty and grace which were so native to Mozart's pen. The conclusion has profited by one of those afterthoughts which, though frequent in Beethoven and Mendelssohn, are rarely met with in Mozart, probably owing to the quantity he wrote, and the rapid rate at which his works followed one another, so as not to allow him time to go back after he had once finished them. The last eleven bars of the movement were originally seven; the first four of them were struck out by Mozart, and replaced by eight, containing that beautiful last return of the original subject (No. 9) which is so fascinating. The new passage is written on a separate leaf, and wafered into the MS. (like Handel's grand afterthought, 'All the inhabitants of Canaan,' in 'The people shall hear'), and the fact is certified by Mendelssohn, in a letter to Moscheles, dated March 7, 1845. There are few who will not join with him in saying, 'Is not this a happy alteration?'

III. The gaiety so prominent in portions of the opening movement returns in the Minuet, though in a different style. Mozart's Minuets are always lively, and this is no exception to the rule. It is in the key of C, though with a chromatic characteristic inwoven into each of its phrases, from the opening theme to the lovely and ingenious Coda with which it closes, and which has always been a favourite point with the listener. It opens as follows :

In its treatment it is more extended than the Minuet of the G minor Symphony, though it is unnecessary to say that it is perfectly symmetrical in form.

The Trio is likewise in C (happy simplicity of a great genius!), going to E in the second part; and the ingenious and quiet manner in which the return to the original key is managed, as if nothing whatever was being done, has for long been one of the well-known and favourite points in Mozart's works. The opening of the Trio is a delightful instance of question and answer :

and the return from the Trio to the Minuet is one which even Mendelssohn might have envied.

IV. But it is for the Finale that Mozart—as if aware that he was writing his last Symphony—has reserved all the resources of his science, and all the power, which no one seems to have possessed to the same degree with himself, of concealing that science, and making it the vehicle for music as pleasing as it is learned. Nowhere, perhaps—not even in his greatest Quartets or in the immortal Overture to the 'Zauberflöte'—has he achieved more.

The Finale is in the most regular symphonic form—as much so as the first Allegro of the work—and is constructed on four perfectly distinct and individual themes. First, a well-known phrase of the older ecclesiastical music, treated by Mozart himself with evident affection in several other places, and more recently used by Mendelssohn, as was pointed out in the remarks on the opening themes of both the 'Reformation' Symphony and the 'Hymn of Praise.'*

* This old succession of notes was originally a part of the 'intonation' of a Gregorian tone. Mozart was very fond of it. The whole Credo of his Mass in F is founded on it; and he uses it also in a Symphony of 1759, in B flat, published as 'No. 11'; in a Violin Sonata, in E flat (1785), and elsewhere. Mendelssohn was especially attached to it, and it may be traced in 'St. Paul,' 'For so hath the Lord,' and 'For all the Gentiles'; in the 42nd Psalm, 'Why my soul'; in the openings of the 'Lobgesang' and 'Reformation' Symphonies, and the Finale of the 'Scottish' Symphony. Bach's Fugue in E in 'the 48' is known to every one. Handel makes a splendid effect with it in his chorus, 'Then round about the starry throne,' where the basses lead off with 'and triumph over death.' Schubert makes it the subject of the 'Cum Sancto' in his Mass in E flat; and even Beethoven has brought it in in the Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 110, bars 5 to 8, in the left hand. In the English school we need only point to the 'Glory be' in Purcell's Jubilate in D, to Croft's 'God is gone up,' to Sir John Goss's fine chorus, 'As the mountains,' and to Sullivan's Tempest Song, 'Come unto these yellow sands.' An attempt to trace the persistent use of this phrase down to modern times (Brahms delights in it) was made by the writer in the Musical World from October, 1886, to May, 1887.

The phrase itself consists of but four notes: and although on its first appearance (as quoted) it is garnished with a gay melody to connect its repetition and to finish it off, still this latter is but little employed afterwards, and the real theme is the phrase of four semibreves.

No. 17. Allegro molto.

This is the 'first subject' proper of the movement. How gay it is! How fresh the old church theme sounds on the modern fiddles! And how pretty the little flourish in which Mozart lets off his steam in the eighth bar!

The second theme commences immediately on the conclusion of the foregoing quotation; it consists almost simply* of the descending scale of the key:

and forms the material for a passage of sixteen bars in the tonic, such as Mozart usually introduces after he has given out the first theme of his movements. The announcement of these two themes is followed by a short treatment of the first as a fugue subject, in five parts, by the strings alone, in the following style, as if to show what a sweet thing a fugal passage could be:

After the answers have all been regularly made, the third theme is heard in the violins, with rapid response from the basses, the other strings and the whole of the wind keeping up sustained harmonies:

* This is the phrase which M. Oulibicheff accuses Beethoven of stealing in the Finale of his first Symphony. It is extraordinary what party spirit will make people say! He might just as well accuse Mozart of having stolen it from the 'Hailstone Chorus,' where it occurs almost note for note, or from the bass aria in Jomelli's Oratorio of 'Betulia liberata,' where, as the late Sir W. G. Cousins pointed out, it is used in actual connection with a phrase of four semibreves, thus:

Then No. 2 bursts forth afresh, with swift canonic answer, and leads into the key of G, in which the fourth theme appears, doing duty as the 'second subject' proper of the movement—a graceful flowing phrase, though short :

followed sharp, as will be observed in the quotation, by No. 18 and No. 20, eager to engage in their contrapuntal work.

Having thus brought his materials into the field, Mozart proceeds to elaborate them in the form usual to the first Allegro of a symphony; and the way in which he does this has long been recognised as a marvel for its union of counterpoint and fancy. The manner in which these phrases, apparently so unconnected, fit into each other and into themselves, and at the same time lend themselves to the 'form' of the Symphony, which was contrived to suit quite a freer style of composition, is a curious study. And as if the four were not enough sufficiently to fetter him, he inverts the second of his themes (No. 18 above), taking it up the scale instead of down, in the same intervals; and then these five are combined and treated with the most extraordinary variety of close imitation, canon and accompaniment; always with effect and spirit, and with a continual flow of melody and astonishing freedom of modulation. In the middle portion of the movement—the working out, after the double bar, which is devoted mainly to the elaboration of No. 18—it is most interesting to observe the artifices by which Mozart, while keeping up all this strict contrapuntal treatment, has added warmth and variety to it by making the flutes and oboes answer the strings ('like linnets in the pauses of the wind') with phrases of different rhythm and character, while at another time the brass (a modest pair of trumpets and a pair of horns, used for colour and not for noise) and drums reiterate the phrase :

No. 22.

(taken from the opening of theme No. 18) now in tonic, now in dominant, now before and now after the starting of that theme. When, after the conclusion of the 'working out,' the original first subject (No. 17) is returned to, we find the same licence which we noticed in the same spot in the Allegro. Mozart is not content, as in the E flat and G minor Symphonies, with a mere textual repetition of the former passages, but for eight-and-twenty bars after the réprise, that fruitful phrase of four semibreves is harmonized, and modulated, and extended in a manner perfectly different from that of its original occurrence, a licence which has few if any parallels before this Symphony, and opens up a startling vista of the bold innovations which this great genius might have made in Symphony writing had his life been prolonged, but which seem to have first occurred to him in his last work of that kind.

Another new feature, equally an innovation as to its length and importance, and, like that just spoken of, anticipating a principal characteristic in Beethoven's treatment of the Symphony, is the Coda with which this Finale concludes, in which all the learning and contrivance of the former portion are summarised and condensed, and, if possible, surpassed. The Coda is no less than sixty-eight bars long. It starts with a quasi-inversion of the first subject as follows :

No. 23.

Violins.

which is first worked by itself for twelve bars. And then begins—what is not to be found in the body of the movement, notwithstanding all the contrivances employed there—a regular strict fugue, lasting for exactly thirty bars, in which the four subjects (with a fifth till now subordinate) are brought into different relations and closer combinations than before, the effect being as it were to weld the whole structure firmly together into one everlasting monument of symmetry and beauty. For such was the force of genius of this wonderful man and such his habitual mastery over the technicalities of the art, that these elaborate contrivances never obtrude themselves to the injury of the poetry and spirit of the composition, but all is as brilliant, as graceful, and as forcible as if the composer had been quite unfettered. Think what a union of invention, skill, practice, and resolution must have been required to imagine such a work as that we have now before us; and to put it on paper, once for all, in the state in which it is now played—for Mozart rarely, if ever, made 'sketches' of his music—in the fifteen days which elapsed between July 25 and August 10 !

Church and Organ Music.

THE TUNE ST. MAGNUS AND ITS UNFORTUNATE COMPOSER, JEREMIAH CLARKE.

'Poor Jerry!' is the natural comment on the tragic death of our composer, but no one who has heard St. Magnus can say 'Poor tune.' Has not this stately strain kept green the name of its composer for two hundred years? Let us see.

St. Magnus appears to have been first printed in the third edition of Henry Playford's 'The Divine Companion,' published in 1709. The full title of this collection reads :

THE DIVINE COMPANION; or David's Harp new tun'd. Being a Choice Collection of New and Easy Psalms, Hymns, and Anthems. The Words of the Psalms being Collected from the Newest Versions.

Compos'd by the best Masters.

To be used in Churches or Private Families, for their greater Advancement of Divine Music.

Psalms cxlvi. 1. Praise the Lord, &c.

And that Above, we may be sure to know
Our Parts, these Hymns we Practice here below :
And while we Sing, we Consecrate our Art,
And offer up with every Tongue a Heart.

The Third Edition, with large Additions.

London : Printed by W. Pearson, and Sold by John Young, Musical Instrument Seller, at the Dolphin and Crown at the West end of St. Paul's Church, and John Hare, Instrument-maker, at the Viol and Flute in Cornhill, near the Royal Exchange, 1709. Price Bound, 3s.

Although the name of Henry Playford does not appear on the above title-page, that worthy music-publisher edited the book and signed the preface. St. Magnus makes its appearance on p. 93 of 'The Divine Companion' in the following form :

Cantus & Bassus. PSALM cxvii. A 2 Voc.

Let all the na-tions of the World their great Cre-a-tor's praise; and all its scat-ter'd Peo-ple joyn his might-y.. Name to.. raife.

No name of composer or tune is given, and there seems to be just a shadow of doubt as to whether Jerry Clarke really did compose the strain, because on p. 87 it is stated 'The Three following Psalms sett by Mr. Jer. Clark.' (The name is variously spelt.) But the 'Three following Psalms' are the 148th, 145th, and 121st, whereas Psalm 117—which is assigned to the tune in question—is the fourth tune following. Long-established tradition has, however, assigned the paternity of the tune to Jeremiah Clarke.

It is very interesting to find a similar tune earlier in this book (on p. 16). Here it is, in its stately minim and crotchet singableness :

AN HYMN FOR CHRISTMAS-DAY. HYMN I.

Cantus & Bassus. A 2 Voc.

What words, what voi-ces can we bring, which way our Accents raife to well-come the mif-ter-ious
King; and fin-ga Sa-viours praise?

This 'Christmas-Day' tune is undoubtedly by our composer. One need scarcely point out its melodic similarity to St. Magnus—e.g., the opening phrase is identical, note for note, and so on. The question arises: 'Is St. Magnus derived from the more florid tune, or vice versa? Who can say? It will be observed that in both instances the sharp and not the natural sign is used to raise the fourth note of the scale (E flat) at the point of modulation.

The first known appearance of the tune with a name is in Nathaniel Gawthorne's 'Harmonia Perfecta,' 1730, where it is designated Nottingham (only one ♯, please, Mr. Printer): there it is set in four parts and in the key of A, a semitone lower than the original pitch. William Riley, in his 'Parochial Psalmody' (1762), seems to have been the first to adopt the present name; he calls it 'St. Magnus's Tune,' for what reason is a matter of conjecture. In addition to the stately tread of its diatonic progression, a fine feature of the tune is the exhilarating skip of an octave in the last line. Could Sullivan have had St. Magnus in his mind when composing St. Nathaniel? The key is the same, and so is the skip of the octave; moreover, with the exception of one note (B for A), line 2 of both tunes is also the same; while line 3 of Sullivan's is practically identical with line 4 of Clarke's. It is satisfactory to find that so typically good a specimen of old-time psalmody as St. Magnus has maintained its right to be included in all recent hymnals; no less satisfactory is it that the crotchets following the octave skip have been retained by modern editors, except in 'The Baptist Church Hymnal' (1900), where the crotchets have been ruthlessly sacrificed. In 'The Methodist Hymn-book' (1904) the upper E is made a dotted note, an alteration that is by no means an improvement.

Jeremiah Clarke was a man of mark. The date of his birth is unknown—the 'Dictionary of National Biography' gives '1669?' but it may have been much earlier. He began his career as a chorister of the Chapel Royal under Dr. Blow, and subsequently became organist of Winchester College, a post he held from 1692 to 1695. In 1693 he returned to London to take up his duties as Almoner and Master of the Boys at St. Paul's Cathedral, which office his former master, Dr. Blow, probably from conscientious motives against pluralities, had resigned in his favour. Clarke was the first organist of the new Cathedral of St. Paul's, and doubtless officiated at Father Smith's magnificent organ at the opening of Wren's masterpiece on December 2, 1697. Mr. John S. Bumpus, in his informing book on 'The organists and composers of St. Paul's Cathedral,' says :

On June 6th, 1699, Clarke was admitted to his probation as vicar-choral of S. Paul's, but does not appear to have been fully admitted until Oct. 1705, 'post annum probationis completum,' no explanation being forthcoming among the Chapter Records for the long interval which had elapsed. Later on—in 1700 and 1704—Clarke renewed his acquaintance with the Chapel Royal upon being appointed first a Gentleman and afterwards one of the organists, as the following entries from 'The Old Cheque Book, or Book of Remembrance, of the Chapel Royal, St. James's' prove :

1700. July 7. By virtue of a warrant from the Right Reverend the Dean of the Chapell Royal Mr. Jeremiah Clerk and Mr. William Crofts were both sworn Gentlemen extraordinary of the King's Chapell (and to succeed as organists according to merit, when any such place shall fall voyd) by mee Rh Battell, S.D. Wittnes Edw. Braddock, Clerk of the Cheke.

1704. May 25th. By virtue of a warrant from the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of London I have sworn and admitted Mr. Jeremiah Clark and Mr. William Crofts joyntly into an organist's place vacant by the death of Mr. Francis Pigott. Rh Battell, S.D. Witnes Edw. Braddock, Clerk of the Cheque.

Clarke, who was appointed music-master to Queen Anne, composed music of various kinds, sacred and secular. His harpsichord 'lessons,' like the tune St. Magnus, appeared posthumously with the following title :

CHOICE LESSONS | For the | Harpsichord or Spinett | Being | The Works of the late Famous | MR. JEREMIAH CLARKE. | Composer & Organist to her Majtie & ye Cath'dl Church of St. Pauls | Carefully Corrected by Himself | Being what he Designed to Publish. London . . . 1711.

A copy of this extremely rare book—which formerly belonged to Mr. Gostling, of Canterbury, and Dr. Crotch—is in the British Museum. One of the pieces is entitled 'Round O,' another 'An entry,' &c. He was the original composer of Dryden's 'Alexander's Feast,' performed at Stationers' Hall on St. Cecilia's Day, 1697, the occasion for which it was written. The music was never printed, and seems to have been irretrievably lost. Clarke also composed several operas—e.g., 'The World in the Moon' and other 'theatric labours,' in addition to an Ode in praise of the island of Barbados, which took the form of a cantata, 'The Assumption.' Many songs from his prolific pen enriched the collections of the day, especially D'Urfey's 'Pills to purge Melancholy,' and Gay honoured Clarke by selecting one of his ditties for 'The Beggar's Opera.' His printed church music includes two morning services—in G major and C minor—and some anthems. Of the latter, two are typical of the style of composition in vogue at the close of the 17th century—the verse anthem 'I will love Thee, O Lord, my Strength,' and the easy full anthem 'Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem.' The former has some realistic effects: for instance, the shivering at the word 'trembled,' such as rejoices the hearts of present-day tremulant-loving organists:

And as an introduction to the 'verse' movement 'The Lord also thunder'd out of heaven,' he gives this, afterwards repeated (as an interlude) a fourth lower and used as the melody of the duet (tenor and bass):

which must have produced ideal thunderousness on the CCC great organ manual at St. Paul's. No wonder that dear Miss Hackett's face would lighten at such a tempestuous display.

The compositions of Clarke received encomiums from both Burney and Hawkins. 'He was all tenderness,' according to Burney, while Hawkins says: 'His anthems are remarkably pathetic, at the same time they preserve the dignity and majesty of the Church style.' Ouseley endorses these opinions, though with a qualification: 'Clarke's music is mostly written in a tender and pathetic style, wanting in vigour, but pure and sweet in its harmony.'

A love affair created a deep-toned discord in Jerry Clarke's life, and was the cause of his death by his own hand. An interesting Broadside in the British Museum, brought to light in 1887 by Mr. Barclay Squire, gives an account of the suicide with full details of the sad event, which took place on December 1, 1707. The Broadside reads:

"Mr. Jeremiah Clarke, whose untimely End I am going to relate; was a Batchelor, and one of the Organists of Her Majesties Chappel at St. James's, as also Chief Organist of the Cathedral of St. Pauls; both which Salleries Amounted to above 300*l.* per Annum, so that the want of no Worldly Advantage, could induce him to such Self-Tragical Action, which he violently Committed on Monday Morning last, the Particulars whereof, according to the best information, take as follows.

"On Monday Morning last, about 9 of the Clock, the said Mr. Clarke, being in his Chamber, his own Father with some other Gentlemen, made him a Visit, at which time he seem'd to be very Cheerful and Merry, by Playing on his Musick for a considerable time, which was a Pair of Organs in his own House, which he took great Delight in; but that Diversion being ended, and his Father and the Company having taken their leaves, he went up Stairs again into his Chamber, and setting himself down in a Chair by the Fire (to outward Appearance) without any manner, or sign of Discontent, the Maid going about her Business, not in the least suspecting what was to follow; all on a sudden, between 10 and 11 a Clock, she heard a Pistol go off in his Room, and thereupon running with all speed to see what was the matter, found her Master leaning backward in his chair, with a Terrible Wound behind his Ear, from which issued Abundance of Blood, and at the same time saw the Pistol lying upon the Hearth, so that she plainly perceived he had Shot himself, and thereupon call'd up Mr. King his brother-in-law, to see the Dreadful Spectacle; so that a Surgeon and other suitable assistance were immediately procured, who Wash'd his Wounds and Search'd them (for as yet he was not Dead) but no Bullet could be found, and so much of his Blood was lost, that he could say very little, but only was observ'd once or twice to call out Thieves, and say they would Murther him; and also did Complain, they did not lay him easy in his Bed, and the like; but was incapable of Answering any Question that was asked him: So that he Languished from between Ten a Clock in the Fore-noon till about Three in the After-noon, and then he Expired to the great Grief of his own Sister, who was lately Married to Mr. King (one of his Schollars) and formerly kept his House.

"The Occasion of this terrible Accident is variously Discours'd; some will have it, that his Sister Marrying his Scholar, who he fear'd might in time prove a Rival in his Business, threw him into a kind of melancholy Discontent; and others (with something more Reason) impute this Misfortune to a Young Married Woman near Pater-Noster-Row, whom he had a more than ordinary respect for, who not returning him such suitable Favours as his former Affections deserv'd, might in a great Measure occasion dismal Effects. But be that how it will, 'tis certain he shot himself with a little Screw-Pistol in the side of the Head, as he sat in his Chair by the Fire-side, within less than half an Hour after his Father and other Friends had been with him."

Jeremiah Clarke was buried in the churchyard of St. Gregory by St. Paul on December 3, 1707, as is proved by the burial registers of the church. In a waste book (or diary) from which the registers appear to have been drawn up, it is recorded that the remains were 'carried to St. Paul's Cathedral' on the same day.

Not only was the punster abroad in 1707, but he was at home in sharpening his wit on a hearth-stone suicide. For did not Edward Ward write a pathetic ode on this sad event? It begins thus:

Mourn, all ye Brethren of String,
Prepare at once to Weep and Sing;
Tune your soft Lyres, and strain your warbling Throats, &c.

Ward's pathetic-bathetic poem concluded with the following pungent words:

Let us not wonder at his fall,
Since 'twas not so unnatural
For him who lived by Canon to expire by Ball.

There are many churches and some colleges and schools where a daily or occasional service is sung by boys only. The 'Chorister Series,' published by Messrs. Novello, furnishes the necessary music for such occasions. It includes Responses, Services—Matins, Communion and Evensong, also Wedding and Funeral Services—and Anthems, all specially composed for equal voices. It need hardly be said that the 'Chorister Series' meets the requirements of ladies' colleges and schools where a choral service is in vogue. A list of the compositions already in the Series will be found on page 69.

A monument to the memory of Sir John Stainer has just been placed in position on the east wall of the ante-chapel at Magdalen College, Oxford. It is the gift of Lady Stainer, and consists of a mural tablet of brass framed in alabaster, executed by Messrs. Kett, of Cambridge, after a design by Mr. G. F. Bodley, R.A. The Latin inscription, which commemorates Sir John Stainer's academic distinctions, his connection with the College and St. Paul's Cathedral as organist, and the University as Professor, is surmounted by a row of cherubs holding a scroll, bearing the words, 'Gloria in Excelsis Deo.'

CATHEDRAL SPECIAL SERVICES.

ST. PAUL'S.

At St. Paul's Cathedral, on December 5, Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung with its wonted impressiveness by the Cathedral choir, accompanied by a full orchestra, under the reverent conductorship of Sir George Martin—whose 'De Profundis' was also sung—with Mr. Charles Macpherson at the organ.

RIPON.

The same work was given at Ripon Cathedral, on December 6, under Mr. C. H. Moody's direction, to the accompaniment of organ, pianoforte and drums, played respectively by Dr. G. J. Bennett (of Lincoln Cathedral), Mr. Charles Gray and Mr. Rushforth.

CANTERBURY.

On December 7, at Canterbury Cathedral, Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Dr. Perrin's cantata, 'The Abode of Worship,' were interpreted by an orchestra of 48 players and a chorus of about 150 voices. Dr. Perrin conducted.

ST. ASAPH.

Brahms's 'Requiem' formed a special service at St. Asaph Cathedral on December 14, when, under the conductorship of the organist, Mr. W. E. Belcher, the work was performed by a band and chorus, 160 in number. Mr. J. T. Hughes, assistant-organist of Chester Cathedral, was at the organ.

WINCHESTER.

On the same day, at Winchester Cathedral, Parts I and 2 of Bach's Christmas Oratorio, Spohr's 'God, Thou art great,' and Schubert's B minor Symphony were sung and played by the Cathedral oratorio choir and orchestra, with some outside assistance in the instrumental department. Dr. Sweeting presided at the organ, and Dr. Prendergast conducted.

CHICHESTER.

It is extremely gratifying to find that the good example of Gloucester Cathedral is being followed at Chichester. We refer to the monthly special services which for many years have been so much appreciated in the western city. On Thursday evening, December 21, the first of these services was held in Chichester Cathedral. On that occasion the music included organ solos and excerpts from the oratorios, in addition to a hymn ('O come, O come, Emmanuel') and a carol ('The first Nowell'), both of which fell to the congregation's share in these commendable sacred music-makings. The Dean and Chapter and the organist

(Mr. Crowe) are to be warmly congratulated upon having inaugurated so excellent a series of musical services for the people, and we have not the slightest doubt that their efforts will meet with full reward. Other cathedrals might well follow so good an example.

ANTIGUA.

At St. John's Cathedral, Antigua (W.I.), on November 13, Handel's 'Messiah' (excepting a few numbers) was rendered by the St. John's Choral Society, their conductor (Rev. J. E. Weiss) presiding at the organ. At the close, the Benediction, pronounced by the Bishop, was followed by a Recessional hymn. As this was the last time the Society would sing under the baton of the Rev. J. E. Weiss, who was shortly to leave for England, on the following evening an address and purse were presented to him in recognition of his valuable work as conductor of the Society and in the interests of music generally in that far-away West Indian island.

ORATORIO SERVICES IN VARIOUS CHURCHES.

At St. Mary Abbott, Kensington, on Sunday afternoon, December 10, Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was performed by an augmented choir, accompanied by an orchestra and the organ; Mr. Shuttleworth, the assistant-organist, presiding at the latter instrument. The boys had been well trained by the new choirmaster, Mr. W. G. Ross, and the basses of the choir included the Lord Chief Justice. Mr. H. R. Bird, organist of the church, conducted an impressive rendering of this devotional work.

Schubert's B minor Symphony and a selection from Gaul's 'Holy City' were given on Sunday, December 3, at St. Paul's, Woodhouse-Eaves, near Loughborough, under the direction of the organist, Mr. Frank Storer.

On December 4, Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed in Soho Hill Church, Birmingham. Mr. C. H. Cooper conducted, with Mr. Thomas Facer at the organ.

One of Bach's devotional church cantatas, 'God's time is the best,' was sung at St. Martin, Potternewton, Leeds, on December 6, under the guidance of Mr. N. H. Bell, organist of the church.

At the Parish Church, Huddersfield, on December 13, Dr. Eaglefield Hull, the organist, conducted a performance of Sterndale Bennett's 'Woman of Samaria.' The accompaniments were played by an orchestra, and Mr. Lewis England presided at the organ.

Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was sung at Hornsey Parish Church on December 13, by the choir (seventy voices), with Mr. Herbert Bags at the organ, and Mr. Henry J. Baker conducted.

At Hill Presbyterian Church, Port Elizabeth, on October 27, in connection with the re-opening of the organ, Mr. C. Lee Williams's cantata 'The last night at Bethany' and Gounod's 'By Babylon's wave' were sung by the choir, under the direction of Mr. J. S. Yates, organist and choirmaster of the church. The organ solos on that occasion included two short pieces by Mr. John E. West, entitled 'Lamentation' and 'Aspiration.'

Brahms's 'Requiem' was sung with full orchestral accompaniment at St. John the Baptist's, Leicester, on December 19, with Dr. H. P. Allen at the organ and Dr. C. H. Kitson as conductor. The service commenced with Sir George Martin's 'Out of the deep.'

SCHUMANN'S 'RHENISH' SYMPHONY.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—In your issue for November the question is asked, why Schumann's 'Rhenish' Symphony is not played? The principal reason must be that both at St. James's and Queen's Halls, of late years, the trombone-parts of the beautiful slow movement (the alto part in particular) have failed to have the proper justice done them.

Whatever may be said as to the awkwardness of Schumann's string-parts, full as they are of pianoforte passages, nothing but admiration should be expressed for his writing for the wind instruments. Of course, so long as conductors do not trouble themselves to see justice done to the ideas of those composers who are no longer here to look after the proper performance of their works, nothing more need be urged, except that we of the present time are in the position of trustees towards works of tried and acknowledged merit. If it is the fashion for trustees in everyday business to become lax, or even worse, that is no reason why the same canker should be allowed to creep into music. Rather should we use every endeavour to see that these works are played on the instruments for which the composer wrote them.

Since Schumann's death the orchestra in Germany has not improved, except perhaps in technique. This is particularly true of the tone of the brass instruments; for, whereas in the scores of the so-called classical composers the character-tone of the horns was kept distinct from that of the trumpet-toned instruments (trumpets and trombones), it is now all merged into what for a better word must be called the 'mud-tone.'

This has been brought about by the great deterioration of handcraft, the disappearance of the old master-workman, with the result that, in order to make the instruments at all possible from a playing point of view, their proportions have had to be increased to a ridiculous extent, in order to arrive somewhat near just-intonation.

But this lamentable change has ruined the character-tone of the brass instruments in Germany, and now we are told by a German conductor that in London orchestras the trumpet must give way to an instrument that is not a trumpet. English trumpeters have always been celebrated for their splendid tone, and tone is very much a matter of tradition. It can be soon lost, as in Germany, and it is to be hoped English trumpeters will refuse to sell their birthright at the bidding of any itinerant foreign conductor.

It is only fair to add that Dr. Richter would be the very last to countenance any change of the kind.

Yours truly,

PROFESSOR.

THE COMPOSITION OF OLD ORGAN-PIPES.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—I am commencing a chemical investigation as to the relative proportions of lead and tin used by the old organ builders for pipe metal. The results already obtained in one or two cases are of considerable interest. In order that this investigation should be as thorough as possible, I am inviting those of your readers who have organs in their charge containing genuine old pipes by Snetzler, Smith, Harris, Byfield, and others, to send me small samples. A piece of metal not less than the weight of a threepenny piece is sufficient, and could be taken by the tuner from an over-length or tuning-tongue without doing any damage to the pipe in question. The name of the organ, the stops, and, if possible, the pipe should be given, together with any other notes which might be of interest. One or two of the leading organ-builders have already kindly helped me in getting such samples, and if others could do the same it would be of great assistance. Any samples forwarded will be thankfully received and acknowledged by

Yours, &amp;c.,

GEORGE DIXON.

THE HARD CASE OF A, B, &amp; C.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—I notice in your December number you give some advice to correspondents on the subject of pronunciation. Please let me bring to your notice the following:

A was brought up in the South of England and is a member of a Lancashire choir.

B represents the rest of the choir (especially the boys) with a more or less pronounced Lancashire brogue.

C is a curate who has undertaken to be choirmaster; has lived in the United States of America, and is trying to get the choir to pronounce certain words with a Yankee accent.

What should A do?

Yours distractedly,

A.

P.S.—It is needless to say that the Lancashire brogue comes out on Sundays as strong as ever, much to C's horror!

RICHARD STRAUSS'S 'SALOME' AT DRESDEN.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

During the month of November many reports were circulated respecting the new opera—or 'drama,' as it is termed—of Richard Strauss. It was to be given at Vienna, but the censorship intervened, insisting on certain modifications in the text. Then the work was to be produced at Turin or some other Italian city. At length it was stated that it would be first heard at Dresden, on November 20, but still there was delay; the music, both as regards the vocalists and the orchestra, is uncomfortably difficult, and no doubt there had not been sufficient time to rehearse it. At length the Uraufführung took place on Saturday evening, December 9, on which occasion the Dresden opera house was crowded from floor to ceiling. Critics came from far and near, also a host of admirers, as was proved by the applause and many recalls at the close; according to one German paper, the latter were no fewer than forty in number! It must not, however, be forgotten that some considerable share of these demonstrations was intended for the artists and for the conductor, Herr von Schuch, who not only had a responsible task on the evening itself, but who must have devoted much time, and displayed infinite patience during the rehearsals.

Puccini, Leoncavallo, Cilea, Giordano, and other modern composers have worked, and worked successfully, to librettos which are dramatically interesting; so much so, that their music at times takes—to use a familiar expression—'a back seat.' Now Strauss, in selecting the story of Salome dancing before Herod and insisting on the fulfilment of the Tetrarch's promise to grant whatever she desired, seems from two points of view to have acted unwisely. First of all, an opera of which the text is based on a Bible narrative is contrary to the taste and feelings of the British public, and even abroad—as already mentioned—objections have been raised in certain quarters. But why should the composer deliberately throw away the chance of his work being given in London, where so much has been done to make known his instrumental works, and also his songs? Still, any objection to 'Salome' based on what may perhaps be termed religious grounds must not carry weight in any attempt to judge of the musical and histrionic merits of the work. The story, as it is unfolded on the stage, has little in it of a noble or sympathetic nature; it is for the most part a banquet of horrors. There is too much of dark tragedy in it, and as Shakespeare and also Wagner have taught us, there must in the direst drama be some strong contrast by way of relief. There was one strong contrast in the very story in question: this was the 'voice' of Jochanaan rebuking the sins of the court, but the music assigned to him, though for a time simple and diatonic, lacks true strength; moreover, whatever of dignity there may be in it at first, is not maintained, while the scene between Jochanaan and Salome is artificial, not to say theatrical, both on his and on her part.

The two chief characters are undoubtedly Herod and Salome, and there is dramatic power in the music assigned to the former; it is always appropriate, if not always impressive. Salome, in whose character there is a strange and repulsive mixture of sensuality and cruelty, has also music at moments striking, though a great deal of it is too much in the spirit of Wagner, by which is meant that it has no strong individuality. The dancing before Herod is one of the most impressive portions of the piece; the music, now languid, now impassioned, and finally worked up into a frenzy, is both clever and effective, full of Eastern colour, yet free from all extravagance. The closing scene of the drama, although the situations are so different, has something Tristanesque about it. The music acquires a certain breadth and simplicity, but the scene on the stage is utterly distasteful; it is intended, apparently, for a sensational ending, but it is simply revolting.

Taking the opera as a whole, it is difficult to believe that it will ever be popular. It offers many proofs of the composer's skill, and even of his earnestness—for there seems little doubt that the subject exercised a strong fascination over him—but both these excellent qualities seem in large measure wasted. The skill is shown in the treatment of representative themes, yet much of it through over-refined details is confusing rather than convincing. If anyone, so far as workmanship goes, is fit to put on Wagnerian armour, it is Strauss; but his thematic material is not strong enough to bear its weight. It may easily be imagined that the composer found many opportunities for extraordinary discords, which in the opinion of some critics are the very hall-marks of his genius. In his symphonic poems such things are often disturbing, but in connection with the action on the stage, their raison d'être became at any rate clear; or Wagner's words may be appropriate. In a letter speaking about giving up his tone-poem 'Faust,' and setting to work at the 'Flying Dutchman,' he says that he 'escaped from all the mist of instrumental music into the clearness of the drama.'

'Salome' consists of one act only, and it only lasts about an hour and a-half in performance. It is on that account a very uncomfortable piece, for it would be difficult to select anything suitable to go before or to follow it, so as to make a programme of ordinary length. For a time, if the drama continues to be given, curiosity may draw fair audiences; after a time, however, the public will surely grudge paying full price for what may be almost called the embryo of a music-drama. The production of the work was admirable. Frau Wittich, as Salome, deserves high praise for her assumption of a difficult and not very grateful part. Herr Burrian impersonated Herodes, and Herr Peron, Jochanaan. Mention has already been made of Herr von Schuch, the conductor, and without wishing in any way to underrate the efforts of the dramatis persone, the fine orchestral playing was the most notable feature of the performance.

MUSICAL ASSOCIATION.

At the meeting on December 18, held at Messrs. Broadwood's, Mr. T. L. Southgate in the chair, Dr. E. W. Naylor read a paper on 'Some characteristics of Heinrich Schütz.' The lecturer divided his subject under four heads:

1. Rhetorical setting of words; 2. Dramatic expression;
3. Use of harmony in colour; 4. Chromatic harmony.

In regard to No. 1, attention was directed to 'Schütz's care to accent his words with intelligence and accuracy, so far as the natural stiffness of musical rhythm allows this to be done, coupled with a no less interesting tendency to let the course of the musical notes take the natural shape of ordinary speech.' This was exemplified by the duet for two tenors (published in 1636), 'Eins bitte ich vom Herren,' &c. (Psalm xxvii., v. 4). 'Dramatic expression' (2) was not only exemplified in the settings of the Passion, but in a particularly beautiful solo cantata for tenor voice and organ, 'O misericordissime Jesu,' of which every bar is worth close study. The cantata for two bass voices and organ 'Fürchte dich nicht' ('Be not afraid, I am with thee') was the first example given of No. 3, one which furnished 'a very remarkable instance of Schütz's constant endeavour to use harmony in a sense quite foreign to the general practice of his time.' Under the fourth heading Dr. Naylor gave several instances of Schütz's powerful use of chromatic harmony, one of which—in the cantata for a soprano and bass voice entitled

'Wann unsre Augen schlafen ein' (1639)—gave 'the general idea of physical sleep coming on, expressed by a slow descending chromatic passage,' in which 'his persistent faithfulness to the subject brings him to an extreme harmony which probably pleased him.'

Dr. Naylor concluded his remarks in the following words: 'Many things that I should wish to speak of are outside the limits of my plan. For instance, the noble six-part Litany, and its curious connection with the 'St. Luke' Passion, which has been ascribed (against all internal probability) to J. S. Bach; the numberless points of interest in Schütz's Passion settings, their connection with the medieval plain-song of the Cantus Passionis, and their probable influence over Bach; the orchestral work of Schütz; the historical position to be assigned to Schütz, his claim to a place in the direct line of our musical pedigree; and so forth.'

MR. CECIL SHARP ON FOLK-SONGS.

The persevering labours of Mr. Cecil Sharp are an object-lesson as to what can be done in the way of collecting folk-songs. On December 9 he lectured on this topic before the members and friends of the Tonic Sol-fa Association, Miss Lucy Broadwood, another skilful and enthusiastic collector, in the chair. In the course of his absorbingly interesting and highly entertaining address, Mr. Sharp stated that he had collected recently two hundred or more songs in Somersetshire alone. Some of these are published in the Journal of the Folk-Song Society (No. 6), and many were sung on this occasion by Miss Mattie Kay. In the Journal several variants heard of the same song are printed, and the lecturer boldly applies the doctrines of evolution to explain the adoption of final forms (if there are any). He thinks that many of the existing tunes began with mere inflection, and that gradually, in the course of generations, they have assumed their existing form. So we have geometrical increase, constant variation, struggles for existence, and survival of the fittest—the communally made tune, embodying the rhythmic and tonal likings of the race and district.

Whatever one's opinion may be as to this philosophy, there can be no doubt that if we owe the tune to the commune, the present larger commune is in turn deeply indebted to Mr. Sharp for his devotion to the task of noting down. It is not given to everybody to combine the pachydermatous spirit and insidious 'bedside' manner demanded in order to induce the old folks to sing, with the skill to quickly write down queer modal tunes in queerer rhythms, and set sometimes to highly embarrassing words. All who desire to help the collecting movement should join the Folk-Song Society. Miss Lucy Broadwood, 84, Carlisle Mansions, Victoria Street, Westminster, is the Honorary Secretary.

PATRON'S FUND CONCERT.

The fifth concert of the Royal College of Music Patron's Fund consisted of chamber music, and took place on December 13 at Bechstein Hall, the occasion being honoured by the presence of Princess Louise. No fewer than seventy-two works had been sent in for performance, of which sixteen were recommended for rehearsal. Of the composers represented at the concert Messrs. Bath, Farjeon and Bowen were trained at the Royal Academy of Music; Messrs. Dunhill, Hart, Shaw and Walthew at the Royal College of Music; Mr. Speight at the Guildhall School; Mr. Watling at the Royal Normal College for the Blind; Mr. Nicholls studied privately at Liverpool; and Miss Davenport and Miss Jennings also came under the head of 'private tuition.' It is worthy of record that the two composers last named are the first ladies to gain a hearing at these concerts. They each did so on the strength of their songs, Miss Davenport contributing graceful music to some poetical lines entitled 'Between sleep and waking,' and Miss Jennings a dramatic setting of 'Helen of Kirkconnell.' Other songs were 'Margery,' by Mr. Fritz B. Hart; a group of three, entitled 'Songs of sun and shade,' by Mr. Fred C. Nicholls; 'Never-Ever,' by Mr. Hubert Bath; 'Death Song,' by Mr. Martin Shaw; and three of Kipling's 'Jungle Songs,' set by Mr. Harry Farjeon. All these, though well written and showing merit, can scarcely be said to possess distinction.

The most important instrumental work was a Quartet in B minor for pianoforte and strings, by Mr. T. F. Dunhill, which gained the prize of £20 offered last spring by Mr. Lesley Alexander. This is a sanely imaginative and brightly conceived composition, built up with melodious themes which are treated in an interesting and effective manner. Next in importance was a Sonata in D for two pianofortes by Mr. York Bowen, by whom, with the co-operation of Mr. Claude Gascoigne, it was excellently rendered. This work is also full of melody, spirit and significance, and is a welcome addition to the somewhat limited repertory of pieces written for two pianofortes. Four lyrical pieces for string quartet, by Mr. R. H. Walthew, proved light music of attractive, if not distinguished character. A 'Lament' and 'Caprice' by Mr. Joseph Speaight were rendered by Miss V. Warwick-Evans, and Mr. Horace Watling played his Five Preludes for the pianoforte, one of which, in D flat, possessed originality. Although the concert did not discover a wandering genius, the works testified to prevalence of artistic taste and good musicianship. The vocalists were Mrs. Mackenzie Fairfax, and Messrs. Seth Hughes, H. Greeves Johnson and Horatio Connell, and in addition to the players on stringed instruments above mentioned were Messrs. Frank Bridge, Charles Warwick-Evans, William Armstrong and Ivor James. Miss Clara Smith accompanied the vocal numbers with taste and judgment.

OLD PROGRAMME MUSIC.

A remarkable example of old programme music was performed, probably for the first time in London, on December 12, at the third of Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton's chamber concerts at Messrs. Broadwood's. This was a Quartet for two violins, violoncello and clavier, entitled 'L'Apothéose de l'Incomparable Lulli,' published in 1725 by François Couperin, who has left on record that 'the work is intended to be a homage to the memory of the immortal Lully rather than a harmonious panegyric.' The composer also says that he wrote the quartet 'with a view to lessen the prejudices of those who only know Lulli's works by name.'

The composition comprises the formidable number of sixteen movements, and each is furnished with an explanation of the composer's intentions. The first, directed to be played gravement, is headed 'Lulli at the Champs-Élysées discoursing with the lyrical shades,' the gravity of which is contrasted by a graceful section entitled 'Melody to the lyrical shades.' Short bustling passages describe 'The flight of Mercury to the Champs-Élysées to give warning that Apollo is about to descend.' The next portion is descriptive of 'The descent of Apollo, who comes to offer his violin to Lulli, and a place on Parnassus.' This movement contains solo passages for the first violin, presumably representative of the god of beauty. After this the strings busy themselves with 'Subterranean rumblings caused by Lulli's contemporary composers,' contrasted with further 'complaints of the contemporaries' suggested by quavering violin passages at the top of the scale. To these extremes succeed a brief, naïve and rapid section headed 'The carrying off of Lulli to Parnassus,' and a subsequent Largo sets forth 'The enthusiastic welcome given to Lulli on his arrival by Corelli and the Italian Muses.' 'Gracieusement, Lulli expresses his thanks to Apollo.' 'Élégamment sans lenteur, Apollo persuades Lulli and Corelli that the union of the Italian and French tastes must bring perfection to music.' In an Allegretto, 'Lulli then plays a solo to Corelli's accompaniment,' and 'Même mouvement, Corelli plays a solo to Lulli's accompaniment.' After these interchanges of courtesies there comes a dignified number descriptive of 'The peace of Parnassus which is made perfect through the union of the Italian and French styles,' and this remarkable composition concludes with a Finale in three sections, 'Illustrating the sublime harmony and joy produced on Parnassus through the union of the Italian and French tastes.'

The work was well rendered by the concert-givers, assisted by Mr. Edward Underhill and Mr. Ivor James, but Miss Sunderland should have played her part on a harpsichord, for in such a naïve composition the tone of a Broadwood grand sounded strangely incongruous. There were several other interesting works in the programme, including a Concerto for two violins, violoncello and clavier in five movements, alternately quick and slow, by Evaristo Felice dall' Abaco (1675-1742), a famous violinist and composer, who spent the greater part of his life at Modena, Munich and finally at Brussels where, on the restoration of the government in 1715, he was appointed concert-meister.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Under the direction of the principal, Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the pupils of the Royal Academy of Music gave an orchestral and vocal concert at Queen's Hall on December 15. A pleasing novelty was a set of three Indian songs, severally entitled 'Before the dawn,' 'Surf song,' and 'Korean song,' by Mr. Hubert Bath (Goring Thomas Scholar), which were effectively sung by Miss Hantke and Mr. Marcus Thomson. Another pleasing performance was Miss Hatchard and Mr. John Bardsley's rendering of the charming Dream Scene from the Principal's 'Rose of Sharon.' Mention is also due of Miss Isobel Mearns, who sang an excerpt from Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah,' and of Mr. Denis Creedon, to whom was intrusted Handel's amorous air 'Love in her eyes.' Two pianists appeared, Miss Myra Hess and Miss Gladys Vandamm, the former playing with such delicacy and spirit in Grieg's Concerto as to excite enthusiastic applause. Miss Gladys Clark also showed great promise in Tchaikovsky's violin Concerto.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Mozart's 'Marriage of Figaro' was a formidable undertaking for the young people at Kensington; but students will enter where prime donne fear to tread, and although it must be admitted that the performance on December 7 at His Majesty's Theatre clearly demonstrated the limitations of the youthful exponents, yet there was so much ability shown, and the study and rehearsing must have been so educational to the young folk, that the attempt was fully justified. In particular, intelligence and aptitude were shown by Miss Alice E. S. Moffat as Cherubino, and dramatic intuition is manifestly possessed by Miss Eva M. Brown and Miss Mabel Gillender, who severally appeared as Susanna and Marcellina. Miss T. M. Lightfoot also sang well as the Countess; Mr. Robert P. Chignell was an alert and vivacious Figaro, and the other male characters were fairly well sustained by Messrs. F. A. Millward, J. H. Foster, B. Merlin Davies, D. Byndon-Ayres, and A. H. Wynn. The chorus-singing was delightfully fresh in tone and full of life, and, as usual, the orchestra played with exhilarating verve under Sir Charles V. Stanford's inspiring leadership.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The chief feature of the orchestral concert given at the City of London School by the pupils of the Guildhall School of Music on December 13 was the intelligent and fluent pianoforte playing by Miss Gertrude Meller in Rubinstein's Concerto in D minor (Op. 70). This young lady, a pupil of Mr. Francesco Berger, should with further study win for herself an esteemed position in her art. Proofs of judicious cultivation of natural talent were given also by Miss Eva M. Calton and Mr. C. Freeman Chatfield, the former singing Gluck's 'Divinités du Styx,' and the latter the air 'But who may abide?' from 'The Messiah.' The orchestral works were well chosen, consisting of Goetz's 'Frühlings' overture, a picturesque MS. entr'acte entitled 'Cloten,' by Thane, and the overture to Gounod's 'Le médecin malgré lui.' Dr. W. H. Cummings conducted with his usual care.

'Sailors' Songs and Chanties' formed the theme of a capital and somewhat novel lecture delivered by Mr. Frank Kidson, a well-informed expert on the subject, before the St. George's Literary Society, Southport, on December 12. The musical illustrations—which included eight folk-songs, harmonized and arranged for the occasion by Mrs. Gilchrist—were a delightful feature of a most enjoyable evening.

PUBLIC SCHOOL CONCERTS.

UPPINGHAM.

The oratorio music selected for the Christmas concert on December 19 was from the first part of Handel's 'Samson.' The second part of the programme included Stanford's 'The Revenge,' Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony, Mozart's violin Concerto in D, and 'Football Song,' one of Mr. David's 'Uppingham School Songs.' The School orchestra is in its usually efficient condition; the choir has never been heard to such advantage as in 'The Revenge' at this concert. The concert gave the greatest pleasure to all present; it is the first occasion on which Mr. Paul David has been heard in the magnificent concert-room lately opened in his honour. As an encore he played a movement from a suite by Bach, accompanied by a few strings. The National Anthem brought the evening to a close.

CLIFTON COLLEGE.

The usual Christmas concert, on December 18, was of unusual interest in that Mr. Plunket Greene, an Old Cliftonian, re-appeared at his alma mater in the capacity of a performer. He sang the 'Songs of the sea,' written by Mr. Henry Newbolt, another Old Cliftonian, who also was present; and Sir Charles Stanford, the composer of the music, personally conducted the performance. There was naturally a scene of great enthusiasm, to which the presence of some hundreds of Old Cliftonians materially contributed. They were gathered at the back of the hall, and helped the School in the gallery to insist on the repetition of 'Devon, O Devon'—it will be remembered that Clifton is in the 'West countree'—and 'The Old Superb.'

The other items in the programme were by no means overshadowed in interest by the central feature. For instance two boys of twelve played a duet (by Goltermann) for pianoforte and violoncello, which resulted in a performance of exceptional merit; and other instrumental performances by older boys maintained a high level of excellence. The School Choral Society sang Stanford's madrigal, 'Shall we go dance?' Elgar's part-song, 'Weary wind of the west,' and a part-song, 'Old age and youth,' written and composed by Mr. R. O. Beachcroft, one of the masters, in a way that testified to the excellent training of Mr. A. H. Peppin, who is to be heartily congratulated on the success of a most enjoyable concert.

BERKHAMSTED.

The School concert was held in the Town Hall, Berkhamsted, on December 16, when as usual the programme opened with the Latin 'Carmen Berkhamstediense,' whose stately alcaics, set to fitting music, always form a feature of the evening. Then followed Stanford's 'The Revenge,' performed by the School orchestra and glee club, numbering together upwards of one hundred performers. In the interpretation of this work the attacks were faultless, and the finish left little to be desired by whatever standard such achievements may be judged, especially when it is borne in mind that all the voices were those of boys—assisted, of course, by a few masters—indeed, the performance must be described as excellent in every way, and highly creditable to all concerned. Great praise must be given to the School orchestra, not only for the admirable way in which they supported the chorus, but for their rendering of Cowen's 'Four English dances' and Elgar's 'Salut d'amour.'

The instrumental solo pieces included Grieg's 'Trolldtoj' (pianoforte), the second movement of Moffatt's Concertino in A minor, and Boccherini's Minuet in A (violin). The glee club and orchestra gave a capital rendering of the 'Tannhäuser' march, and the School Song—sung by the captain of the School (G. M. G. Wyatt), the whole School joining in the chorus—brought a particularly successful concert to an end.

Mr. J. T. Bavin, the organist and music-master of the School, deserved the hearty cheers given for him at the conclusion of the concert, for he is entitled to feel proud of his glee club and orchestra, and indeed of the school music generally.

At the Public Library Hall, Stoke Newington, on December 16, Mr. T. R. Croger delivered an interesting lecture entitled 'Stringed Instruments used in the modern orchestra.'

CRYSTAL PALACE CONCERTS.

Two Saturday afternoon concerts at the Crystal Palace call for comment. On December 9, Mr. Walter Hedgcock conducted the London Symphony Orchestra and the Crystal Palace choir. Crisp and expressive performances were given of Sullivan's 'Macbeth' overture and Beethoven's pianoforte Concerto in C minor, with Miss Norah Drewett as soloist; and the choir sang with admirable precision in Dvorák's picturesque cantata 'The spectre's bride.' The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Thomas Meux.

On December 16 the London Symphony Orchestra played under the direction of Mr. Landon Ronald, but although the programme contained Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony and Schumann's pianoforte Concerto, with Miss Fanny Davies as the soloist par excellence in the latter work, only a small, though highly appreciative audience assembled. The novelty in the programme was a symphonic poem entitled 'St. George's,' by Mr. George Dorlay, who, judging by his music, is a disciple of Richard Strauss. From this it will be surmised that the warlike tendencies of St. George are dwelt upon with unsparing vigour and that the brass is much called upon to emphasise his exploits. If Mr. Dorlay's discretion had been as great as his valour his work would not have been so coldly received, for manifestly he has a lively imagination.

THE 'DREAM OF GERONTIUS' AT CARDIFF.

Much credit is due to the Cardiff Musical Society for their excellent performance of Sir Edward Elgar's familiar work, at the Park Hall, on December 6. The choir sang with vigour and an intelligent appreciation of the subject, the effect of the chorus 'In Thy hands, O Lord,' and the 'Demon' chorus, being especially good, and the semi-chorus kept the pitch perfectly. Excellent work also was done by the orchestra, and Mr. T. E. Aylward conducted skilfully. The solo vocalists, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. Evan Williams, and Mr. Ivor Foster gave highly satisfactory interpretations of their parts, and the entire performance bore the stamp of artistic success.

The following deaths, of recent occurrence, have to be placed on record:

Mr. Edmund Whytehead Howson, on December 11, aged 50, an assistant-master and a house-master at Harrow School. Mr. Howson was the author of the words of many Harrow School songs, including 'Five hundred faces,' 'Play up,' 'Ducker,' and 'Stet fortuna domus.'

Mr. Samuel Crowther Eyre, a well-known Cheshire musician, aged seventy-two, and for fifty-three years organist of Congleton Parish Church.

Mr. Henry Holmes, at San Francisco, aged sixty-six, a distinguished violinist formerly resident in London.

London and Suburban Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Sir Charles Stanford's splendid choral ballad 'The Revenge,' and Sullivan's popular cantata 'The Golden Legend,' formed a selection that could scarcely fail to draw a large audience to the Albert Hall on December 7; moreover, the Royal Choral Society, apparently encouraged by the animated appearance of the house and the emphatic manifestations of the appreciation of the audience, sang with more than usual verve. The performance of 'The Revenge' was particularly good, even the instrumental portion sounding effective, a rare result at the Albert Hall. The soloists in 'The Golden Legend' were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Emily Foxcroft, and Messrs. Ben Davies, Dalton Baker, and Bertram Mills. Mr. Balfour presided at the organ with his customary skill and judgment, and Sir Frederick Bridge conducted with enthusiasm.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted symphony concerts at Queen's Hall on December 2 and 16. On both these occasions he submitted excellent programmes and secured finished performances that bore witness to his interpretative gifts. An interesting feature of the first concert was Mozart's Adagio and Fugue in C minor for strings, the Adagio being written for the adaptation of the fugue, originally composed for two pianofortes. This old-world piece was as excellently rendered as Dvorák's symphony, 'From the new world,' but the Largo of the latter was taken a shade too slowly. Mr. Busoni elected to be heard in Liszt's rarely-performed Concerto in A minor, and gave a wonderful display of virtuosity. The programme was completed with the 'Euryanthe' overture.

Beethoven's ever-fresh overture, 'Leonora' (No. 3), opened the concert on December 16. To it succeeded a beautiful and devotional rendering by Miss Ada Crossley of the 'Inflammatus' from Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' a work which should be heard again in our concert-rooms. Schubert's great Symphony in C and Rimsky-Korsakov's 'Capriccio Espagnol' completed an enjoyable programme.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

DECEMBER 11.

Requiem (Op. 45) .. .. . Brahms.
Four serious songs (Op. 121) .. .. .
Cantata—'The North-East wind' .. .. . Frederic Cliffe.

It was most regrettable that this courageous Society had to present the above important programme with maimed resources to one of the smallest audiences we have ever seen in Queen's Hall. A dense fog made it physically impossible for many of the choir to be present. Yet, notwithstanding these depressing conditions, we have to record a highly creditable performance of the Requiem and of Mr. Cliffe's exhilarating cantata. Brahms's noble and deeply-impressive work had evidently been conscientiously studied by both choir and conductor. It may be hoped that the Society will be able to repeat the performance under more favourable conditions. The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White and Mr. Kennerley Rumford. The 'Four serious songs' were performed with an orchestral accompaniment (by Herr Robert Schwalm, of Berlin) for the first time in this country. They were splendidly sung by Mr. Rumford, and roused the audience, fit though few, to extraordinary enthusiasm. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted throughout with spirit and decision.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

DECEMBER 14.

Concerto in G major (Brandenburger Concerto) No. 3 .. .. . Bach.
Symphony in D major, No. 2 .. .. . Brahms.
Violin Concerto in G minor .. .. . Max Bruch.
Solo Violin—M. Achille Rivarde.
Symphonic poem, 'Till Eulenspiegel' .. .. . R. Strauss.
Conductor, Herr Fritz Steinbach.

In pursuance of the plan of this Orchestra to engage various eminent conductors in turn, the above programme was given under the baton of Herr Steinbach. It goes without saying that the playing was magnificent. The Bach Concerto for strings was performed with amazing spirit and delicacy. It was curious to note how the faces of the audience beamed with pleasure and keen interest at the buoyant beauty of the music and the brilliancy of the execution. Steinbach is in his element with Brahms, and was able to secure the finest performance of the 2nd Symphony we, at least, have ever heard. M. Rivarde played the Concerto with considerable beauty of tone and expression. The Strauss symphonic poem received a fine interpretation and occasioned the usual mystification on the part of those in the audience who have not yet grown Strauss-ears.

The St. Margaret's Musical Society (Westminster) gave a patriotic concert at the Royal Horticultural Hall on November 28, when the programme included Elgar's 'Banner of St. George,' Sullivan's 'King Arthur,' and Stanford's 'The Revenge.' The Rev. Jocelyn Perkins conducted.

A novel feature in the performance of Handel's 'Samson,' at the Bermondsey Settlement on November 30, was the dramatic treatment of the vocal parts, both choral and solo. The principals made entries and exits as on the stage, in accordance with the requirements of the plot, instead of sitting in a line throughout the evening, and the conversational portions of the recitatives were addressed from character to character, instead of to the audience, with great gain to their intelligibility. 'Samson' lends itself well to this treatment, because Handel's conception of the solo parts was consistent in characterization. The orchestra was Handelian in constitution, with doubled hautboys, bassoons and trumpets, Miss Bertha Murray being the principal violinist and Mrs. J. E. Borland providing the necessary filling up of the figured bass, and accompanying the recitativo secco. The performance was under the able direction of Mr. John E. Borland.

Mr. Alfred Hobday and Miss Ethel Sharpe gave an interesting viola and pianoforte recital on December 1 at Æolian Hall. The programme included a Sonata in C minor by the Russian composer M. A. Winkler, a well-written and melodious work, and Mr. Cecil Forsyth's 'Chanson Celtique,' both of which were excellently played and manifestly pleased their listeners. The fine singing of Miss Agnes Nicholls in songs by Brahms and Strauss greatly increased the enjoyment of the afternoon.

Miss Nora McKay, a clever young Australian violinist, made an exceptionally favourable impression by the sensitiveness and brilliancy of her playing at Bechstein Hall on December 1. Her programme included Corelli's 'Variations Sérieuses,' Max Bruch's 'Scotch' Fantasia, Bach's Sonata in G minor, and Beethoven's Romance in G. Miss McKay's interpretations testified to artistic intuition no less than to a reliable technique.

Miss Neill Fraser sang with finish and refinement at her recital, at Bechstein Hall, on December 1. Her contralto voice is well produced and manifestly dominated by a musical temperament, and her programme bore witness to wide reading and good taste. Variety was given by the singing of M. Leon Zagury, and Miss Jessie Morris, a young violinist, played several solos with notable skill.

Madame Bernice de Pasquali, who gave her first recital in London at Bechstein Hall on December 2, has a highly cultivated and flexible soprano voice of beautiful quality, and her rendering of Delibes's 'Bell song' and the 'Mad scene' from Ambroise Thomas's 'Hamlet' delighted her listeners.

Mr. Horatio Connell's vocal recital at Æolian Hall, on December 4, was thoroughly artistic in conception and execution. The English songs included Roger Quilter's settings of 'O mistress mine,' 'Blow, blow, thou winter wind,' and 'As the gloaming shadows creep,' by Mr. MacDowell.

Messrs. Fryer, Neumann and Walenn, continuing their Trio Concerts at Steinway Hall, on December 4 gave praiseworthy renderings of Schubert's Trio in B flat (Op. 99) and Smetana's Trio in G minor (Op. 15). Both works were pleasantly diversified by songs contributed by Miss Marie Busch.

Miss Marjory Sherwin, the daughter of a lawyer in Batavia, New York State, and a pupil of Professor Sevcik, made her first appearance in England at an orchestral concert conducted by Mr. Arthur W. Payne, on December 5, at Queen's Hall. In common with those who have studied under the famous violin teacher, Miss Sherwin plays with certainty and fluency, combined with a refined style and a sweet womanliness of expression in her readings. Miss Sherwin played concertos by Dvorák and Vieuxtemps.

Mr. Adolf Rebner's violin recitals at Bechstein Hall on December 5 and 12 entitle him to an estimable position in the artistic world.

The Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society, under the joint direction of Mr. Arthur W. Payne and Mr. Munro Davison, gave an excellent concert on December 6. The programme included Svendsen's little-known 'Norwegian Artists' Carnival' (Op. 14), a bright example by the Norwegian composer, chiefly in the rhythm of the Polacca. The male-voice choir gave expressive renderings of Walter Macfarren's 'Autumn,' Marenzio's 'Lady! see on every side,' Flemming's 'Integer vizio,' and Mackenzie's merry part-song 'Great Orpheus was a fiddler.' The soloists were Miss Evangeline Anthony and Miss Cecilia Owen.

Miss Lily Crawforth, a lady from Nottingham gifted with a mezzo-soprano voice of considerable power and rich quality, made a successful début in London on December 7 at Bechstein Hall. Her programme contained songs in various styles, and much versatility was shown in their interpretation. Miss Jessie Morris, a clever young violinist from Bolton, played several pieces in an enjoyable manner.

At Messrs. Lionel Tertis and York Bowen's viola and pianoforte recital at Bechstein Hall on December 11 was played for the first time a Sonata in E minor by Mr. W. H. Bell, and a Romance in D flat by Mr. York Bowen, for pianoforte and viola, both most attractive works. The sonata, consisting of three movements, the second of which is particularly expressive, is a valuable addition to the limited repertory of the viola, and the romance is full of poetic feeling and significance. Another novelty was a charming little song entitled 'Love's but a dance,' by Mr. J. B. McEwen, sung by Miss Ethel Lister.

Mr. Karl Klein, the young American violinist, who, it may be remembered, made his first appearance in London at an orchestral concert at Queen's Hall on November 14, gave a violin recital at Bechstein Hall on December 11, when he introduced a genial and effective Sonata in B minor (Op. 3) for violin and pianoforte by his father, Mr. Bruno Oscar Klein, and also a violin solo and three songs by himself, sung by Miss Hilda de Angelis. Mr. Karl Klein was assisted by his father in the sonata.

Miss Adelina Leon, a pupil of Mr. Paul Ludwig, and subsequently of Mr. W. E. Whitehouse at the Royal College of Music, gave a violoncello recital at Bechstein Hall on December 13, and by purity of tone and executive address in Saint-Saëns's Concerto in A minor, not only reflected great credit on her teachers, but gave proof of artistic intelligence and musical perception.

In the December issue mention was inadvertently omitted of a pianoforte recital given by Mr. York Bowen on November 14 at Bechstein Hall—a music-making which merits record, not only on account of the brilliant playing by this gifted young musician, but because the programme included a Sonata in E minor by Mr. J. B. McEwen, a dignified and expressive work that deserves wide recognition. Mr. Bowen's selection also comprised a Sonata in D, by Mr. B. J. Dale, which, notwithstanding some reflections of Chopin and Grieg, possesses originality. Pleasing variety was contributed by the tasteful singing of Miss Ethel Lister.

RICHMOND.

The Richmond New Philharmonic Society gave their seventh concert at the Castle Rooms on December 6. An attractive and varied programme was presented, its chief features consisting of Cowen's popular cantata 'John Gilpin' and the first performance of a ballad for chorus and orchestra entitled 'Forging the Anchor,' a spirited and effective composition by Mr. J. Hullah Brown, which was very favourably received. Other items of interest were Elgar's 'Serenade' for string orchestra and Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite. Miss Estella Linden was the vocalist, and Mr. Albert Fransella played part of Mozart's Concerto in D for flute. Mr. James Brown conducted.

The Richmond Philharmonic Society's choral and orchestral concert took place at the 'Star and Garter' Hotel on December 14, when Mendelssohn's 'Athalie' occupied the first part of the programme. Coleridge-Taylor's choral ballad, 'Loud he sang the Psalm of David,' and Stanford's 'Songs of the sea' were also given. The solo vocalists were Miss Isabel Tait, Miss Norah Bolt, Miss Esther Franklin and Mr. C. Stewart Gardner, and Mr. A. E. Buckhurst read the connecting verses in 'Athalie.' There was a complete orchestra and chorus, and Dr. Charles E. Jolley conducted.

Elgar's 'King Olaf' was excellently performed by the East Finchley and Muswell Hill Musical Society at the East Finchley Lecture Hall on November 30. The choir, under the able direction of Mr. G. R. Ceiley, sang with intelligent appreciation of the dramatic qualities of the work, and the orchestra gave an excellent rendering of the accompaniments. The principal vocalists were Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Fred Hard.

At the opening concert of the Clapham Choral Society on December 12, the first performance in England was given of Christian Sinding's cantata 'An die Heimat.' The solo vocalist (Mr. Percy Banks), pianist (Mr. Percy Wilson) and chorus co-operated in giving an excellent rendering of the work, which was conducted by Mr. Walter Mackway.

The pupils of Mrs. Hutchinson gave evidence of good training at their concert on December 1.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

VIENNA, December 15, 1905.

It is thoroughly seasonable for the Singakademie, the oldest choral society of Vienna, to perform Bach's 'Christmas Oratorio' shortly before Christmas. But as in our Catholic country church concerts on a grand scale are not possible, the performance has to take place as usual in the larger concert hall, where such a work never finds the right atmosphere. The conductor was Herr Carl Lafitte, and the soloists were Frau Bricht, Frau Waldberg, Herr Söser and Herr Mach; the last-named, to whom was assigned the bass part, was by far the best. The choral music was fortunately rendered by the same choir which had already distinguished itself in Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius'; and under its excellent conductor Franz Schalk it roused the enthusiasm of the audience to the highest pitch by a spirited performance of the difficult a capella motet for double choir, 'Sing to the Lord a new song.' One felt the power of Bach's intellect, and the importance of strong religious feeling for art which is true, pure and lasting.

The performance of Gustav Mahler's new (fifth) symphony was a sensation of the highest order. This work, laid out on a grand scale, consists of five sections; first a funeral march, then an impassioned movement, a kind of Scherzo based on waltz-like themes, a taking Adagietto, and a lively and brilliant Finale. The composer conducted, and at the close there were loud demonstrations of approval, a tribute to the magnificent rendering of the work no less than to the composer.

As a preparation for the forthcoming Mozart Festival, Mahler has had Mozart's 'Cosi fan tutte' studied anew, and the connoisseurs of the theatre can imagine no nobler, purer enjoyment than to listen to this opera, now over 120 years old. He also took note of the hundredth anniversary of the birth of Beethoven's 'Fidelio,' and conducted on that day (November 20) a perfectly ideal performance of the work.

Some new compositions were produced under the direction of Löwe. Smetana's characteristic 'Blaník' created a good impression, although it is not equal to the other sections of the cycle 'Mein Vaterland.' Dohnányi, in spite of his youth, is one of the first artists of the day. He played for the first time his pianoforte Concerto in E minor, and created astonishment and admiration. His work showed maturity combined with youthful freshness. A young countryman of his, Bela Bartók, proved himself a composer gifted with imagination in an interesting orchestral suite pulsating with Hungarian life. An orchestral ballad, 'Heinzelmännchen,' by Hans Pfitzner, was performed, and a similar piece, 'Fingerhütchen,' by Jul. Weismann, both of the programme or descriptive order.

Of the numerous virtuosi that have appeared, mention may be made of Ondricek, on account of his interesting programme. It included Richard Strauss's violin Concerto and a new work of the same kind by Hermann Grädener. Both concertos were better appreciated by musicians and amateurs than by the general public, who are not accustomed to regard virtuosi as serious composers. Max Reger gave a concert of his music which appeals strongly to the public; his Lieder are becoming day by day more widely known. The vocalist, Frl. Rahn, is an accomplished artist. Max Reger, assisted by the excellent pianist Henrik Melcer, played his Variations for two pianofortes on a theme from one of Beethoven's Bagatelles.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Dr. Walford Davies's cantata 'Everyman' was performed by the Festival Choral Society in the Town Hall on November 23, and caused an extraordinary impression. The vocal principals were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. James Horncastle, and Mr. Dalton Baker, who all did well. The choral singing was exceptionally fine, and the band played admirably. Mr. Perkins at the organ and Dr. Sinclair as conductor were at their best. At the close the composer was enthusiastically 'called.'

On December 7, the City Choral Society's second concert had for programme Elgar's 'King Olaf,' Stanford's 'Songs of the sea,' and a miscellaneous selection. Elgar's fine cantata had only once been heard in Birmingham—in 1898—and its revival attracted a very large audience. The soloists were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Charles Tree. The performance all through was of great excellence, especially in regard to the work of the chorus, and the band faithfully interpreted the score. Mr. F. W. Beard conducted with care and skill. Vocal solos were contributed by Mr. Plunket Greene, Mrs. Henry J. Wood, and Mr. John Coates; in addition to the Triumphal Procession scene from Elgar's 'Caractacus,' which created a furore.

The third Halford concert took place on December 5, when the programme contained Schubert's overture 'Alfonso and Estrella,' Max Bruch's violin Concerto in G minor, the symphonic poem 'Paradise lost,' by Clement Harris, and Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony. Much interest attached to the work of the young English composer who was killed in the Greek war against Turkey in 1897. 'Paradise lost' contains some really fine music. Professor Arno Hilf, of Leipzig, was the violinist, and his playing was much admired, and Miss Dorothea Spinney was the vocalist. At the fourth concert, December 19, Grieg's Suite, 'Sigurd Jorsalfar,' Goldmark's Symphony in E flat, No. 2 (first time here), and Beethoven's overture, 'Leonora' No. 3, were performed. A youthful violinist, Master Vivian Burrows, was the soloist in Paganini's Concerto in D, as arranged by Wilhelmj, and Mr. Dan Godfrey, of Bournemouth, conducted the first part of the programme, Mr. Halford taking the Beethoven overture, the great feature of the concert. The boy performer has been prominent in Birmingham.

Mr. Landon Ronald gave an orchestral concert in the Town Hall on December 14. The programme consisted chiefly of familiar pieces, given by request. New to Birmingham were the conductor's overture 'A Birthday,' well written and brilliantly played; and scena for baritone, 'The Lament of Shah Jehan,' finely sung by Mr. Kennerley Rumford. Mr. Max Mossel fairly excelled himself as soloist in Max Bruch's violin Concerto in G minor, and Mr. Ronald won golden opinions as conductor.—The Amateur Orchestral Society gave a concert to the members of the Midland Institute on December 11. Mr. C. E. Pritchard, who has succeeded Mr. Granville Bantock as conductor, made his first appearance in that capacity. J. D. Davis's suite for small orchestra, 'Miniatures,' and Mozart's overture 'Der Schauspieldirektor,' were novelties here. Mendelssohn's G minor Concerto for pianoforte, with Mrs. Sydney Grew as soloist, was to many in the audience a welcome revival.

On December 9, a student concert of the Institute School of Music gave scope for a number of young artists to distinguish themselves, Mr. Julius A. Harrison again figuring as a composer, with a rhapsody for pianoforte, and some songs.—The popular Saturday evening concerts in the Town Hall have been chiefly choral. On November 25 the Choral and Orchestral Association (conductor, Mr. J. H. Adams) revived Handel's 'Samson,' with the principal parts taken by Miss Laura Taylor, Miss Eunice Fowler, and Messrs. J. Hanson, N. Bishop, and W. Evans. Band and chorus were good, and with Mr. Perkins at the organ an excellent performance was given.—December 9 witnessed an admirable rendering of 'Elijah' by the Midland Musical Society (conducted by Mr. A. J. Cotton), with Miss Laura Taylor, Miss M. Gell, and Messrs. J. W. Othey and Arthur Walenn as principals.—On December 16 the Choral Union (conductor, Mr. Thomas Facer) gave a concert recital of 'Maritana,' when Miss Eleanor Coward (daughter of Dr. Henry Coward) made a successful début here. With her were associated Miss M. Gell, Mr. John Child, Mr. Charles Knowles, and Mr. Arthur Dunn.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The annual concert of the Bristol Æolian Male Choir, held in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association on November 29, possessed a special significance as the choir had been established twenty years. Accordingly the programme was made up of a selection from the pieces which the members had given during that period. Mr. F. H. Simpson conducted, and upon the platform were Mr. J. J. Robins, who was the first conductor of the choir, and Mr. G. A. Sleight, who succeeded him in that office. A large audience appeared gratified with the glees and part-songs rendered. Miss Amy Perry and Miss Clara Aldersley contributed some songs and Mr. E. Atherstone Cox played pianoforte solos.

At Colston Hall on December 2, a concert rendering of Gounod's 'Faust' was given under the direction of Mr. George Riseley. Madame Melba sang effectively the music of Margarita; and the other soloists were members of the Moody-Manners opera company, including Mr. Wilson Pembroke as Faust, and Mr. Charles Manners as Mephistopheles. Band and chorus numbered 500 performers, and the performance afforded satisfaction to a crowded audience.

Bristol North Choral Society, on December 2, held its first concert for the season at the Victoria Rooms, the principal features in the programme being Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' and Sir Hubert Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens.' The choir numbered about 250 voices, and the soloists were Miss Maud Waite and Mr. Lloyd Chandos. Mr. F. S. Gardner led the orchestra, and Mr. J. Bending conducted.

The Bristol Harmonic Male Choir gave a concert in the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association on December 4, and under the direction of Mr. J. Jenkins interpreted several glees with success. Mr. Haydn Gunter played with acceptance some violin solos.

There was a gratifying performance of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' by the Philharmonic Society of Clevedon on December 6, at the Public Hall. The soloists were Miss Ida Hinde, Miss Elsie Webb, Mr. Francis Wensley, and Mr. Robert Burchill (of Bristol Cathedral). A small band was led by Mr. F. S. Gardner, the conductor being Mr. Edward Cook, of Bristol.

Weston-super-Mare Philharmonic Society gave a concert on December 7, at the Knightstone Pavilion. The works performed—Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Bach's 'A stronghold sure'—were efficiently presented under the direction of Mr. Edward Cook. The principal vocalists were Miss Fanny Chetham, Miss Mildred Hern, Mr. Evan Williams, and Mr. Charles Knowles. The band, largely composed of Bristol players, had Mr. F. S. Gardner for leader, Mr. W. Darby being at the organ.

At the Parish Hall, Shirehampton, on December 12, a concert was given, at which Mr. Frederic Austin sang several songs and the Avonmouth Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. W. Powell, assisted. Mr. P. Napier Miles, who is president of the Society, played effectively Beethoven's pianoforte Sonata in E minor (Op. 90), and there was also a performance of Brahms's pianoforte Quartet in G minor (Op. 25), by Messrs. P. Napier Miles (pianoforte), Hubert Hunt (violin), Ernest Lane (viola), and R. Le Duc Bucknall (violoncello).

There was a large attendance at the Clifton chamber concert, on December 14, at the Victoria Rooms. The principal work performed, Glazounow's string Quintet in A (Op. 39), was carefully played by Messrs. Maurice Alexander, Hubert Hunt, Ernest Lane, Percy Lewis, and B. J. Beilby. An excellent interpretation was given, by Mr. Herbert Parsons, of Schumann's pianoforte Fantasia in C (Op. 17), the other instrumental work being Haydn's Quartet in D minor (Op. 76, No. 2). The vocalist was Miss Florence Bulleid.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Orpheus Choral Society gave its first concert for the season on November 28. Dr. Culwick conducted his admirably balanced choir in a choice selection of madrigals and part-songs, including Pearsall's 'Sir Patrick Spens,' Walmisley's 'Sweete floweres,' choral glee, 'Daybreak' (Culwick), and 'The bells of St. Michael's tower' (Stewart). Miss Nan Stack and Mr. Robert Harrison were the solo vocalists, and Miss Eldina Bligh the solo violinist.

Mr. Vincent O'Brien's Choral Society performed Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' at the Rotunda, with full band and chorus, on December 7. Mr. Barton McGuckin and some local artists were the soloists.

The newly-formed Amateur Operatic and Choral Society made its début at the concert given on December 14. Mr. Barton McGuckin is the conductor of the Society, which has started well. In addition to a selection of choruses, including Mozart's 'Ave verum,' Mendelssohn's 'Judge me, O God,' and Hecht's 'Charge of the Light Brigade,' two selections for solos and chorus were given from 'Faust' and 'Carmen.' Mr. Boris Hamburg made a successful début as solo violoncellist on this occasion.

A series of Sunday orchestral concerts given in the Antient Concert Rooms on Sunday afternoons in December mark a new venture which promises to meet with good support. These music-makings are given specially with a view to affording the working-classes, and others engaged in business during the week, an opportunity of hearing the orchestral classics. The promoters have been fortunate in obtaining the services of Dr. Esposito and an efficient body of between thirty and forty instrumentalists. Each concert lasts about an hour and-a-half, the band contributing some half-dozen items, and the programme is completed by selections from a solo-vocalist and instrumentalist. The attendance has been so good up to the present that it is proposed to continue the series after the Christmas holidays.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first and third concerts of the Scottish Orchestra—on November 27 and December 11—conducted by Dr. Cowen, brought forward as soloists Mr. Leonard Borwick—who made a profound impression in Brahms's B flat pianoforte Concerto—and Madame Antonia Dolores, one of the most charming of vocalists. The attraction at the second concert on December 4 was Mr. Siegmund von Hausegger, from Frankfurt, who presented a fascinating programme, which included the 'Eroica' Symphony and three Wagner overtures, which he conducted with great brilliance.

The second and third of Mrs. Kennedy-Fraser's lecture-recitals—on November 24 and December 16—maintained the interest created by the first. The subjects were respectively 'Jensen and Cornelius,' and 'Liszt,' and illustrations from their respective works were ably performed by Miss Margaret Kennedy, Miss Marion Richardson, Miss J. B. Thomson, Dr. Kennedy, and Mr. Alfred C. Young.

At the first of Mr. Chollet's chamber concerts, given in Freemasons' Hall on November 28, was performed Brahms's Sonata for pianoforte and violin in A major, played by Mr. Arthur W. Dace and Mr. Chollet, and Miss Young Scott sang most artistically.

Another concert that fully justified expectation was that of the Edinburgh String Quartet—Messrs. Colin McKenzie, J. H. Hartley, R. de la Haye, and D. Millar-Craig—all of them experienced and well-equipped musicians; their readings of quartets by Haydn, Beethoven and Smetana reached a high level of merit.

The Empire Theatre was filled on Sunday evening, December 3, for the orchestral concert organized for the benefit of the local branch of the Amalgamated Union of Musicians, when a substantial sum was secured for the charity. The conductor was Mr. G. W. Crawford, and the vocalist Mr. G. A. Campbell. An interesting and important feature was an overture 'The minstrel's curse,' composed by a young local musician, Mr. Charles O'Brien.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Clydebank and District Choral Union (conductor, Mr. W. J. Clapperton) gave its first concert for the season on November 24. The programme was notable from the fact that Mr. Learmont Drysdale's 'Tamlane,' a ballad for chorus and orchestra, received a first hearing. Mr. Drysdale, who has been very happy in his treatment of the old Border ballad, conducted the performance and secured a good rendering of the choral music, the orchestral part suffering somewhat from lack of sufficient rehearsal. The second part of the programme consisted of glees, songs, and instrumental items, among the last being Mr. David Stephen's clever trio for oboe, horn and pianoforte.

The first of Herr Denhof's chamber concerts took place on December 14, when the concert-giver was associated with Messrs. Zacharewitsch and Klengel. The programme—a somewhat unfamiliar one—included sonatas for violin and pianoforte by Saint-Saëns and Strauss (in F major), also Tchaikovsky's Trio in A minor for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, in all of which the ensemble was well-nigh perfect. Miss Neil Fraser, the possessor of a contralto voice of wide compass, contributed songs by Brahms, Strauss, and Schubert, and the accompaniments were sympathetically played by Mr. A. Scott Jupp.

The Choral and Orchestral Union's concerts continue to run their successful course. At the third classical concert on November 28, Miss Fanny Davies gave a brilliant reading of Saint-Saëns's pianoforte Concerto No. 2 in G minor. The symphony was Beethoven's No. 2, and a novelty, 'Gretchen,' from Liszt's 'Faust' Symphony was very favourably received. The fourth concert on December 5 was conducted by Herr von Hausegger, who selected a programme of very familiar works. The main items were Beethoven's 'Eroica' Symphony, the overtures to 'Der Freischütz,' 'The Flying Dutchman' and 'Tannhäuser' and the prelude to 'Lohengrin.' In the Wagner numbers the distinguished conductor secured the best results. Two novelties were given at the fifth concert on December 12, viz., Liszt's symphonic poem 'Tasso' and the Rondo from Serenade in A (without violins) by Brahms. The programme likewise included Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations, the organ part being played by Mr. Berry, and Tchaikovsky's 'Nutcracker' suite. Not the least enjoyable feature of the concert was the beautiful singing of Miss Antonia Dolores.

Associated with the Scottish Orchestra, the Choral Union performed 'The Apostles' on December 19. The members of our premier society seem to excel in interpreting Elgar's choral masterpieces, and this, their second performance of 'The Apostles,' was marked by great intelligence and refinement. The orchestra played splendidly, and Mr. Berry gave the organ part with excellent effect. The solo vocalists were Misses Jenny Taggart and Mabel Braine, and Messrs. John Harrison, Herbert Parker, Robert Burnett and Montague Borwell, Mr. Burnett meriting special mention for his finely dramatic rendering of the part of Judas. As usual, Mr. Bradley directed the performance. Apropos 'The Apostles' concert under the auspices of the local section of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, Dr. Keighley, of Manchester, delivered a semi-public lecture on the 'leit motif' as exemplified in 'The Apostles.' The lecturer's exceedingly clear and concise analysis was copiously illustrated on the pianoforte.

The Saturday Popular Concerts continue to attract crowded audiences. Among the 'first performances' have been a Border ballad for orchestra by Mr. Learmont Drysdale, German's 'Welsh Rhapsody,' and Ambroise Thomas's overture 'A Summer night.'

The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society's first concert for the season took place on December 20. Novelties here in the shape of Stanford's prelude to 'Edipus Rex' and Max Schillings' orchestral accompaniment to the 'Witch Song' (expressively read by Miss Agnes Bartholomew) were played, and the programme likewise included the original version of the prelude to the third act of 'Tannhäuser,' Saint-Saëns's Suite for orchestra (Op. 49), and Rubinstein's ballet music from 'Der Daemon.' Mr. W. T. Hoeck conducted the performance.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second ladies' concert of the Orchestral Society, on December 2, was invested with unusual interest on account of the presence of Mr. Sibelius, the Finnish composer, who conducted performances of his Symphony No. 1 in E minor, and his tone-poem 'Finlandia.' The remainder of the programme included Dvorák's 'Carnaval' overture and Berlioz's 'Hungarian' march. Miss Amy Castles sang with acceptance.

At the Philharmonic concert on December 5, Miss Adela Verne played with admirable finish Paderewski's 'Polish' Fantasia and Liszt's 2nd Rhapsodie.

The Liverpool Choral Union gave 'Elijah' with excellent results on December 9 at the Philharmonic Hall. The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Parthenia Bowman, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. Mr. Harry Evans conducted with his usual discretion.

The programme of the fifth Liverpool Symphony Orchestra concert in the Sun Hall, in December, included the 'Meistersinger' and 'Ruy Blas' overtures, Glazounow's ballet suite, and the Andante from Elgar's suite 'The Bavian Highlands.' Miss Lillian Dews was the vocalist and Mr. Walter Hutton the violoncello soloist.

The first concert of the Fairfield Choral and Orchestral Society, a newly-formed organization, took place on December 12 with great success. The chorus is numerous, and shows good training, and the programme included Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast.' Mr. Charles W. Black ably conducted.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The programme of the Hallé concert of December 7 contained the 'Meistersinger' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures; Cherubini's 'Anacreon' overture (magnificently played); and Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings and quartet (the Brodsky Quartet in this instance). On December 14 it contained the 'Pathetic' Symphony (twelfth time at these concerts), and Dvorák's 'Scherzo Capriccioso' (Op. 66). The concert on November 30 was miscellaneous choral, the work for the choir including Bach's 'Wedding Cantata, Brahms's 'Song of destiny,' Purcell's anthem, 'O give thanks,' and a chorus from Handel's 'Solomon.' Three pianoforte soloists have appeared—Mr. Bela Bartok, who played Liszt's 'Dance of death' variations on the Dies Iræ, in addition to Bach's 'Chromatic Fantasia'; Mr. Percy Grainger, who gave us Tchaikovsky's 1st Concerto, and Mr. Egon Petri, who performed Beethoven's E flat Concerto and Liszt's paraphrase of 'Rigoletto.'

A miscellaneous choral experiment was made at the Gentlemen's Concerts on November 28, when the newly-formed Madrigal Society of some sixty voices from the Hallé Choir, under Mr. R. H. Wilson, sang a series of old madrigals between the lighter orchestral selections. At the third concert on November 25 of the Brodsky Quartet the programme contained Cherubini's fine Quartet in E flat; Schumann's pianoforte Quartet in the same key (Op. 47), and Beethoven's Quartet in F minor (Op. 95). Miss Adela Verne betrayed a good gift for ensemble playing in connection with the Schumann quartet. The Brodsky Quartet has also been engaged at a concert of the Athenæum Chess Club, playing Beethoven's Quartet in G (Op. 18, No. 2), Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat (Op. 12), and Schumann's Quartet in A (Op. 41).

At Mr. Brand Lane's third subscription concert on December 13, nothing was more artistically satisfying than the unaccompanied singing, by Mr. Lane's Philharmonic Choir, of such little vocal gems as Elgar's 'Weary wind of the West' and Brahms's 'Dim-lit woods.'

The new Promenade Concerts, with the attraction upon them of a band drawn from the Hallé Orchestra, continue to gather public support. The instrumental selections at the concert of December 9 were largely drawn from Tchaikovsky's works—the 'Casse-Noisette' Suite, the Elegy for strings, the Scherzo from the 4th Symphony, and the '1812' overture. The Beethoven Society opened its eighteenth season on December 5, with a programme which contained 'The ballet of Prometheus,' Tchaikovsky's Elegy for strings, the 'Hansel und Gretel' prelude, and the overture to 'Euryanthe.' Mr. Gordon Cockrell conducted. Miss Jessie Morris, a former student of the College of Music, delighted the audience with her spirited violin playing.

At the Schiller-Anstalt concert, on November 24, Mr. Edward Isaacs contributed an original pianoforte composition which he has not inappropriately designated 'Etude Variations'; for the variations, twelve in number, on an original theme, while providing exercises in separate details of technique and execution, are self-contained, most of them coming to a full close in one key, leaving the succeeding variation to start in another. Those variations of an allegro character, as might have been expected, are the most attractive, and in connection with Nos. 3, 10 and 12, Mr. Isaacs gave an exceedingly clever display of his executive skill.

Mr. R. H. Wilson has just concluded a course of four illustrated lectures on 'The development of opera and the music-drama.' In 'Tristan and Isolde' the lecturer sees the crisis of that development.

Mr. C. J. Heywood, who died on December 1, was one of the most modestly generous friends of music that Manchester has ever possessed. He was concerned in founding the Hallé Concerts in 1857, and the Royal Manchester College of Music in 1893. He was a director of both these institutions and of the Gentlemen's Concerts. When the fortunes of the last named were far from flourishing, Mr. Heywood bought from them their Concert Hall for £20,000, and then allowed them the use of it at a nominal rent. When the Midland Railway Company required the site for the purposes of their hotel, he parted with his purchase without profit to himself, only stipulating for ample and well appointed accommodation within the hotel for the use and service of the Gentlemen's Concerts.

At the second concert of the Manchester Vocal Society, under the direction of Dr. Henry Watson, given on December 20, the programme included Sir F. Bridge's 'The Cradle of Christ'; Gade's cantata, 'Christmas Eve'; and, for the first time, a chorus by Dr. Watson—'Hail, gentle Muse.'

Mr. Adolph Schloesser has recently contributed some informing articles on English music and musicians to the Musikalische Rundschau, a journal published at Munich.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Special interest attended the performance of Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman,' on December 6, by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union and the Hallé Orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. J. M. Preston. This noble, impressive work received a careful interpretation, the beautiful tone and mobility of expression exhibited by the fine chorus being, despite an occasional blemish of inaccuracy, the noteworthy feature of the occasion. Mr. H. Lane Wilson sang with great finish and conviction the part of Everyman; the other soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Madame Kirkby Lunn, and Mr. Gregory Hast. Schubert's 'Song of Miriam,' Saint-Saëns's 'La Fiancée du Timbalier' (Madame Kirkby Lunn) and Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overture completed the programme.

The Philharmonic Society on the following evening gave Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' and introduced Dr. Cowen's 'John Gilpin' to a Newcastle audience. The choir did not quite maintain the reputation it established last season, although it exhibited much merit. Mr. George Dodds conducted, and the soloists were Miss Eva Rich, Miss Agnes Winter, and Mr. Webster Millar. On December 8 the new Catholic Choral Society gave at its second concert a rendering of Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle,' which was vigorous, confident, and accurate, but which somewhat lacked reverence. Mr. N. Brown, the organist of the Catholic Cathedral, furnished the organ accompaniments, and Mr. E. J. Rogers, the veteran musical director of the Tyne Theatre, conducted.

Other choral performances have been Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast,' by the Durham Musical Society on December 6 (conductor, Mr. W. Ellis); Cowen's 'John Gilpin' and Bridge's 'Inchcape Rock,' at South Shields, on December 13; Smieton's 'Ariadne,' and Anderton's 'The Norman Baron,' at North Shields, on December 14—both concerts conducted by Mr. M. Fairs.

At the Darlington Choral and Orchestral Societies' concert on December 12 (conductor, Mr. T. Henderson), a novelty was a flute concerto by Wilhelm Popp, played by Mr. W. Arlom.

On December 18, in the lecture theatre of the Literary and Philosophical Society, Mr. W. H. Hadow lectured upon 'Musical scales and their influence in composition.'

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The concerts of the Norwich Philharmonic Society and by Mr. Bent's orchestra, referred to in my last letter, have now taken place and both achieved great success. That given by the former took place in St. Andrew's Hall, Norwich, on December 14, the great attraction of the evening being Mr. Mark Hambourg, who made his first appearance in Norwich and played Tchaikovsky's pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor with great success. The band has greatly improved during the last two or three years under Dr. Bates's conductorship, and in addition to accompanying the concerto, played Schumann's Symphony in B flat and the 'Tannhäuser' overture. The Norwich Choral Society, who were associated with the other Society in the concert, sang Mr. Hugh Blair's spirited ballad, 'Trafalgar.'

The concert given by Mr. Arthur Bent's orchestra at the Assembly Rooms, Norwich, on December 7, showed a great advance on previous efforts. The band, composed entirely of strings, consists principally of ladies receiving training under Mr. Bent, assisted by a few gentlemen players. The breadth of tone and precision displayed were very noticeable, and due attention was paid to light and shade. Miss Mary Lefroy and Miss Carter played the solo parts in Bach's Concerto for two violins and orchestra, and the other selections given by the band were Tchaikovsky's 'Serenade' for strings, played with spirit, Grieg's 'Nordische Weisen,' and Dvorák's 'Notturmo' (Op. 40). Miss Alice Rix Spelman and Mr. Knyvet Wilson were the vocalists, and their songs were well received.

The Yarmouth Musical Society gave a very interesting concert on December 14, at which Sir Hubert Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' was the principal attraction. Mr. Haydon

Hare conducted, and it is satisfactory to note the progress which the Society has made under his direction. Miss Stanley Lucas and Mr. Ranalow were the soloists. Included in the programme of the second part were two songs by the conductor, Mr. Hare, which were received with acclamation.

There was a very large audience at the Popular Concert held at St. Andrew's Hall on December 16, being the concluding one of the first half of the season, when the audience numbered upwards of 1,000 persons. Mr. Joseph Reed (of Cambridge) was the vocalist, and Miss Diana Cator played violin solos by Sir Hubert Parry and Hubay, and about eighty members of the Norwich Festival Choir sang some of Dr. Bunnett's carols.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Grantham Philharmonic Society opened its season on November 28 with a performance of Handel's 'Samson.' The solos were entrusted to Miss Winifred Siddons, Miss Emily Owen, Mr. Harry Stubbs, and Mr. E. W. Jones. Mr. H. P. Dickenson directed a very efficient chorus and orchestra.

The first orchestral concert of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society took place on November 30. The programme opened with a very good performance of the 'Oberon' overture, and included Schumann's Symphony in B flat, Elgar's 'Three Bavarian Dances,' and Wagner's 'Kaiser' March. The performance was a decided success; the band did good work throughout, and great credit is due to Mr. Allen Gill, the conductor. Mr. Lyell Taylor, as solo violinist, gave a good performance of Beethoven's 'Romance' in G. Miss Lillie Wormald, a very capable vocalist, was heard at her best in the 'Couplets du Mysoli' (David), and she was well supported by Mr. F. Warren's flute obbligato.

Mr. Arthur Richards gave his first orchestral concert of this season on December 9. The programme included Sullivan's 'In Memoriam' overture, Grieg's suite, 'Sigurd Jorsalfar,' and Handel's organ Concerto No. 2. Mr. Herbert Richards's work on the solo instrument in the last-named work being particularly good. Mr. Charles Keywood was the vocalist, and Mr. Eric Coates (viola) the instrumental soloist. Miss Edith Burgis led the orchestra, and Mr. Richards conducted with care and precision.

The West Bridgford Choral Society gave Stanford's 'Revenge' on December 12. The vocal soloists were Mrs. Gertrude Addison and Mr. Thomas Spencer, and Mr. Edwin Thorpe played some violoncello solos. In the absence of Mr. J. B. Lyddon through illness, the concert was ably conducted by Mr. F. Marshall Ward.

The Gedling Choral Society opened its season on December 14 with Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm ('O come let us worship') and 'Hear my prayer.' The latter received a good rendering from both the soloist (Mrs. Cooke) and the chorus. The choir also did well in the 'Bridal Chorus' ('Lohengrin') and 'Hail, bright abode' ('Tannhäuser').

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first important event of general musical interest this term was a Nelson concert, given in the Town Hall on November 1 by the combined forces of the Choral and Philharmonic Society with the Bach Choir, under the able conductorship of Dr. Allen. The works chosen were Brahms's 'Begräbnissgesang' (Op. 13) and the same composer's 'Requiem.' Chorus and orchestra from first to last worked admirably. The soloists were Miss Fillunger and Mr. McInnes; a special word of praise should be awarded to the latter vocalist for his excellent singing.

On November 15, in the Sheldonian Theatre, the professor of music, Sir Hubert Parry, gave a capital lecture on 'The sphere of temperament' to a large and keenly appreciative audience. Illustrations, which included some very characteristic folk-tunes of Sweden, Russia, Roumania, Scotland and Wales, were given by Miss Vera Williams and other students of the Royal College of Music.

In the Town Hall, on November 28, the Oxford Gleemen (numbering between sixty and seventy voices), under their conductor, Mr. Wilsdon, gave a thoroughly excellent concert, the programme being of quite remarkable interest, including as it did Brahms's 'Rinaldo' and Schumann's 'Luck of Edenhall,' with orchestral accompaniment, together with Beethoven's eighth symphony. 'Rinaldo,' I am told, was given here some score of years since by the Christ Church Society with, of course, a small chorus, a pianoforte and harmonium sufficing in those days for the accompaniment. A peculiar interest, especially for Oxford-folk, centres around the Schumann work, to which attention is called in an 'Occasional Note' on page 26. The performance of the gleemen was on the whole admirable, while the soloists, Messrs. Reed and Higley, are deserving of all praise.

Two days later, in the same building, under the auspices of the Musical Club, the Kruse Quartet (with the assistance of Mr. C. Draper as clarinetist and Dr. Walker as pianist) gave a chamber concert. The programme opened with Mozart's clarinet Quintet in A (Köchel, 581), and Brahms's Sonata in F minor (Op. 120, No. 1) for pianoforte and clarinet was capably rendered by Dr. Walker and Mr. Draper. Herr Kruse played Bach's violin Concerto in A minor, and the concert concluded with Beethoven's Quartet in C (Op. 59, No. 3). We must not omit to add that the Sunday evening concerts at Balliol College have been continued as usual, under the able direction of Dr. Walker.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The last day of November saw an excellent performance of Mackenzie's 'The Dream of Jubal' by the Barnsley St. Cecilia Society. Dr. Coward conducted a thoroughly competent chorus and orchestra. Mr. Charles Fry added one more to his long list of successes in the delivery of the spoken text. The solo music was excellently sung by Miss Gleeson-White and Mr. Henry Brearley. The same district also furnished a creditable performance, at Dodworth, of Bennett's 'Woman of Samaria,' and Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm, under Mr. J. Collins's conductorship. At Beighton, a small but competent choral society 'reported progress' in Stanford's 'The Revenge' Mr. J. O. Hallfield conducted. The Norton Lees Choral Society in a well-prepared concert performance of 'Maritana,' under Mr. Horace Reynolds, and the Heeley Musical Union in a selection of part-songs directed by Mr. M. Tomlinson, have proved that the suburban choral bodies are contributing to the all-round advance in matters musical.

A host of 'Messiah' performances has crowded the past month. Reference can only be made to the one given by the Sheffield Musical Union, at which, under Dr. Coward's lead, the large and capable choir won fresh successes. The soloists were Miss Evangeline Florence, Madame Dews, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Joseph Lycett.

Interesting orchestral concerts have been given by the Sheffield Amateur Instrumental Society—Haydn's Symphony No. 8 in E flat, and Mendelssohn's pianoforte Concerto in D minor (soloist, Miss Alice Walker)—under the new conductor, Mr. J. Duffell; and by the Sheffield Philharmonic Orchestra, formerly the Brincliffe Musical Society (Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony), conducted by Mr. J. H. Parkes. The Heeley Orchestral Society, which is doing good work under Mr. A. Bagshaw, also gave a pleasant concert.

At the concert of the Sheffield Amateur Musical Society on December 19, Verdi's 'Requiem' was performed for the first time in Sheffield. Under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood, a splendidly vivid and picturesque performance of the interesting work was secured. The fine chorus triumphed over the difficulties set before them, singing with all the expressiveness and contrast demanded. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Florence Oliver, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, and Mr. W. A. Peterkin. A competent orchestra had been organized, and under Mr. Wood's training scored marked successes in 'Le Rouet d'Omphale' and the 'Oberon' overture, and the concert terminated with an imposing performance of the choral epilogue from the 'Golden Legend.'

MUSIC IN THE SOUTH-WEST OF ENGLAND.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

In recording the music-makings in this part of the world during the first half of a busy season, the place of honour must, of course, be given to

THE THREE TOWNS.

As usual, the vigorous Guildhall Choir, conducted by the borough organist, Mr. H. Moreton, took the lead, and on October 21, Trafalgar Day, Mr. Hugh Blair's spirited ballad for chorus and orchestra, 'Trafalgar' was performed, the composer being present. The performance by the band (led by Mr. John Pardew) and chorus (numbering 250 voices) was excellent, and the ballad at once gained favour by reason of its straightforward, intelligible character, free from any exaggeration of modern devices. Stanford's 'Last Post' was also sung. The Guildhall Choir has already made a second appearance to give, with the same instrumental company, a performance of 'King Olaf,' with Madame Mary Poole, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Charles Knowles as soloists. The work of the chorus was creditable to all concerned.—Continuing the history of choral music, I have next to mention a concert recital of Gounod's 'Faust,' by Dr. Weekes's Choral and Orchestral Societies, assisted by Mr. Walter Weekes's Plympton Choral Society. Miss Caroline Hatchard and Mr. Robert Radford, in the rôles of Margarita and Mephistopheles respectively, delighted the audiences. Madame Orlando Morgan, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Arthur Walenn sang the other principal parts.—A new society, the 'Emmanuel,' which intends to devote itself entirely to sacred music, has grown, under the direction of Mr. Reginald Waddy, out of the augmented choir of the parish church in the northern suburb of Plymouth; and on December 13 made its first independent appearance, acquitting itself creditably in a first performance (in Plymouth) of J. H. Maunders's cantata, 'A song of thanksgiving,' the solo parts being sung by members of the choir.—A week's highly successful run of 'Patience' was attained in the Plymouth Theatre Royal from October 30 to November 4 by the Plymouth Amateur Operatic Society (conducted by Mr. R. Ball), who will be tempted to undertake an opera somewhat more ambitious next year. The principals were Madame Mary Poole, Mr. Percy Lynch, and Mr. Claud Grigg.

Turning now to matters instrumental, I have first to chronicle the début of a lady violinist, Miss Helen Sealy, who, on November 9, under the auspices of the Royal Artillery Band, gave an interpretation of the 4th Concerto (D minor, Op. 31) of Vieuxtemps, giving proof of infallible technique and impassioned and eloquent interpretation. The band, conducted by Mr. R. G. Evans, excellently played Schubert's 'Unfinished' B minor Symphony.

Two concerts have taken place of the twelfth series of Mr. Frank Winterbottom's symphony performances at Stonehouse. Tchaikovsky's 4th Symphony was played on November 24; Cowen's 'Scandinavian' was also introduced to the district on the same occasion—its first movement only—two more being given at the second concert, on December 15. Another novelty was Goetz's beautiful Symphony in F, and at the same concert the first performance was given of a new concert-overture, 'May Day' (Op. 38), by F. W. Moreton. Conspicuously programmatic, it displayed skill in orchestration and production of original effects.

OTHER DEVONSHIRE TOWNS.

Exeter offers little material for remark, the only local event being a week's occupation, beginning December 4, of the theatre by the Exeter Amateur Operatic Society with 'H.M.S. Pinafore.' The principals were Miss Adelaide Bayley and Miss Winifred Balchin, Mr. Charles Bartlett and Mr. Robert Courtney. On November 30 the Newton Abbot Choral Society acquitted itself well in Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' with the Hon. Mrs. Julian Clifford and Mr. Albert Collings as principals. Mr. W. J. Bown conducted. A newly-formed society at Revelstoke gave a miscellaneous concert on December 6, directed by Miss E. M. Reade. On December 7 the Association of Church Choirs and the Deaneries of Moreton and Totnes held its annual festival at Moretonhampstead, the following seven choirs participating—Moretonhampstead, Ashburton, Chagford, Kingsteignton, Newton Abbot, Chudleigh, and North Bovey, making a total of 170 voices, conducted by Mr. W. J. Bown, with Mr. Harold O. Jones, of Ashburton, at the organ.

CORNISH TOWNS.

The societies at Truro and Falmouth, according to custom, wisely combined their efforts under the baton of Mr. Herbert Sanders, and on November 27 and 28 respectively gave a performance in each town of 'Hiawatha's wedding feast,' with a miscellaneous selection. The soloists were Mrs. Pendarves Hockin and Mr. Henry Brearley.—The small society conducted at St. Badaux by Mr. B. Barnicott is, both in its choral and orchestral sections, making good progress, and the rendering given of 'Joan of Arc' on December 6 was an advance on all previous performances. Miss Nellie Ellis, Mr. John Gill and Mr. G. S. Meadows were the soloists.—Though, beyond taking its place on December 13 in the long programme of the 'Messiah' performances of the season, the industrious though small society at Torpoint has not attracted attention, it so far deserves mention, for not only does it hold its own (conducted by Mr. Arthur Greet) in spite of the difficulties consequent on its isolated, 'across the water' situation, but it keeps alive in the little town a discriminative taste and genuine love of the art.—A concert performance of 'The Bohemian girl' was given on December 14 by the Camborne Choral Society, assisted by Madame Mary Poole, Mr. Will Foster, Mr. A. E. Old and Mr. Harry Smith. Mr. H. V. Pearce conducted a performance which evoked enthusiastic applause.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

Though there has been a good deal of music-making at Leeds during the past month, there has been little of general interest. Two orchestral concerts, though good of their kind, presented no features that were not familiar. At the subscription concert on November 29, Dr. Richter conducted a programme of Beethoven and Wagner which was most enjoyable in itself, and was of course peculiarly well suited to display his powers to the utmost advantage, but consisted of things that he has made thrice familiar to the British public. It ended with the 'Eroica' Symphony, by way of celebrating the centenary of its first performance. The Municipal Orchestra, which deserves so well of the Leeds public, gave a Tchaikovsky programme on December 9, when Mr. Fricker conducted performances of the 'Pathetic' Symphony, the 'Capriccio Italien,' 'Casse Noisette' Suite and the 'Marche Slave,' that reflected much credit on the excellent orchestra he has got together. It is a great privilege for the people of Leeds that they should be able to hear such a programme, adequately rendered, at prices ranging from 2d. to 1s. Mr. Dillon Shallard was the vocalist on this occasion. The Municipal concert on November 25 was of chamber music, Schubert's Octet and Beethoven's Septet being given with as much effect as is possible in a hall twice as large as it should be for chamber music. Mr. Harold Mason contributed pianoforte solos and Mrs. F. K. Ryder sang. One of the most enjoyable concerts of the month has been the Bohemian chamber concert on December 13. The quartet, Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Moxon and Bolton, are rapidly acquiring a really good ensemble, and they played Brahms's B flat Quartet and Volkmann's G minor quartet with spirit and clearness, while a charming Duet in B flat by Mozart for violin and viola (Köchel, 424) proved exceptionally interesting, and more effective than might have been expected from such a combination. On November 21 the Leeds Teachers' Choral Society attempted a rather ambitious programme, Parry's 'Ode on St. Cecilia's Day' and Stanford's 'Pseudrig Crohoore' being the two choral works given, and though the chorus was rather too unevenly balanced to be quite effective, a creditable performance was given under Mr. Jer. Stone's conducting. Miss E. Talbot and Mr. H. Varley were the principals. A Leeds musical evening on November 28 presented only one feature to distinguish it from the ordinary ballad concert, an accompanied recitation of Jean Ingelow's 'High tide on the coast of Lincolnshire,' the pianoforte part being written by Mr. F. Sant Angelo in artistic and appropriate style. It was played by the composer, the reciter being Mr. J. B. Crossley. 'Elijah' was given by the Armley Choral Society, of which Mr. H. H. Pickard is conductor, on November 28, and on the same day another suburban society, the New Leeds Choral Society, gave a performance of Hamish MacCunn's 'Lay of the last Minstrel,' Mr. H. M. Turton conducting.

OTHER TOWNS.

At Bradford, on December 15, Dr. Cowen conducted a choral programme which included a selection from Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' Brahms's beautiful Rhapsody for contralto solo (Miss Ada Crossley) and male-voice chorus, Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens,' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin.' The other principals were Messrs. Evan Williams and Herbert Brown, and the performances were characterized by much brilliance. The Bradford Permanent Orchestra, on November 25, gave, with the help of the Festival Choral Society, a mixed programme of orchestral and choral music by British composers, under Mr. Allen Gill's direction. Compositions by Stanford ('The Revenge'), Cowen, Elgar and German were included, together with examples of local art in the shape of Mr. J. Weston Nicholl's 'Bavarian Eclogue,' and a suite by Mr. Haydn Wood.

Huddersfield has been busy of late, though it cannot be said that the interest of recent concerts has been very marked. The Philharmonic Society gave one of its popular Saturday evening concerts on December 2, when three of Beethoven's compositions were interspersed with light music. Beethoven's violin Concerto, with Mr. T. H. Clay as soloist, was the central feature of the concert, which was conducted by Mr. Ibeson. On December 5 the Glee and Madrigal Society, under Mr. J. W. Armitage, gave a concert. The singing of the chorus was excellent, but the music was on the whole undistinguished, the chief exception being C. H. Lloyd's 'Rosy dawn,' which was admirably sung, and proved to be very enjoyable. The Lockwood and District Choral Society, under the direction of Dr. A. Eaglefield Hull, gave a creditable performance of Mackenzie's 'Dream of Jubal,' on December 4, at the Mechanics' Institute. The solo vocalists were Miss Emily Cox and Mr. Walter Lawley, and Mr. Charles Fry again appeared as reciter.

The Halifax Choral Society gave, on November 23, a refined and sympathetic performance of Brahms's 'German Requiem,' under Mr. F. de G. English. The chorus sang the difficult music with marked intelligence and praiseworthy accuracy, and the solos were sung most artistically by Miss Evangeline Florence and Mr. Frederic Austin. On December 6 the Keighley Orchestral Society, under Mr. J. B. Summerscales, played a new suite, 'Idylls of Spring,' by Mr. F. Davidson, a local composer. Beethoven's 7th Symphony was the principal feature of the programme. On the same date the Cleckheaton Philharmonic Society gave 'Elijah,' Mr. W. H. Wright conducting a satisfactory performance. 'Moliue' is not often heard of now, but the Pudsey Choral Union gave it, for the third time, on November 27, under Mr. H. H. Pickard. The first and third portions of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' were sung with admirable spirit and verve by the Morley Choral Society, under Mr. Fricker's conductorship, on December 7, and on the same occasion Schumann's pianoforte Concerto was played with refinement and sympathy by Mr. Herbert Johnson, a gifted young pianist of the town. At one of the Wakefield chamber concerts, on December 19, Miss Agnes Nicholls gave a delightful vocal recital, with the aid of Mr. S. Liddle as accompanist.

The York Symphony Orchestra, which has under Mr. Noble's guidance made such a notable advance, attempted no less exacting a work than Beethoven's 7th Symphony on November 23, and got through its task with credit. The York Musical Society's chorus has afforded a wholesome example to other societies in submitting to a weeding-out process. With the assistance of Mr. Fricker, of Leeds, the less efficient members have been eliminated, and to judge from the singing of the purged chorus in Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding feast' and 'The death of Minnehaha,' on December 12, the part is, in this case, 'greater than the whole,' for a very clean and bright performance has to be recorded, on which Mr. Noble may be congratulated. The principals were Miss Helen Jaxon, Mr. A. Heather, and Mr. Coleman. That the 'Wedding feast' has not yet lost its popularity is evidenced by the fact that yet another performance has to be mentioned, that given by the Hull Vocal Society on November 21, when it was coupled with Elgar's 'Black Knight.' Dr. G. H. Smith was the conductor. On December 1, the Hull Philharmonic Society, which Mr. J. W. Hudson conducts, gave an interesting programme, including Beethoven's 8th Symphony, and Mr. Patman's very clever 'Cinderella' tone-poem.

The Harrogate Choral Society gave Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' under Mr. C. L. Naylor, on December 1, with Madame Emily Squire, Miss Lilian Payne, and Messrs. Brearley and Knowles as principals. A short Handel selection completed the programme. The ability of Dr. Ely as both composer and conductor was in evidence at the concert of the Scarborough Philharmonic Society on December 4, when, in addition to Elgar's 'King Olaf,' a choral work by Dr. Ely, a setting for chorus and orchestra of Longfellow's 'Spanish Jew's tale,' was performed with distinct success. It is a clever composition, making a well-considered effort to give point to the text, and the orchestra is handled with freedom and varied effect. The chorus, though not a very well-balanced body, sang well.

On December 12, the Pontefract Choral Society, of which Mr. R. B. Walker is the conductor, gave the first and second parts of 'The Creation,' together with Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens.' The principals were Miss Lillie Wormald, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Herbert Brown.

Foreign Notes.

ATHENS.

Sir Edward Elgar's 'Cockaigne' overture is included in the list of works to be performed this winter at the symphonic concerts given by the Conservatoire.

BERLIN.

It is evident that in Hofkapellmeister Carl Pohlitz, of Stuttgart, Germany possesses yet another conductor of genius who can sway both orchestra and audience with the force of a master-mind. The united Wagner Societies of Berlin and Potsdam had invited Mr. Pohlitz to conduct their last concert, when, with a programme including Anton Bruckner's gigantic B flat Symphony (No. 5) and the 'Meistersinger' and 'Tannhäuser' overtures, he created such enthusiasm as has rarely been witnessed here after orchestral performances. Two new works by Ludwig Hess were given for the first time, viz., a scena for tenor solo and orchestra 'Huss's dungeon' and a symphonic poem 'The Queen of Heaven surrounded by music-making angels,' after a picture by Hans Memling in the Antwerp Museum. Herr Hess, who is a vocalist by profession, sang his elaborate scena on this occasion.—A young Scots pianist, Miss Jeannie Buchanan, displayed no mean talent in her concert given with the Philharmonic Orchestra under Herr Xaver Scharwenka. Her programme comprised three such difficult works as Beethoven's and Liszt's Concertos in E flat and Xaver Scharwenka's in C minor.—Madame Teresa Carreño produced an English novelty at her concert with the Philharmonic Orchestra. This was a Concertstück by Dr. F. H. Cowen, a melodious, beautifully-written and effective work with which the brilliant pianist scored a great success. Dr. Edward MacDowell's 2nd Concerto, and Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia were also included in her programme.—The Philharmonic Choir, under Germany's most eminent choir-trainer, Prof. Siegfried Ochs, gave what must be considered the finest performance of Beethoven's Missa Solemnis that has ever been heard in the German capital. The chorus was virtually beyond criticism, and well it might have been, seeing that Prof. Ochs had devoted two years' training to this stupendous work!—The concert of the Royal Opera Choir, under Felix Weingartner, was devoted to Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ' and Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives,' two works that are very rarely performed in Germany.—The Singakademie, under Prof. Georg Schumann, gave a Brahms' concert, which included the 'Funeral song' for chorus, strings and brass (Op. 13), 'The song of the fates,' 'Nænie' and the 'Requiem.'—The fourth Philharmonic Concert, under Arthur Nikisch's direction, was devoted to Beethoven—the 'Fidelio' and 'Leonore' (No. 3) overtures, the C minor Symphony, and the G major pianoforte Concerto, the solo part in the last-named, superbly played by Eugen d'Albert, completed the scheme.—A new opera-house, Die Komische Oper, was opened on November 17. As its name implies, the building is to be devoted to light, but not necessarily comic, opera. The director is Herr Hans Gregor, and Offenbach's 'Contes d'Hoffmann' was the first work to cater for the Berliners' taste in serious 'light' music.

BIELEFELD.

Felix Weingartner gave a concert of his own compositions here on December 1 at the Municipal Theatre, and was greeted with the utmost enthusiasm. The programme included the E flat Symphony, 'King Lear' overture, a Serenade for strings, and six songs with orchestral accompaniment, of which three were quite new and performed for the first time. Dr. Ludwig Willner declaimed them superbly and had to repeat one entitled 'Erdriese.'

BREMEN.

'Zenobia,' a grand opera in three acts by an American composer, Mr. Louis Adolphe Coerne, was produced at the Stadtheater on December 1. The work was very warmly welcomed, and may be voted a genuine success. A pupil of Rheinberger, Mr. Coerne was born at Newark, New Jersey, in 1870.

BRUSSELS.

Gluck's 'Armida' was performed for the first time at the Monnaie Theatre on November 7. The interpretation made a deep impression, in which the effect of the splendid music was greatly heightened by the truly remarkable mise en scène, no less than by the efforts of the leading artists: Madame Litvinne (Armida), Mdlle. Bourgeois (the Fury of Hate), M. Lafitte (Rinaldo), and M. Bourbon (Hidrast). 'Armida' had not been heard in Brussels since the year 1823.—A new symphony, entitled 'Belgica,' by M. Albert Dupuis, was produced by M. Eugène Ysaye at his Alhambra concert of November 19, but without any remarkable success. On the other hand, an orchestral rhapsody by M. Vreuls, also played for the first time, was greatly relished.—M. Claude Debussy's newest work, 'La mer, trois esquisses symphoniques,' introduced at the Concert Populaire of December 3 by M. Sylvain Dupuis, left the audience more bewildered than impressed.—Mr. Fritz Delius's symphonic poem, 'Paris, a nightpiece,' was included in the same programme, and well received. Some of the local papers hailed Mr. Delius a Canadian composer!

COLOGNE.

Mr. Isidore de Lara's opera 'Messalina' was performed on December 2 at the New Theatre for the first time in Germany, and met with a very friendly reception. Herr Otto Lohse conducted, and secured an excellent interpretation of the work.

CRELFELD.

Sir Edward Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' has found its way to this music-loving town of ribbons and ties. On November 22, Prof. Müller Reuter conducted a most impressive performance with infectious enthusiasm. The choir was remarkably well balanced, and sang with rare intelligence and feeling. Dr. Ludwig Willner as Gerontius repeated his success at the two Düsseldorf performances of 1901 and 1902.

DESSAU.

'Totentanz' (Dance of Death) is the cheerful title of a new opera produced at the Court Theatre on December 5. The composer is Josef Reiter, who has already made a name on the Continent, and especially in Vienna, as a musician of undoubted gifts. The libretto deals with the German legend of the town-piper of Neisse, who with his piping leads the inhabitants of the Silesian town to dance and death alike, and proves himself the 'superior spirit' who interferes in, and settles the municipal and family quarrels of, the good but intellectually less endowed burghers. Herr Reiter has sufficiently impressed certain sections of the Vienna musical public to warrant their founding a 'Josef Reiter Society,' which is about to publish the vocal score at its own expense. Lucky Mr. Reiter!

LEIPZIG.

Herr Max Reger gave a concert entirely of his own compositions on November 19, when both his great sets of Variations—for pianoforte solo on a theme by Bach (Op. 81), and for two pianofortes, four hands, on a theme by Beethoven (Op. 86)—as well as the Pièces Pittoresques for pianoforte duet (Op. 34), and a number of songs, were greatly appreciated by a very friendly audience. —Max Pauer played the whole of Brahms's pianoforte sonatas at his recital on the same day and in the following order, viz., in F sharp minor (Op. 2), in F minor (Op. 5), and in C major (Op. 1). Leipzig is the centre of the Brahms cult in Germany, and such a programme as Herr Pauer's should have satisfied even the most ravenous appetite for the great master's music. —Professor Ferdinand Thieriot, with the assistance of the Winderstein Orchestra, gave a concert of his own compositions on November 20, when a new symphony (No. 3, in C major), an overture 'Dionysia,' and a concerto for two pianofortes and orchestra (Op. 77) were performed. —At the seventh Gewandhaus concert, on November 30, Arthur Nikisch conducted Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations, and by means of a most brilliant performance helped the work to an emphatic success. —On December 3 a one-act opera, founded on Tennyson's 'Enoch Arden,' and composed by a young Hungarian, Herr Rudolf Raimann, was given for the first time in Germany at the new theatre.

MILAN.

'Giovanni Galluresse' is the title of a three-act opera by a young composer, Signor Montemezzi, produced at the Dal Verme Theatre on November 12. It was the composer's first attempt at opera, and the performance proved it to be a successful one.

PARIS.

The very successful production of 'Miarka,' a musical comedy in four acts by M. Jean Richepin, with music by M. Alexandre Georges, at the Opéra-Comique on November 7, deserves to be chronicled. The work is virtually written round a cycle of lyrics from M. Richepin's novel, 'Miarka, la fille à l'ourse,' which M. Georges composed fifteen years ago. These chansons have since then enjoyed well-deserved success, and they were chiefly instrumental in deciding the good fortune of the new opera. Mesdames Marguerite Carré, Heglon and Pierron, and MM. Jean Périer, Cazeneuve, and Huberdeau interpreted the chief characters to the manifest satisfaction of the enthusiastic first-night audience. —Beethoven's music to 'The Ruins of Athens,' which had not been heard in Paris for many years, was revived by M. Colonne at his concert on November 19. On the same occasion Herr Burgstaller sang Beethoven's song-cycle, 'An die entfernte Geliebte.' —At the Lamoureux concert of November 26, M. Chevillard conducted Balakirev's symphonic poem 'Russia,' while at the succeeding concert (December 3) he introduced a new symphonic poem, 'Quasimodo,' by a young composer, M. Fr. Casadesus, and revived Mendelssohn's 'Reformation' symphony. —Another new symphonic poem, 'La mort de Chénier,' by M. E. Cools, was produced at the third Clémahnd concert at the Théâtre Molière, and a novelty—one that set the critics by the ears—was the 'Deuxième poème lyrique sur le Livre de Job,' by M. Henri Rabaud, launched upon a more or less doubtful career at the Colonne concert of December 3. M. Rabaud composed an oratorio, 'Job,' in 1900, wherefore the present title 'second lyric poem.' He has set a selection from M. Ernest Renan's translation of one of the most wonderful books in the Old Testament for baritone solo and orchestra, and the result is somewhat wild and weird, to say the least.

PRAGUE.

Eugen d'Albert's new musical comedy, 'Flauto solo,' was produced at the German Theatre on November 12, and achieved an immediate success. The libretto is by Hans von Wolzogen, of 'Ring' and 'Parsifal' Leitfaden fame. —Another musical comedy, 'Zierpuppen,' the libretto after Molière's 'Les précieuses ridicules,' was brought to its successful first hearing on November 15 at the same theatre. The composer is Dr. Anselm Götzl.

WIESBADEN.

Dr. Otto Neitzel, the famous critic of the Cologne Gazette, pianist, lecturer, librettist and composer, is rapidly coming to the front as one of the musicians with whom musical history may have to reckon. His latest work, 'Die Barbarina'—produced at the local Royal Court Theatre on November 15—seems also his best. Both libretto (by the composer himself) and music are interesting in no ordinary degree, and the success of the first performance was never in doubt. As in the case of d'Albert's opera, 'Flauto solo,' the characters include Prussia's greatest King, Frederic II., though in Neitzel's work the monarch's is only a dumb show and flute-playing rôle. The postlude—the opera is in three acts with a postlude—in which an original composition (a Siciliano) by the royal composer is cleverly used, was especially singled out for enthusiastic praise.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

ALDEBURGH.—The Saxmundham Choral and Orchestral Society gave a highly creditable performance of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' on December 15 in the Jubilee Hall. The solo music in the cantata was sung by Miss Fellinor, and Mr. Charles Ganz conducted.

AYLESBURY.—The Vale of Aylesbury Harmonic Society gave its first concert this season on December 12, Elgar's 'The Banner of St. George' forming the main feature of the programme. The band and chorus numbered 80 performers, and the principal vocalists were Mrs. Oscar Seligman, Miss Howard Finch, and the Rev. A. S. Commeline, and the solo violinist was Miss Augusta Horwood. Mr. J. H. Coales conducted.

BANBURY.—The Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Brahms's 'Requiem' at the Theatre Royal on November 28. The choir sang both with spirit and delicacy of expression, and the orchestra was thoroughly efficient. The second part included Bach's Church cantatas 'Sweet comfort, my Jesus cometh' and 'The Lord is my Shepherd.' The solo vocalists were Miss Gertrude Sichel and Mr. Francis Harford. Mr. W. L. Luttman conducted with much care and discretion.

BANGOR (CO. DOWN).—The Harmonic Society, formed last year, gave its first concert of the season on December 8 in the Dufferin Memorial Hall. The chief part of the programme consisted of Dr. F. H. Cowen's 'Rose maiden.' Much credit is due to the painstaking conductor, Mr. Robert Jones, organist of the parish church, for the fine singing of the choir consisting of 100 voices, with Madame Gertrude Drinkwater, Miss J. Langtry, Mr. J. Briggs and Mr. J. F. Newel as solo vocalists. The pianoforte accompaniments were excellently played by Miss May Sheppard, while Mr. Alan Parker gave valuable assistance at the organ.

BLACKBURN.—The first concert this season of the St. Cecilia and Vocal Union took place on November 28 in the Exchange Hall. The choir of over 200 were heard to exceptional advantage in several madrigals and part-songs, including 'My true love hath my heart' (Smart), 'Weary wind of the West' (Elgar), 'Silver swan' (Gibbons), and in Mendelssohn's 'Judge me, O God.' Dr. E. C. Bairstow conducted with care and skill. Madame Ella Hall and Mr. Plunket Greene were the solo vocalists, and Mr. Arthur Catterall solo violin.

BOGNOR.—The fourth annual concert of the Musical Society was held in the Assembly Rooms on November 29, Sir Edward Elgar's cantata 'The Black Knight' being the main feature of interest. A very creditable performance of the work was given by the choir and orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. F. J. W. Crowe. The solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Marwood and Mr. Montague Borwell.

CAPE TOWN.—The Trafalgar centenary festivities included a performance by the combined choral societies at the City Hall on October 30 of Stanford's 'The Revenge,' and Sullivan's Te Deum. These works were rendered with full justice by choir and orchestra (led by Mr. Percy Ould), the former singing with great spirit. The solos in the Te Deum were admirably sung by Miss Annie Cubitt. Mackenzie's 'Britannia' overture was also played. Dr. Barrow Dowling was an able conductor.

CHELMSFORD.—The Musical Society gave the first concert of its twenty-fourth season on December 5, when Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was performed. The orchestra was excellent, while the choir sang with refinement and good tone quality. The solo vocalists were Miss Estella Linden, Miss Eleanor Druce, Mr. Alfred Heather, and Mr. Dan Price. Mr. F. R. Frye conducted.

CHICHESTER.—A very fine performance of 'Elijah' marked the fifty-fifth concert of the Musical Society, with Mr. Dalton Baker in the principal part, Miss E. Truscott, Miss L. Parry and Mr. H. Boulderson being the other solo vocalists. There was a full orchestra, and the choir sang with great spirit and good attack. Dr. F. J. Read conducted.

DEVIZES.—Handel's oratorio 'Samson' was given by the Musical Association at their first concert of the season on December 12 in the Corn Exchange. The chorus sang with excellent tone and good attack. The solos were taken by Miss Winifred Thomas, Miss Edith Trout, Mr. J. H. Evers and Mr. Meurig James. Mr. H. H. Baker conducted.

DOVER.—The Choral Union gave an excellent performance of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' on December 6. The band and chorus numbered 150 performers, with Mr. E. W. Barclay as principal violin and Mr. F. E. Fletcher at the organ. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Georgina Ormsby, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, and Mr. Foxton Ferguson. Mr. H. J. Taylor conducted.

DUNEDIN (N.Z.).—At the annual competitions here in October, five choirs entered for the choir competition. The test-pieces were 'By Babylon's wave,' Gounod, and 'A cradle song,' Smart (unaccompanied). The judge was Mr. A. J. Towsey, of Wanganui. A vast audience assembled, and the singing of the choirs displayed much intelligence. The choir of the First Church of Otago, which gained first prize, consisted of fifty voices, and was conducted by Mr. Jesse Timson, organist and choirmaster of the church.

HOLMFIRTH.—The District Choral Society gave its first concert this season in the Drill Hall on December 14, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from the Song of Hiawatha' was given with considerable success. Miss Nellie Teggin, Mr. Walter Lawley, and Mr. W. Riley as solo vocalists were fully capable, and Mr. J. E. Ibeson conducted.

KETTERING.—The Choral Society's opening concert this season took place at the Victoria Hall on December 5, Cowen's 'John Gilpin' being the chief feature in the programme, which included Mendelssohn's Psalm, 'Lord, how long wilt Thou forget me?' Sullivan's 'O Gladsome Light,' and 'Say, watchman, what of the night,' the madrigals 'Flow, O my tears' (Benet), and 'The Silver Swan' (Gibbons), also Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture. The choir, ably trained by their conductor, Mr. H. G. Gotch, sang with much credit, and the orchestra did excellent work. The soloists were Madame Dews (vocalist) and Mr. A. J. Palmer (violinist), and Miss Edith Palmer was an able accompanist.

KIMBERLEY.—The third concert by the Musical Association took place on November 8, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' and a miscellaneous selection were performed. The latter included Eaton Fanning's 'Song of the vikings,' German's 'Henry VIII.' dances, Harford Lloyd's pastoral 'The rosy dawn,' and Mendelssohn's pianoforte Concerto in G minor (solo, Miss Maud Wild). Mr. Sidney H. Rees was the solo vocalist, and Mr. A. H. Ashworth conducted.

LEAMINGTON.—The New Choral Society gave its third subscription concert in the Winter Hall on December 6, the chief feature of the programme being Smart's 'Bride of Dunkerron.' Miss Winifred Marwood, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Montague Borwell were the solo vocalists, and Mr. H. M. J. Gibbon conducted.

LINCOLN.—The Musical Society gave a successful concert on November 28. The programme included Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' which was warmly appreciated, Stanford's 'Elegiac Ode,' the Bridal Chorus from 'Lohengrin,' and Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' Symphony. The choir was particularly good, the quality of tone and distinct enunciation of the words being very noticeable, and the orchestra, selected mainly from the London Symphony Orchestra and led by Mr. Edward O'Brien, was all that could be desired. The solo vocalists were Miss Helen Jaxon and Mr. Dalton Baker, and Dr. G. J. Bennett ably conducted.

MAIDENHEAD.—The first subscription concert this season by the Philharmonic Society took place in the Town Hall on December 14. The programme included Hiller's 'Song of Victory,' Mendelssohn's 'Judge me, O God,' and the part-songs 'Now is the month of maying' (Morley), 'Dawn of day' (Reay), and 'O breathe not his name' (Stanford). Miss Alice Venning was the solo vocalist, and Mr. Edward Mason (violinist). Mr. A. E. Baker conducted.

MARLBOROUGH.—The first concert this season by the Choral Society was given on December 13, under the able direction of Mr. Bambridge. The principal items of interest in the programme were Hugh Blair's choral ballad, 'Trafalgar,' and Sir Charles Stanford's 'Battle of the Baltic.' In both works the choir acquitted themselves with much credit, and were supported by an excellent orchestra. Miss Mildred Jones and Mr. Parker Prior were the soloists, Miss Greenland, pianist, and Miss Mary Hill solo violinist.

MOSELEY.—The Choral Society gave a performance of John Francis Barnett's cantata, 'The building of the ship,' at the Moseley and Balsall Heath Institute, on December 8. The orchestra and choir numbered 120, and the solo vocalists were Misses Ethel Lomax, Hetty Adams, Dora Hunt, Mrs. Simpson, Messrs. Ernest Ludlow and Joseph Lewis. The conductor was Mr. W. Berridge-Hicks.

PETERBOROUGH.—The first concert this season of the Peterborough Orchestral Society took place on December 5, when the programme included Mendelssohn's 'Italian' Symphony, the Andante from Schubert's Symphony in C, and Beethoven's pianoforte Concerto in C minor, of which Dr. Keeton, the energetic conductor, secured excellent performances. The solo in the concerto was played by Dr. Keeton, his place at the conductor's desk being taken by his old pupil, Mr. A. E. Armstrong. Dr. Keeton gave an excellent rendering of the solo part, its various points of interest being well brought out. Miss Dora Stott (a member of the Society) played two violin solos in very good style, and Mr. J. W. Vesey played Dr. C. H. Lloyd's 'Duo Concertante' for clarinet and pianoforte with excellent tone and expression. The Cathedral Glee Singers (a male-voice quartet) sang two glees with excellent expression and ensemble.—The Peterborough Choral Union gave Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' at their first concert on December 12, Dr. Keeton, the cathedral organist, conducting. The chorus, numbering eighty-eight voices, sang with good attack and expression. The accompaniments were well played by the orchestra of forty performers, largely composed of amateurs. The soloists were Miss Estella Linden, Miss Ella Rushforth, Mr. Joseph Reed (of Cambridge), and Mr. James B. Smith, of the cathedral choir. Dr. Keeton is to be congratulated upon an excellent rendering by his forces.

PORTSMOUTH.—The Philharmonic Society opened its season at the Town Hall, on November 30, with Handel's 'Samson.' There was a complete orchestra and large chorus, conducted by Mr. Monk Gould, and the solo vocalists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Mabel Braine, Mr. Charles Saunders, and Mr. Charles Knowles.

READING.—The Orpheus Society gave a successful concert on November 29, which included the following part-music: 'Music all powerful' (Walmisley), 'Father of heroes' (Callcott), 'To be gazing' (Stevens), 'I prythee send me' (Stainer), and 'Phoebe' (Bridge).—The Reading Philharmonic Society opened its season in the Town Hall, on December 13, with Berlioz's 'Childhood of Christ' and Bach's cantata 'Sing to the Lord.' A good performance was given, with Miss Winifred Marwood, Miss May Hawker, Mr. Vivian Bennetts, Mr. F. Randalow, and Mr. Montague Borwell as principal vocalists. Dr. F. J. Read conducted both concerts.

ST. ALBANS.—The first concert this season by the Philharmonic Society took place at the County Hall on December 6. The principal work was Cowen's 'Rose maiden,' in which the choir especially achieved distinction.

The solo vocalists were Miss Agnes Walker, Miss Mabel Slade, Mr. W. D. Vincent and Mr. Henry Sunman, and Mr. William Bent conducted.

SEVENOAKS.—The St. John's Choral Society opened its eighth season on December 13, when Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed in the Club Hall by a chorus and orchestra of 130 performers. The solo vocalists were Miss Mildred Evans, Miss Bessie Grant, Mr. Merlin Davies, Mr. Meurig James, all of whom gave an excellent interpretation of their respective parts. Mr. A. G. Whitehead, of Southsea, led the orchestra, and the conductor was Mr. W. A. Taylor.

SLOUGH.—The Choral Society gave a concert in the Public Hall on December 13, when the principal items in a miscellaneous programme were Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer'; 'Tubal Cain,' ballad for chorus and orchestra, by T. F. Dunhill; Christmas Carol, 'Rest Thee,' by R. F. Martin Akerman (the last two conducted by their respective composers), and Eaton Faning's 'Song of the vikings.' The orchestra was heard also alone in the entr'acte from Schubert's 'Rosamunde,' and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' March (No. 1). Miss Lucie Lenoir was solo vocalist and Mr. George Bower conducted.

SUTTON COLDFIELD.—The Choral Society gave a performance of the dramatic cantata 'King Conor' (Joseph H. Adams) on December 14, under the direction of the composer. Mr. James Coleman was the solo vocalist, and there was a small but efficient orchestra.

WALSALL.—The first concert of the season by the Philharmonic Union took place on December 4, when the first half of the programme consisted of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha,' the miscellaneous second part including the overture and Prelude to Act 3 'Lohengrin,' the Spinning-chorus, 'Flying Dutchman,' and 'Hail, bright abode,' 'Tannhäuser.' The choir sang with intelligence and precision, and the orchestra acquitted themselves with credit. Miss Evangeline Florence and Mr. Charles Tree were the solo vocalists, and Mr. Amos Keay was a fully-competent conductor.

WESTCLIFF-ON-SEA.—The Philharmonic Society gave a concert on December 9, when they performed Stanford's 'The Revenge,' and Arnott's 'Ballad of Carmilhan,' the former work being especially well rendered, both by choir and orchestra. Mr. Alfred Manby conducted.

WINDSOR.—The Windsor and Eton Choral Society gave their first concert this season on December 11, at the Royal Albert Institute, under the able conductorship of the Rev. B. C. S. Everett. Gade's 'Erl King's daughter' and Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens' were the main features of an attractive and varied programme which included a vigorous setting of 'Sir Patrick Spens' for choir and orchestra by Mr. A. M. Goodhart, conducted by the composer. These works were all excellently rendered, the solo vocalists being Miss Mildred Evans, Mrs. Floud and Mr. Greeves Johnson.

WORCESTER.—At the concert of the Festival Choral Society on December 5, in the Public Hall, the programme consisted of Dr. Walford Davies's successful cantata 'Everyman' and Mr. Hugh Blair's spirited setting of 'Trafalgar.' Choir and orchestra united in an impressive rendering of both works, and among the solo vocalists, Miss Mildred Evans, Miss May Yelland, Mr. James Horncastle, and Mr. William Higley, the last-named was conspicuously successful. Mr. Ivor Atkins conducted 'Everyman' and Mr. Blair directed his own work.—The Musical Society gave a concert in the Public Hall on December 12, when a large selection from Handel's 'Jephtha' occupied the greater part of the programme. Choir and orchestra, under the able direction of Mr. W. Mann Dyson, combined in an excellent performance, the orchestra (led by Mr. W. H. Dyson) specially distinguishing themselves. A feature in the second part was a 'Ballade' for strings, composed expressly for the Society by Mr. Julius A. Harrison, a young Birmingham musician, which was well received, and the choir sang with marked success Mr. A. J. Caldicott's part-song 'The Message.' The solo vocalists were Miss Marguerite Gell, Miss Estelle Lermite, Mr. H. E. Large and Mr. Ernest Davies.

Answers to Correspondents.

W. H. P.—There is all the difference between the time-signatures  $\frac{4}{2}$  and  $\frac{3}{2}$ ; but this does not affect your justifiable complaint in regard to speed—that in tunes bearing the time-signature  $\frac{3}{2}$  and associated with solemn words 'the organist persists in playing them so quickly that the words cannot be expressed.' Such an organist has surely missed his vocation, and the sooner he is replaced by a more consistent 'chief musician' the better.

J. P.—'The Church Psalter and Hymn Book,' edited by the Rev. William Mercer, was first published in the year 1850. He was then incumbent of St. George's Church, Sheffield. As the pointing of the Psalter portion of the book has long been superseded by other systems, there is no need to discuss its merits or demerits. The term 'drysalter,' as applied to complicated systems of chanting, is an old joke.

ORGANO PLENO.—The correct way in which to set about obtaining a post on the staff of one of the musical papers—preferably a weekly one—as writer of critiques and notices of concerts, recitals, &c., is, we regret to say, unknown to us. At all events it would not be incorrect to send specimens of your work to the Editors of the papers you name, both weekly and daily.

J. C. B.—(1) The twenty sonatas by Domenico Scarlatti to which you refer are included in the volume of sixty sonatas issued by Messrs. Breitkopf & Haertel, except No. 20, in G major. There are fingered editions of the sonatas, edited respectively by Tausig, Longo, Czerny, Bülow, and Méréan. (2) The other funeral march by Beethoven is the slow movement of the 'Eroica' symphony.

TWM TOMOS.—For double-bass solos, see Introduction and variations on 'Carnaval de Venise' (orchestra or pianoforte accompaniment) and 'Tarantelle' (with pianoforte accompaniment), both by Bottesini. There is a 'Concertstück' (with orchestra) by E. Storch, and solos (with pianoforte accompaniment) by Gouffé, Ratez and Laska.

H. G.—We have every reason to believe that no one has hymn-tuned Mendelssohn's 'How beautiful are the feet,' for the simple reason that no setting of those words was made by the composer of 'Elijah.' The air 'But the Lord is mindful of his own' ('St. Paul') has been arranged as an anthem (by Mr. G. A. Löhr), but not, so far as we know, as a hymn-tune.

A GREAT ADMIRER OF PADEREWSKI.—The 'Living Masters of Music Series' is published by Mr. John Lane. The writing of your hero's 'Life' has been assigned to Mr. E. A. Baughan, but so far the actual issue of the book has not been announced. We cannot say 'when Mr. Paderewski will next be playing in London.'

H. R. T.—For part-songs 'in the style of "Blow, ye gentle breezes, blow," with humming accompaniment,' see 'The dawn of song' (E. C. Bairstow) and 'Night' (Gounod) for mixed voices; and 'The image of the rose,' 'Tears of anguish' (both by Reichardt) and 'Annie Laurie' (arranged by Cantor).

KING OF THE MIST.—The mere fact that an Italian gentleman took part in an opera performance at Windsor Castle in the long ago does not qualify him to be a successful teacher of singing. Why not seek the advice of one of your own countrymen? By all means persevere.

F. F. C. C.—As your niece, 'aged 17½,' does not appear to have learned music, it may be advisable for her to attain some elementary knowledge of the art by private lessons before she thinks of studying 'especially singing,' even at a foreign conservatoire.

STRETTO.—A supplement portrait of Beethoven was issued with THE MUSICAL TIMES of January, 1901, and one (from the bust by Schaller) appeared in the special Beethoven number in December, 1892. A portrait of Bach has not yet been included in the series.

B. P.—Full particulars as to the Mark Hambourg prizes for composition are to be obtained from the donor at 2, Clifton Gardens, Maida Vale, London. Thanks for your 'piece of music' entitled 'By the sea.' May it be borne on the high tide of success and not be left high and dry!

I. G. H.—John Braham died in London, February 17, 1856, and was buried in Kensal Green Cemetery.

'CELLIST.—For a few good violoncello solos with piano-forte accompaniment see 'Romance' (Hofmann), 'Andante,' 'Tarantelle' and 'Vieille Chanson' (Hollman), 'Romance sans paroles,' Op. 109 (Mendelssohn), 'Allegretto,' 'Romanza' (Wolstenholme).

G. M.—The metal clarinet by Meyer, of Hanover, concerning which you seek information, is really of no value as a musical instrument. Such instruments were used many years ago, but they were not liked on account of the tone. We have never heard of a reed being made of chestnut wood.

AMATEUR VIOLINIST.—We cannot trace the passage in the B minor Symphony (Schubert) from your rather vague reference: in all such instances the number of the actual bar (or bars) should be given in order to facilitate reference.

W. V.—As used by most composers the terms ritard and rallentando have practically identical meanings; but some would say that ritard means simply a slower speed, yet not necessarily gradually slower.

W. J. M.—You will probably find the help you need in Dr. Shinn's book 'Musical memory and its cultivation' (Vincent, 2s. 6d.).

R. S. M.—'A short dictionary of musical terms,' edited by Arnold Kennedy (Curwen, 1s.), has phonetic pronunciations of all the foreign words therein given.

A. P.—Sevcik's 'Violin School' is published by Messrs. Bosworth & Co.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

A SACRED CANTATA

RECALLING SCENES IN THE LAST DAYS OF THE
SAVIOUR'S LIFE ON EARTH

FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BARITONE) AND CHORUS

INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY
THE CONGREGATION.

1. ON THE WAY TO JERUSALEM. 2. BEFORE JERUSALEM.
3. IN THE TEMPLE. 4. THE MOUNT OF OLIVES.
5. A NEW COMMANDMENT. 6. GETHSEMANE.
7. BETRAYED AND FORSAKEN. 8. BEFORE PILATE.
9. THE MARCH TO CALVARY. 10. CALVARY.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Score, paper cover, One Shilling and Sixpence; Paper boards,
Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 9d. Words only, 10s. per 100.
String Parts, 11s. Wind Parts and Full Score MS.

STANDARD (London), August 1, 1904.

Mr. Maunder has long since proved his ability to write melodiously without becoming secular, and to meet the requirements of average choirs and congregations while preserving the dignity and solemnity of English Church Music. His Cantata is a happy example of his talents in these respects, and the work may be warmly recommended to the clergy and choirmasters.

DAILY TELEGRAPH (London), April 2, 1904.

The Cantata is of devotional character. Not a few of the composer's pages are effective, and show a skilful hand.

CHURCH TIMES, March 26, 1904.

The work is decidedly attractive, and should be a welcome addition to the growing stores of Passion Music. The writing is melodious, and there is considerable vigour in the chorus work.

MUSICAL OPINION, June 1, 1904.

The work is remarkably clear and effective. A feature of the Cantata is the choral writing, throughout plain and straightforward yet invariably impressive and beautiful. The solo portions reveal many points of melodic beauty and musically interest, and are quite in keeping with the general high tone and character of the Cantata. One does not need to be a prophet to foretell the ultimate popularity of "Olivet to Calvary" in Church singing circles.

MUSICAL NEWS, April 2, 1904.

The music which Mr. Maunder has written is marked by those qualities of appropriate expression, melodiousness, and absence of great difficulty which have made his compositions in the past so acceptable, and we are sure that this Cantata will prove very welcome. We cordially recommend it to the notice of choirmasters.

MUSICAL TIMES, March 1, 1904.

The composer has approached the subject with a full sense of responsibility and in a devotional spirit. The music is charged with that melodious attribute with which Mr. Maunder's name is favourably associated, and is free from interpretative difficulty. The Cantata is one that may be welcomed, not only for its appropriateness to the Lenten Season, but upon its own merits.

BIRMINGHAM POST, April 1, 1904.

The musical treatment is reverent, and the Cantata should be impressive.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH, March 28, 1904.

The music is impressive throughout, and the work forms a notable addition to its class.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL, March 9, 1904.

A glance at the vocal score reveals a style of composition calculated to please, the various sections betraying facile and scholarly workmanship. The soli are lyrical and effective, and the Cantata throughout is written in a popular vein.

THE LADY, April 21, 1904.

Organists and choirmasters will find the Cantata excellent for uniting the choir and congregation in a common interest. . . . "Olivet to Calvary" is an excellent work for a special service of song.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

SET TO MUSIC BY
G. F. HANDEL.
EDITED BY
EBENEZER PROUT.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY THE REV. J. TROUTBECK, D.D.

ABRIDGED FOR CHURCH USE BY THE REV. JAMES BADEN POWELL.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

THE present publication—an abridgment of the complete edition to about one fourth of the original work, but including most of its gems—is an attempt to make it available for Church purposes. The arrangement is planned with a view to bring out (i) the Institution of the Holy Communion, and (ii) the most important points in the Trial before Pontius Pilate, with the reflective (solo) meditations upon it, closing with the "Calvary" Chorus ("Haste, ye souls") and the last Choral. This gives a more complete and consecutive selection than any other portions of this long oratorio.

For the sake of the Congregation, by way of giving them a response to what has been sung by the Choir, two or three Hymns may with advantage be introduced.

Price One Shilling.
Words only, 10s. per 100.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY
ANTON DVOŘÁK.
(OP. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY
FRED. J. W. CROWE
(Organist of Chichester Cathedral).

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY
H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

NOTE.

This English version of Dvořák's "Stabat Mater" brings the beauties of the work within the reach of those who, for various reasons, prefer not to use the original Latin. The adaptation avoids the use of any passages of a controversial nature, thus making it available for use in any English place of worship; and, whilst preserving as far as possible the original rhythm, no pains have been spared to make this English version both vocal and practical.

Chichester, 1904.

F. J. W. C.

The accompaniment, while not professing to be purely an organ arrangement (which would necessitate the use of three staves), will, it is hoped, be found useful at the organ and at the same time easily playable on the piano at rehearsals.

Very few suggestions as to stops have been made, but the plain indication of the pedal part throughout the work and of the instrumentation (marked in brackets) will be a useful guide to the organist in his interpretation of this complex score.

H. E. B.

If there is one choral work of the past twenty years that can claim to have been universally and thoroughly accepted as a masterpiece by all who have any right to express an opinion, it is this most beautiful composition. Its position among the masterpieces of music is too assured to need any defence, and it may suffice to recall the fact that since it made the composer's reputation in this country, it has been heard at the Cathedral Festivals of Worcester, Hereford, Gloucester, Chester and Lincoln, at the Birmingham, Norwich, Leeds, Sheffield, and Hovingham Festivals, and, of course, in countless churches and concert-rooms, one memorable occasion being in 1891, when the composer conducted it at Cambridge, on the day when he received an honorary degree from the University. . . . The version, which is by the organist of Chichester Cathedral, Dr. Crowe, is at least a translation of the original, and not an irrelevant and absurd concoction like the unsectarian libretto, entitled "Tribulation," which one William Ball provided for Rossini's "Stabat Mater."—Yorkshire Post.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

The wonderful individuality of these Church Cantatas. . . . An undreamt-of wealth of new phenomena meets our gaze on all sides; grand tone-pictures in new, strange, and diversified forms, single ideas of stalwart growth, and of free and noble birth; poetic inspirations of such unspeakable depth, that we are impressed with an unearthly awe.—SPITTA'S Life of Bach.

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City.' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

THE COUNCIL SCHOOL HYMN BOOK

A COLLECTION OF HYMNS, WITH PRAYERS,
FOR USE IN COUNCIL SCHOOLS

COMPILED TO MEET THE PARTICULAR NEEDS OF THE NEW EDUCATION
AUTHORITIES ESTABLISHED BY THE ACT OF 1902.

PRICES.

- a. Words and Tunes with complete Accompaniment, the usual hymnal form, price 2s. 6d.
- b. The Words with the Melody only (staff and tonic sol-fa notations combined), for the use of the children, price 1s.
- c. Words only (limp cloth), 6d.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE MUSIC EDITION.

The music of the Council School Hymn Book has been selected for its melodic interest and general suitability to children's voices. These essentials have been kept steadily in view as regards the new tunes composed expressly for the book, wherein many well-established favourites find a place. It will be observed that some of the tunes appear in lower keys than usual in order that young voices may not be unduly strained.

Every care has been taken to make the music of the book acceptable to teachers as well as children, in the hope that daily hymn-singing may become a specially enjoyable feature of school life.

The Hymns (150) chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

PRESS NOTICES.

THE GUARDIAN.

This little book is excellent for the purpose announced by its title. The hymns which it contains are very suitable for a Christian School; and it would not be easy to show that any old favourites have been shut out which ought to have been included, nor that many which are below what a hymn for children should be, have crept in.

CHRISTIAN WORLD.

Outwardly unpretentious, "The Council School Hymn Book" will be eagerly scanned by those who know how important it is to preserve sanity and wholesomeness in hymns that are often sung by children. Put briefly, the aim of the editors has been to avoid sectarianism and doggerel; and they have succeeded so well as to prompt the wish that this book could displace those in use at the average Sunday school.

THE BOOKSELLER.

We do not think that a better hymnal for use in public elementary schools than the present could be wished or hoped for. The editors, it is sufficiently clear, were bound in such a publication to exclude strictly denominational hymns, and to select those only which express the central truths of religion. This they have consistently done throughout, and have at the same time admirably suited the varied collection to the capacities of the young. Such classics as "The spacious firmament on high" (Addison), "Hark! the herald angels sing" (C. Wesley), "Let us with a glad mind" (Milton), and other more modern hymns, of which the inclusion has been permitted by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, the Rev. J. Page Hopps, and Miss Betham-Edwards, among other writers; and the prayers at the end of the collection (and chosen on the same principle) for the opening and closing of school, and for certain special occasions, will be found well adapted to their object.

THE SCHOOLMISTRESS.

The editors of this beautiful collection of hymns have done their work well, and have thoroughly carried out their aims in including only those hymns which express the central truths of religion, and in making the collection as large and varied as possible, consistently with the maintenance of a high literary standard.

BRISTOL TIMES AND MIRROR.

"The Council School Hymn Book" contains well and wisely chosen hymns, which express the central truths of religion, and are within the comprehension, and suited to the capacities, of children. At the end are prayers for the opening and closing of school, which have been selected on the same principle as the hymns. The collection is an admirable one, and deserves to be generally adopted.

THE SCOTSMAN.

A useful little compilation for elementary schools. It is handy, well edited, and well printed, and has no particular denominational tendency.

WESTERN MORNING NEWS.

Whoever were the compilers of this book, they have discharged their task very well. The 150 hymns selected express the central truths of the Christian Faith, and with one or two exceptions are just suited to the comprehension of the children for whom the selection is intended. As should be, catholicity is the note of the book; cheek by jowl we find John Bunyan and John Keble; Walsham How and J. Montgomery; T. Kelly and F. W. Faber; J. Page Hopps and R. S. Hawker; C. Wesley and J. M. Neale; Bishop Wordsworth and John Milton; Baring-Gould and Isaac Watts. How's Diamond Jubilee Hymn, "O King of kings" appropriately finds its place, and perhaps Kipling's "Recessional" might have been included also. The short prayers at the end of the book are drawn up on the same broad principle as the hymns, and some special ones are added for "Our Country," "before and after holidays," for times of "dangerous sickness," and for those connected with the school who are in "trouble or sorrow." Altogether the compilation is a model of what such a book should be, and it richly deserves the widest use in the Council schools of the land.

NOVELLO'S CHORISTER SERIES OF CHURCH MUSIC.

There are many Churches and some Colleges and Schools where a daily or occasional service is sung by boys only. The "Chorister Series" furnishes the necessary music for such occasions. It includes Responses, Services—Matins, Communion and Evensong, also Wedding and Funeral Services—and Anthems, all specially composed for equal voices. It need hardly be said that the "Chorister Series" meets the requirements of Ladies' Colleges and Schools where a choral service is in vogue.

ODE TO THE NORTH-EAST WIND

SET FOR CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA

BY

FREDERIC CLIFFE.

VOCAL SCORE, PRICE TWO SHILLINGS.

Tonic Sol-fa, 9d. Full Score, MS.; String Parts, 7s. 6d.; Wind Parts (in the Press).

THE TIMES.

Like the poem, the composition is manly, direct, and purely English in style; the composer has made the most of every suggestion in the words, and, among other things, the second number, "Hark, the brave North-Easter!" contains delightful musical allusions to the chase, and is followed by a "nocturne" which may be interpreted as the dreams of the hounds. Fitful passages occur for a moment or two at a time, one a phrase of suave beauty, and the whole might be taken as an orchestral picture of a canine Queen Mab. A charmingly graceful, flowing chorus follows next, in which the four-part female chorus is used with great skill. The last chorus has a broad tune in the manner of a folk-song, and gathers up the chief theme of the "dream" movement.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

He seems to rejoice in the howl of the nor-easter over a Yorkshire moor, but as an artist he restrains his ecstasy, and so orders the outcome of it that I should not be surprised to find choral societies all over the country taking up the "Ode to the North-East Wind." The composer has a sharp eye for contrasts, and the couplet referring to hounds, "Go and rest to-morrow in your dreams," suggested a nocturne which forms the central episode of the piece. Mr. Cliffe excels in dainty music of this kind, and the effect of the nocturne coming after the turbulent greeting to the wind is wholly charming. That turbulent greeting, by the way, is not wild beyond measure. Everywhere there is a proper restraint in consideration of the intelligible, the orderly, and the beautiful. This, in brief, is a summary of the new work as dictated by my own impressions, and I congratulate Mr. Cliffe upon another festival success in the programme.

MORNING POST.

The music is quite easy to follow; there is a distinct English flavour about it. Now if, on the one hand, composers who seek to be "up-to-date" often become too elaborate and vague, those who seek after clearness of form, and whose aim is to please rather than astonish, run the danger of being accounted old-fashioned, or it may be commonplace. Mr. Cliffe's music is easy to follow at a first hearing, but it is never open to the latter charge. It is distinctly good, and the very ease with which the composer expresses himself makes one overlook much clever workmanship. The picturesque scoring and the grateful writing for the voices will no doubt win popularity for the work.

DAILY NEWS.

It is a robust work, and is certainly well suited to the rhetoric of the poem. . . . Mr. Cliffe, jocund and open though he be in general effect, has been wise enough to strike a deeper note, to lift, as it were, the surface-thought of his feeling out of any sentiment of commonplace. His conception of the south-west wind is altogether delightful, and there is some strong choral work in the finale.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

The work, a short one, which was well performed and given an enthusiastic reception by a large audience, is likely to find general popularity owing to its melodious and forceful themes. It is essentially English, direct, and straightforward in treatment, while containing many happily descriptive passages. It has evidently been written with an eye to popular favour.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It is a work which has both brilliance and charm, and, having regard to the nature of the poem, in which neither mood nor metre is subjected to any material variation, the success of the composer in giving variety of effect is quite remarkable. . . . The whole work has a vigour and a freshness quite in keeping with the subject, and the power which it evidences enhances the surprise one has long felt that Mr. Cliffe has not done more than he has. . . . Mr. Cliffe has done more than turn Kingsley's poem into an effective composition; he has caught its atmosphere admirably. There is the breeziness of the poetry in the music; there is also its distinctively English sentiment; and while he has secured variety he has also given his music coherence.

MORNING LEADER.

Mr. Cliffe writes choral music such as Yorkshire loves—melodious, with well-marked rhythms and solid harmonies, and there is a splendidly healthy, open-air spirit in all which appeals to the North-country imagination. He displays more especially in the nocturne, gifts of fancy which prevent the music from becoming merely boisterous, and the scoring is throughout excellent.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

In his treatment of the lines the composer has adopted a characteristic directness which will without doubt serve to make it immensely popular. It is all very obvious, because the subject makes no call upon subtlety or psychology. The composer has adopted Handel's advice to the amateur composer, when he hung his music out of the window—he has given it "some fresh air." The work teems with tunefulness. If the composer had sat down and, recognising the barrenness of recently-issued publishers' lists of novelties, deliberately set about to write a pleasant, easy, and effective work for the market, he could not have succeeded better. It must not be inferred from this that there is anything unworthy or cheap in the "Ode to the North-East Wind." On the contrary, it is full of cleverness, musicianly to a degree. . . . It may well be prophesied that soon Mr. Cliffe's Ode will go the round of the choral societies.

SHEFFIELD INDEPENDENT.

Mr. Cliffe is a craftsman needing not to be ashamed. He has not given the world anything better than this Ode. It is a work in which the orchestra and the chorus alike delight. He thrills and he enthuses by his musical portrayal of his text. There is a feeling of the presence of icebergs as he sings of the black north-easter, and there is the reflex of the pride of the parson-poet in the doings of our conquering fathers who sailed over seas. There is most grateful music for every voice. That assigned to the ladies' voices is of the most captivating and entrancing, while that for his men's voices has the true manly ring in it, something of the salt spray, and of the field sports which have done so much in making England mistress of the seas. He must be an alien who did not feel proud of the setting of the last stanza of the Ode, who did not feel its bracing effect as the men and women of Hallamshire gave it full-larynxed utterance—"Blow, thou wind of God." The instrumental workmanship is not less delightful than the vocal. Mr. Cliffe uses the full orchestra in the manner of the mature music-maker. . . . Whatever may be the future of works heard during the Festival, "The Ode to the North-East Wind" will have a long and popular survival.

LEEDS MERCURY.

The difficulty for a composer undertaking to set the lines was their lack of variety in idea and treatment, but Mr. Cliffe has provided a point of repose by introducing an instrumental Nocturne hinting of dreams and the subdued echoes of the hunt. The rest consists of strong, vigorous, and simple choral writing, full of picturesque and even dramatic effects, such as the Sheffield chorus love. It is a thoroughly successful little work, which will undoubtedly add to the composer's repute.

YORKSHIRE DAILY OBSERVER.

It is English music to the core, one may say, looking to the age in which we live. I do not know whether Mr. Cliffe would feel altogether complimented by the comparison of his Ode with Bennett's "May Queen," but, remembering the new orientation in the republic of music which has ensued from the observatory of Bayreuth, that genial work by his once-famous Yorkshire predecessor presents as good a parallel as I can think of at the moment. The English note is heard in the straightforward style of the declamatory passages and the tunes of the melodic part-writing. . . . The pith of the matter is—and at this I may leave it—that Mr. Cliffe has written a work which is at once popular and good music. The audience does not need to be educated up to it. Its acceptance this evening was instant and enthusiastic.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

NEW SONG BY JOSEPH H. ADAMS.

A SONG OF HOPE

What though the day be dark, and storms rage over the seas,
 What though the fields are brown, and leaves fall fast from the trees,
 What though the birds are flown, and skies overhead are grey,
 What though the sun goes down so soon on a winter's day?

Spring will come with her joy, and glory of bud and flower,
 Spring, with her song of hope in every bright'ning hour,
 Spring, with her dress of green embroider'd with woodland bloom,
 Spring, with her April tears and sunlight after the gloom.

Deep in the warm earth's breast the flowers are living still,
 Hid till the spring shall come, proclaiming her royal will;
 "Wake! O ye sleeping flow'rs, and bloom on the earth once more—Wake! for the spring has come and the winter time is o'er."

OLD ENGLISH ORGAN MUSIC

EDITED BY

JOHN E. WEST.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs.

THE TIMES.

It is no easy matter to give to those who did not hear the first performance of Sir Hubert Parry's setting of "The Pied Piper of Hamelin" on Thursday evening a clear idea of the work. The fun is fast and furious, the meaning of the music as clear to the understanding as Browning's poem, and every point is made with complete success, while the humour is on the same high level as that of the poem itself. That frequent performances of the work will be given is tolerably certain, for there are no great difficulties to be overcome if only choruses can be found to sing lightly and delicately enough, while singing usually in a very rapid tempo any slackness would spoil the delightful spirit of the music, which is as witty as Calverley's verse and as subtle as the strategy of a Mackenzie chess problem. The ballad is one of the most successful pieces of genuinely humorous music that exist in the whole range of musical literature.

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

Sir Hubert has done exceedingly well in his music to the most mirthful tragedy of the Piper of Hamelin, taking in and breathing out the full spirit of the piece, and throwing it into new forms with an accomplished musician's art. The humour is immense, and the expression of it so frank and free that the duller listener can hardly miss a point. Not an opportunity of enhancing the fun has been lost. . . . There is nothing pretentious in the piece. Its design is to amuse, and that laudable purpose is carried out in the most direct and unaffected manner. Of course the composer reaped a harvest of success, and a full assurance that he has added to the gaiety of the nation.

DAILY NEWS.

It is well that the foremost of the older school of living British composers should break away from the fashionable pessimism of much modern music, and prove that there is such a thing as humour. . . . With all his sanity of thought and virility of emotion, he has not before written anything in a frankly humorous vein, and the cleverness and unflinching ingenuity of service with which he has illustrated Browning's poem came as a great surprise. . . . The work is full of new humorous devices, such as assigning the interpolations of "Quoth he," and "Cried they" and the like to the chorus, while the baritone and tenor sing the speeches of the Pied Piper and the Mayor. The orchestra plays its part too, in the humour, and the little work is certainly a masterpiece of musical humour. It will be a welcome addition to the repertoire of choral societies.

DAILY CHRONICLE.

Last night Sir Hubert Parry's brilliant musical joke, "The Pied Piper of Hamelin," roused the audience at the Norwich Festival, who had become somewhat jaded, into a spontaneous display of merriment. There is scarcely a page in the score of the "Pied Piper" but contains some subtle orchestral witticism.

MORNING POST.

Humour in music is not so common a quality as some people might think. It reigns throughout the major portion of this delightful work—humour of the kind associated with the "Meistersinger." At a time when so much music is dreamy and dismal it is a particular pleasure to meet with a work like the present, every bar of which denotes the hand of a master. . . . Under the composer's direction the performance went with great spirit, and the cheers at the close testified to the appreciation of the audience. There is no doubt that the "Pied Piper of Hamelin" will be heard of again ere long.

MORNING LEADER.

Sir Hubert displayed a hitherto almost unsuspected vein of unconventional and fascinating humour, not only in the purely imitative passages, but rather in the whole spirit of the music. For instance, all the remarks of the Mayor are followed by the words "Said the mayor," in the bass, and the death of the rats is celebrated by a humorous perversion of the Funeral March of Chopin. The themes are melodious and cheerful, without flippancy, and the scoring is much lighter and clearer than is usual with the composer; and the fine, open-air vitality of it all make it extremely attractive. . . . The reception of the work was enthusiastic in the extreme, and it should be heard often.

YORKSHIRE POST.

It is a work fresh and humorous, entering into the spirit of the quaint story, and full of touches which give point to the poem. . . . The choral parts are written so as to give plenty of room for intelligent and pointed declamation, but they require extreme smartness in attack, and in this respect the chorus left something to be desired. Otherwise the singers entered thoroughly into the spirit of the work, while the soloists treated their parts in the right spirit of low comedy. Among the happy touches may be instanced the exciting climax which accompanies the appearance and rapid exit of the rats, and the tripping music which is associated with a troop of children, while the conclusion of the whole matter is broad and genial in treatment.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.

In this work he lets himself go with all the enjoyment of a schoolboy determined to make the best of life, and he has caught the spirit of Browning's mock solemnity with wonderful skill. Sir Hubert's humour is direct and telling but never flippant, and never degenerates into buffoonery. . . . But the real humour of the music lies in the characterisation of the Mayor and of the Piper, and in touches like the setting of the oft-recurring phrase "Said the mayor" for the basses of the chorus. . . . In the end the composer, like the poet, touches a more serious note, but still remains true to the straightforward simplicity which had characterised the opening. . . . "The Pied Piper" will cause many audiences to spend a very pleasant half-hour.

MR. G. CHANDOS CRADOCK

TENOR (Lay Clerk, Durham Cathedral),

Of the Cumberland Festival, 1906, and Principal Provincial Concerts.

BELFAST CHORAL SOCIETY.—"The treat of the evening was the quality of Mr. Chandos Cradock's tenor, the finest tenor we have heard for many a day. One would never grow tired of listening to that extraordinary velvety mellow sweetness of tone—a truly remarkable voice, a voice in thousands. His style is mature and finished."—Belfast Evening Telegraph.

CUMBERLAND FESTIVAL.—"Mr. Cradock sang with charming tenderness and passion, and his phrasing was delightful. He received well-deserved encores."—Whitehaven Free Press.

BURTON ORCHESTRAL SOCIETY.—"As a tenor, Mr. Cradock is one of the best that has visited Burton."—Burton Gazette.

For terms, &amp;c., address, 2, The Avenue, Durham.

Up-to-date Press Notices, &c., forwarded on application. Address, Cathedral, Lichfield.

MR. ERNEST PIKE

(TENOR)

Who recently had the honour of singing before the King and Queen at Chatsworth. Of the London Ballad Concerts, &c.

Address, principal Agents; or 15, Carminia Road, Balham, S.W.

MR. A. LIVINGSTONE HIRST,

B.Mus., F.R.C.O. (TENOR).

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S "EVERYMAN."—RICHMOND NEW PHILHARMONIC.

(First Performance outside Leeds and London.)

"Mr. A. Livingstone Hirst sang the tenor part with appropriate energy and character, and deserved the warm appreciation which his efforts received."—The Herald.

"Mr. A. Livingstone Hirst sang the part of Death very effectively, infusing into his voice a tone fitted to the character."—Richmond Times.

"Mr. A. Livingstone Hirst, as Death, was admirable."—Black and White.

"The great solos allotted to Death were very capably sung by Mr. A. Livingstone Hirst, who had evidently made a thoughtful study of the more than ordinarily difficult music. Not only was his part sung with highly artistic feeling, but he infused into it a character which it would have been almost impossible to have improved."—Surrey Comet.

"As to your own performance as Death, in 'Everyman,' I cannot speak too highly."—Mr. JAMES BROWN, Mus. Bac. (Conductor).

"HIAWATHA."—COWES.

"Beautiful voice—clear enunciation and excellent timbre . . . a very fine reading, culminating, as he told of the Ascension of Christ, in a magnificent top B."—Isle of Wight Herald.

"Mr. Livingstone Hirst's good tenor voice was heard with appropriate tenderness in 'Onaway, awake,' and he likewise gave a finished production of the religious spirit associated with the lines 'Then the black robe chief.'

QUEEN'S (LARGE) HALL.

"Mr. A. Livingstone Hirst's excellent tenor voice and artistic style were well fitted to interpret the music allotted to the hero, and in his solos and in the duet with Madame S——, he gave much satisfaction to his hearers."—Stage.

"Mr. Livingstone Hirst made a decided success in the title-rôle."—Lady.

"Your fine voice and artistic reading of the part were admired by all."—Mr. E. PRITCHARD (Composer and Conductor).

"ST. PAUL."—BATTERSEA.

"Mr. Livingstone Hirst again maintained his reputation as a vocalist of the front rank, and though charged with a heavy task he emerged triumphantly with many honours. His many passages were rendered with such exquisite taste and finish that it seems almost invidious to particularise, unless we mention the recitative 'And they stoned him' and the aria 'Be thou faithful unto death.'"

"Llandysilio," Montpelier Road, East Twickenham.

MR. ARTHUR WALENN

(BARITONE).

Now Booking for Next Season.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S "EVERYMAN."PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, RICHMOND, May 3. Of this Concert—The Herald says: "Mr. Arthur Walenn's fine baritone voice was heard to most advantage in the exacting solos for Everyman."The Surrey Comet: "Mr. Arthur Walenn gave to the character of Everyman the deepest expression and impressiveness, at the same time avoiding that exaggeration which would tempt a singer of less culture."The Richmond Times: "Of the soloists, the place of honour must certainly be given to Mr. Arthur Walenn, who, as Everyman, had so much to do. It was always difficult, requiring great variety and expression, to ward off a suspicion of dullness that might otherwise have crept in. In Mr. Walenn's hands nothing of the kind happened; he has a bass voice of very pleasing quality, well under control, and was evidently thoroughly acquainted not only with the music itself, but with the spirit of the work."South Wales Daily Telegraph: "HIAWATHA" (conducted by the composer).—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was heard to real advantage. The first part was full of poetry and imagination, and in the 'Vision' ('True is all Iago tells us') he sang with a dramatic intensity which was little short of a revelation."Tunbridge Wells Courier: "ELIJAH."—"Mr. Arthur Walenn afforded us an intellectual and musical treat in his embodiment of the idea of the Prophet Elijah. To enact a character of this kind, an arduous duty is imposed on the singer, who not only requires a voice of good power and range, but an artistic insight into the nature of the subject to be dealt with is imperative. That Mr. Walenn fulfilled these attributes is undeniable, and nothing but praise can be accorded him for a really superb delineation of the part."Liverpool Daily Post: The "MESSIAH" at Liverpool.—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was very successful in sustaining the bass solos, both voice and vocalization being excellent."

MOZART'S ONLY ENGLISH COMPOSITION.

A COMMEMORATIVE NOTE.

One hundred and fifty years have come and gone since one of the greatest of great musicians came into the world. Wolfgang Amade Mozart was born at Salzburg on January 27, 1756, and the in London for a year and three months, giving concerts, musical at-homes, playing before King George III. and his Consort at Buckingham Palace, listening to Handel's oratorios at the Lenten performances given in Drury Lane Theatre, &c.—altogether having 'a good time' in the land of 'Rule, Britannia.' After having lodged on their arrival at the house of 'Mr. Couzin, Hair-Cutter, in Cecil Court, St. Martin's Lane,' they paid a visit to Tunbridge Wells, and subsequently stayed at the house of a Dr. Randal, situated in Fife-fields, Chelsea, then in the country, but now the site of Lower Ebury Street. On their return to London proper they took apartments over the event is one that should in some way be commemorated in a musical journal. As any eulogy of so great a genius would be quite superfluous, it seems fitting to refer to the only composition which Mozart set to English words. In April, 1764, Wolfgang and his sister Nannerl were brought by their father to England to be exploited as 'Prodigies of Nature.' They remained shop of a Mr. Williamson, who carried on the business of a 'Wax and Sperma-Cæti chandler' in Thrift (now Frith) Street, Soho, a house replaced in 1858 by a modern habitation and now numbered 21, on the east side of that street.

Not only did the Mozart family dwell under the Wax and Sperma-Cæti chandler's roof during the remainder of their sojourn in London, but the pair of prodigies there gave exhibitions of their musical skill on terms which will be found stated in the following advertisement from the Daily Advertiser of April 9, 1765:

Mr. Mozart, the Father of the celebrated young Musical Family, who have so justly raised the Admiration of the greatest Musicians of Europe, intending soon to leave England, proposes, before his Departure, to give to the Public in general an Opportunity of hearing these young Prodigies perform both in public and private, by giving at the End of this Month, a ## CONCERT.

Which will chiefly be conducted by his Son, a Boy of Eight Years of Age, with all the Overtures of his own Composition.

Tickets may be had, at 5s each, of Mr. Mozart, at Mr. Williamson's in Thrift-street, Soho; where such Ladies and Gentlemen, who chuse to come themselves, and take either Tickets, or the Sonatas composed by this Boy, and dedicated to her Majesty (Price 10s 6d) will find the Family at home every Day in the Week, from Twelve to Two o'Clock, and have an Opportunity of putting his Talents to a more particular proof, by giving him any Thing to play at Sight, or any Music without a Bass, which he will write upon the Spot, without recurring to his Harpsichord.

Notice of the Day, and Place of the Concert, will be given in due Time.

The sonatas ('Price 10s. 6d.') mentioned in the above advertisement bore a French title, thus printed:

Six Sonates pour le Clavecin qui peuvent se jouer avec L'accompagnement de violon ou flaute Traversiere.

Très humblement dédiées à sa majesté Charlotte, reine de la Grande Bretagne, composées par J. G. WOLFGANG MOZART, Agé de huit Ans. Oeuvre III.

London: Printed for the Author and sold at his Lodgings at Mr. Williamson, in Thrift Street, Soho.

Mozart's presentation copies to Queen Charlotte, still preserved in the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace, and bound in royal red, have the separate violin part in manuscript, probably in the handwriting of the elder Mozart.

The prodigy business in the drawing-room at Frith Street does not appear to have been very brisk, whatever the Wax and Sperma-Cæti trade in the shop below may have been. This inference is drawn from a more or less booming advertisement to be found in the Daily Advertiser of July 11, 1765:

To all Lovers of Sciences.

The Greatest Prodigy that Europe, or that even Human Nature has to boast of, is, without Contradiction, the little German Boy WOLFGANG MOZART; a Boy, Eight Years old, who has, and indeed very justly, raised the Admiration not only of the greatest Men, but also of the greatest Musicians in Europe. It is hard to say, whether his Execution upon the Harpsichord and his playing and singing at Sight, or his own Caprice, Fancy, and Compositions for all Instruments, are most astonishing. The Father of this Miracle, being obliged by Desire of several Ladies and Gentlemen to postpone, for a very short Time, his Departure from England, will give an Opportunity to hear this little Composer and his Sister, whose musical Knowledge wants no Apology. Performs every Day in the Week, from Twelve to Three o'clock in the Great Room, at the Swan and Hoop, Cornhill.

Admittance 2s. 6d. each Person.

The two Children will play also together with four Hands upon the same Harpsichord, and put upon it a handkerchief, without seeing the Keys.

The last clause of this advertisement is quite Barnumesque in its appeal to popular favour.

On July 24, 1765, the Mozarts left London, never again to return. Before bidding farewell to the Metropolis, Master Mozart was taken to the British Museum. There he was evidently regarded as a juvenile of some importance in that he was asked to present to the Library a copy of his published sonatas. This he did, and more: he composed, as a memento of his visit, a short vocal piece to the words 'God is our refuge and strength.' Whether this was a spontaneous act on his part, or whether its composition was instigated and the words selected by someone else, is not known. It is sufficient to state that the original manuscript is carefully preserved in the British Museum, though the left-hand edge has unfortunately been cut. We have much pleasure in giving a facsimile (full-size) of this most interesting composition as one of the special supplements to the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. Although the little fellow was only nine years old at the time he wrote the piece, it will be observed that he headed it 'Chorus by Mr. Wolfgang Mozart, 1765.' It is believed that this is the only composition by the mighty master set to English words. Previous to the family's departure from London, Mozart's father received the following official letter from the Museum authorities:

SIR,—I am ordered by the Standing Committee of the Trustees of the British Museum, to signify to You, that they have received the present of the Musical performances of Your very ingenious son, which You were pleased lately to make Them, and to return You their Thanks for the same.

British Museum,

M. MATY,

Secretary.

A printed version, in short score, of Master Mozart's little anthem is given on the opposite page for the purposes of reference and interpretation.

DR. THOMAS MUIR, C.M.G., F.R.S.

SUPERINTENDENT-GENERAL OF EDUCATION IN CAPE COLONY.

Politics and the material interests of South Africa, not to say its terrible war, have so largely occupied the mind of the Mother-country that little or no thought has been given to the subject of education in Cape Colony—a subject the importance of which cannot be over-estimated by reason of its influence on the children in training them to become peaceable, patriotic and self-respecting members of the community. But although so little has been heard about it here at 'home,' yet this character-building work of education has been and is still going on steadily, unobtrusively and efficiently among the rising generation of South Africa, regardless of racial differentiation—a noble work which will without doubt result in a plentiful harvest of national well-being and of loyalty to King and country. The presence in England after an absence of fourteen years of the wise administrator of education in Cape Colony, Dr. Thomas Muir, furnishes the opportunity of drawing attention to the splendid work, especially in music, which he and those associated with him are doing in that interesting corner of Greater Britain. As a preliminary, however, a few words must be said about Dr. Muir's own distinguished career.

Thomas Muir was born, on August 25, 1845, close to the Stonebyres Falls of the river Clyde, his father, George Muir, having come thither from the not far distant town of Biggar. Books dealing with the latter neighbourhood—such as the very interesting volume entitled 'Biggar and the land of Fleming'—furnish glimpses of the Muirs of Annieston from so long ago as 1493 to nearly the middle of the 18th century. Evil times came with the '45, and the last laird settled humbly in the adjoining village of Biggar, where his son William Muir followed the trade of a 'souter.' And did not the Gladstones originally belong to the same village? It is therefore interesting to note that this William Muir, Dr. Muir's grandfather, was associated with an uncle of the great prime minister in promoting a schism in the Parish Church of Biggar and in founding a Secession Kirk. The two worthies now sleep in the churchyard close to the church which in life they deserted.

George Muir, the father of the subject of our sketch, removed eight miles farther down the Clyde to a village called Overtown, whereupon his son Thomas was sent to the public school of Wishaw, a large school erected for that populous mining district. Here young Muir soon came to the front in all the ordinary school subjects, excelling in English, Latin, Greek and mathematics, with the result that he attracted the attention of Lady Belhaven and other patrons of the school at Wishaw. Urged to pursue his studies at the University, he accordingly entered as an undergraduate at Glasgow. That was before the present stately buildings were erected, as at that time (the 'sixties') the classes met in the old College buildings in the High Street. His favourite Professors there were Ramsay (Latin), Lushington (Greek), Blackburn (Mathematics), and Thomson, now Lord Kelvin (Physics), by all of whom his ability was recognized. He specially distinguished himself in Greek and mathematics, being easily at the head of his classes in those subjects. The long summer vacations of his University course were devoted to teaching, and even then as a young man he showed considerable aptitude for imparting knowledge. This was doubtless the reason why, in the last year of his under-graduateship, he was asked to fill, for the closing weeks of the term, the post of assistant-professor of mathematics which had suddenly become vacant by the appointment to Belfast of Mr. R. C. J. Nixon, of 'Nixon's Euclid' fame. Students of the two classes of which young Muir then had charge still speak of the perfect order which, without serious effort, he maintained while engaged in the difficult work of lecturing to students about the same age as himself. On leaving the University in 1868 he accepted the post of sub-warden of the College Hall at St. Andrew's. There he remained for two years, teaching mathematics, learning to play golf (one of his early hobbies at the Cape), and gaining the friendship of men like Principal Shairp, Professor Swan, and Professor Fischer.

Following his sojourn at St. Andrew's came a continental period, passed chiefly in Germany, for the purpose of learning modern languages; but this change of occupation was curtailed by his appointment (at the end of 1871) to the assistant-professorship of mathematics at Glasgow University, in succession to Professor Everett. In this new and congenial sphere of work during the next three years, Dr. Muir's fame as a teacher of mathematics became established: then it was that he communicated his first mathematical paper to the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and was elected a Fellow. In 1874 he obtained the coveted post of mathematical and science master of the ancient High School of Glasgow, where for eighteen years his vigour and ability were devoted to rearing young mathematicians and in developing the modern and science sides of the school. So exhaustless was his store of energy, however, that he could always afford to have other irons in the fire. Mathematical research was never neglected, with the result that in 1882 his alma mater conferred upon him the honorary degree of LL.D., and the Royal Society of Edinburgh awarded him the Keith medal in 1884. His love for geography too, and his deep interest in geographical discovery, never flagged. To promote the study of it he initiated the formation of a special section of the Glasgow Philosophical Society, and assisted in the founding of the Royal Scottish Geographical Society, which has been so conspicuously successful. To the High School period belong a series of publications, the chief of which were a 'Treatise on the theory of Determinants' (1882) and the 'History of Determinants' (1890). But it was as a teacher of mathematics that Dr. Muir was then best known, and many of his brilliant pupils now hold important posts all over the world. Professor Chrystal spoke of him as 'one of the best teachers of mathematics in Great Britain,' while Professor Mackenzie, author of the 'Manual of Ethics,' &c., is even more eulogistic in an article contributed by him two years ago to the High School Magazine. Dr. Muir is a Fellow of the Royal Society, a distinction conferred upon him in 1900 in acknowledgment of his mathematical studies and of his eminence as an educationist, and a year later he was created a Companion of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. As Vice-Chancellor of the University of the Cape of Good Hope in 1901, he had the honour of conferring upon the Duke of York (now Prince of Wales) the degree of LL.D. He is a Trustee of the South African Museum, the South African Public Library, and the South African Art Gallery; he is a Member of the Geological, the Meteorological, and Civil Service Commissions; and Vice-President of the South African Association for the Advancement of Science. His recreations are golf and tennis for the body; music, geography and mathematics for the mind.

We have not yet, it will be observed, said anything concerning Dr. Muir's taste for and interest in music: and rightly so, because before his arrival in South Africa they were cherished in private. Music, however, was always a very real entity with him, for away back in the 'sixties' he studied harmony and composition in the Andersonian University, Glasgow, and the mathematical theory of sound under Professor Kalley Miller, the brilliant senior wrangler of 1867. In Germany he acquired his taste for chamber and orchestral music. But it was not until the High School period that he, as a mathematical and science master, had his attention seriously directed to the importance of the teaching of vocal music in schools, and to the place which music deserved in the school curriculum.

It was largely owing to the influence of Mr. Cecil Rhodes that Dr. Muir left the old country and found a splendid sphere of work in South Africa. Upon taking up his duties as Superintendent-General of Education in Cape Colony he not only found full scope for his administrative abilities, but for the exercise of tact and patience. His office is one of great responsibility, being that which the Act of 1865 specifies as the fountain head of education. This gave him a fairly assured position, free of many of the trammels of older countries. He is equally free, we believe, from those bonds of red tape associated with the deep-dyed traditions of Government officials in the old country. With optimistic zeal he threw his whole soul into the work—if the metaphor may be allowed, he took off his coat and put on the cape of good hope, a hope in the heart of the genial but strenuous mathematician from across the Border that is being steadily fulfilled. Educational methods—such as they were—proved to be a little out-of-date, and he had an unusually difficult task in front of him. To show the state of music in the schools, when he began his regime the following extract from his first report to the Colonial Secretary (of Cape Colony), dated March 31, 1893, may be quoted :

Singing.—Shortly after my arrival in the Colony the higher than average ability of the people for music arrested my attention. On inquiry I was surprised to find that little was being done in the schools to develop the talent, and that consequently school life was made much less enjoyable than it might have been. As the matter seemed of some considerable importance, one of the Inspectors, who has special qualifications for the duty, was asked to examine and report upon the teaching of singing in the Government-aided schools of Cape Town and its vicinity.

Accompanying the report was a letter from the School Inspector in question, Mr. Henry Nixon, which contains the following paragraphs :

The state of vocal music is best described by the word 'deplorable.' In many cases nothing is sung but hymns, and these are often of a kind unsuitable for young children. For example, one hears 'Weeping cannot save me' bawled out by teacher and pupil together at the top of their voices, not a few of the pupils laughing and evidently enjoying the fun. . . .

The number of schools in which vocal music is efficiently taught is very small indeed ; parrot-like imitation of the teacher's voice, or of some instrument, being the rule. Yet South Africa is a country that loves and practises music, and musical talent is far from being rare among us . . . .

I close this report with the observation that my experience as an examiner in vocal music and as an Inspector of Schools has taught me that a few students who have passed the examination for the Teacher's Certificate are competent to teach vocal music in schools, and that it would therefore seem necessary to devise means—say of indirect compulsion, or encouragement, or both—by which, after a sufficient interval of time, teachers might be brought to qualify themselves for this most important branch of school training.

One of the first things that Dr. Muir did was to obtain from England two experts in school music. With their help a syllabus was drawn up, vacation courses arranged for acting teachers, and classes organized for the young teachers as yet unfledged. The experts travel from school to school in the Colony, instructing the teachers how to use the syllabus to the best advantage. Their duties are somewhat different from those of an English Inspector—they are 'organizing propagators,' friends of the teachers, in fact, and always ready and available to render help in any way that may be required. They are meant to work hand in hand with the Inspectors of Schools ; thus clashing is avoided, efficiency is nurtured and good results are obtained. Nor must it for a moment be thought that music alone has had care lavished on it. What was begun to be done for music in 1893 has been done for needlework, boys' handiwork, kindergarten and drawing, there being in all ten experts, two for each subject. Kindergarten and drawing being most recently cared for have not yet made great progress ; but there is the best evidence to show that in needlework and woodwork the Cape schools will hold their own with those of England. All this, as we have said, has been steadily going on for several years, and in the towns singing is now taken up by ninety-five per cent. of the schools, a most satisfactory result seeing that the subject is a voluntary one without any prospect of an extra grant.

The last published report (1904) furnishes striking evidence of the growth of and fondness for music in the schools. We read that 'the number of pupils instructed in vocal music represents two-thirds of the total enrolment for the Colony—99,402 pupils,' and that 'Singing is thus the most popular of the so-called extra subjects.' The same Blue-book contains the report of Mr. Frederick Farrington—the music-expert of the Eastern province—in which he thus refers to the native fondness for singing :

The native is so fond of singing that he only requires a little direction in order to produce most astonishing results. Every man can take his part, and the natives enjoy to the full that faculty for part-singing which was so common among Englishmen in the 17th century. One teacher at a small mission school had so trained his young pupils that they could not only sing their songs and anthems in four parts, but any pupil could stand in front of the class and give his part to the others from hand-signs. The effect, when four pupils stood together, one giving the treble, another the alto, a third the tenor, and the fourth the bass, was unique and interesting. And this was done quickly and easily in the case of half-a-dozen songs, the pupils varying in age from ten to fourteen years.

As regards the system of instruction it must be noted that the foundation of notation is laid in tonic sol-fa, but the syllabus wisely recommends that the staff notation be added to the tonic sol-fa knowledge in the higher standards. Mr. Arthur Lee, the music expert in the Western Province, in his report refers to the 'Nature of instruction' in these words :

The teaching of vocal music is treated in the same way as the teaching of literature. Primary importance is attached to systematic ear-training and sight-reading of time and tune. Songs take the place of interesting stories in reading books, and selected part-songs by good composers the place of choice extracts from standard authors and poets. The attainment reached is on the whole a very faithful index of the teachers' efficiency.

An interesting side-light on school-singing in South Africa is also to be found in the Special Report compiled by Mr. Michael Sadler, prepared for the Education Department in England, on the methods employed in Colonial Schools. Under the heading 'singing' an extract is given from Mr. Farrington's report for 1899. Here is the quotation, with a specimen of a native composition :

The natives are so fond of their simple harmonies that they find as much pleasure in sol-faing their songs as in singing the words. It is common to find only one verse of a hymn known, and this is repeated over and over again without intermission. A single chant being written on the blackboard in four parts as a sight-test, the teacher let her class sing through it so many times that I asked: 'When are you going to stop?' She replied: 'When they know it,' and repeated it twenty-three times, after which I told her that would do. This wonderful love of repetition must account in part for the success of natives in harmonizing simple melodies: they learn to feel the simple chords required.

Native children are expert in making an effective accompaniment by clapping their hands. The most interesting performance of a native composition came before my notice at an informal visit to a Mission School in Port Elizabeth. The following original song was on the blackboard, the words being a composition of English, Dutch and Kaffir. They deal with a certain member of the family and the household pet:

MELODY ONLY.

O dear mo-ther, and our pup-pie,

O we want our lit-tle pup, Ma-ma ze hont-je, ma-ma ze pup-pie, ma-ma ze puppie's the pup we prize.

Very slowly.

A-ya-pi n'u ma ma ne nja ya-ke.

What may be called the English section was sung most heartily to a clapping accompaniment. The Dutch part came next, and at its close there were furtive looks towards the door. During the Kaffir portion one big boy, with a voice of no particular class, commenced to howl piteously, and to that accompaniment the sham mother, carrying a black and tan terrier, entered the room to the evident delight of the songsters.

An interesting and gratifying development of Dr. Muir's administration is shown in the Musical Competition movement in the schools. There are now twenty-one Challenge Shields that are annually competed for; but Dr. Muir's ambition is to have one shield in each of the twenty-eight Inspector's circuits in the Colony. These competitions have proved most successful in every way. As instances of the interest and enthusiasm they have created it may be mentioned that one school and a number of friends travelled 116 miles—about the distance from London to Bristol—in order to take part and to be present at one of these music-testings, and that on another occasion a number of farmers travelled by cart a distance of twenty-four miles, thus encouraging by their presence the vociferations of the bairns. At a place bearing the euphonious name of Nqamakwe, several choirs of Kaffir children walked over ten miles in order to take part. We learn that 'the Ndakane choir appeared in complete uniform, the girls wearing blue ties, white blouses and blue skirts, while the boys wore white jackets': also that 'most of the male members had bass voices, and it is worthy of note that each choir elected to sing its selected piece in four parts.' Here it should be stated that in the Kaffir schools the boys' voices break at about the age of eleven or twelve, consequently these juvenile-adults by their supply of tenor and bass enable school music to be sung in ordinary four-part harmony. The value of these native school competitions is well estimated by Mr. Arthur Lee in his Report for 1904:

The impetus which the institution of these competitions has given to the teaching of vocal music is manifest throughout the entire Colony. Not only have they been the means of establishing the paramount importance of sound, systematic training in sight-singing, but through them a taste for and appreciation of the best kinds of music are being engendered. A sign of considerable significance is to be seen in the critical consideration given to submitted part-songs. A composition must possess merit to be adopted.

No less satisfactory is the high standard of music selected to be sung at these competitions. Here is a recent list, the majority of the items being compositions arranged for first and second soprano and alto:

Part-songs prescribed by the Department:

The Rhine raft song	- - - - -	Pinsuti.
Come, fairies, trip it on the grass	- - - - -	J. Parry.
Blow, gentle gales	- - - - -	Bishop.
England	- - - - -	Hatton.
Light and laughing summer sky	- - - - -	G. A Macfarren.
Come, ever-smiling liberty	- - - - -	Handel.

Part-songs selected by the competing choirs:

Clouds o'er the summer sky	- - - - -	Gustav von Holst.
Hark, hark, away	- - - - -	W. H. Birch.
O hush thee, my babie	- - - - -	Sullivan.
The hunter's farewell	- - - - -	Mendelssohn.
The elf's trip	- - - - -	Gounod.
I would that my love	- - - - -	Mendelssohn.
The wood thrush	- - - - -	Hatton.
Shepherd of souls	- - - - -	E. Jones.
O hills, O vales of pleasure	- - - - -	Mendelssohn.
The fisherman's good-night	- - - - -	Bishop.
Winds, gently whisper	- - - - -	J. Whittaker.
The lark's song (double canon)	- - - - -	Mendelssohn.
When the swallows homeward fly	- - - - -	F. Abt.
The morning breaks	- - - - -	Mendelssohn.

In the matter of instruction books the Colony is being well served. A comprehensive series of teachers' and pupils' books is now being issued by Messrs. Novello, entitled 'The South African Songster,' under the editorship of Mr. James Rodger, M.A., of the Cape Town Education Department. This series comprises seven graded books for the school standards and seven teachers' manuals to correspond. Another set of books provides for the smaller schools, and still another set for the native schools. In all twenty-one books have been, or are being prepared.

In looking over the names of the teachers and places of schools in South Africa, one trembles to think of the terrible distress their pronunciation would have caused Charles Lamb! Here are a few specimens, which may serve as studies in the much-neglected art of vocal enunciation: Nqamakwe, Xalanga, Hlobo, Ncisininade, Ndondo, Mpukane, and Xilinx (places); and Ncanyiwe Mdleleni, and Alfred Mvinjelwa (conductors). Doubtless some of our English words create pronouncing difficulties no less appalling to juvenile Kaffirs. An instance occurred at a competition where 'Hail, smiling morn' was sung, the Ndondo children singing the word 'flies' as 'flice'; but this was no worse than the quartet of Scots singers who echoed 'flies away' with 'flees awa'!

Dr. Muir speaks with warm appreciation of the progress of music in general in Cape Colony. The great centre of it is Cape Town, but music is also well cared for in such towns as Port Elizabeth, Kimberley, Grahamstown, East London, King William's Town, and Queenstown. In Cape Town the musicians who have contributed most to the progress of the art are Dr. Barrow Dowling (organist of the cathedral) and Mr. Percy Ould, a member of a well-known orchestral family in England. Mainly through the instrumentality of these artists the Chamber Music Union of Cape Town (of which Dr. Muir is chairman) has been maintained and developed. The Cape Town Choral Society is also flourishing, and the Cape Town Musical Society (of which the Governor is President and Dr. Muir, vice-president) is in a similar happy condition, both these organizations being under the able direction of Dr. Barrow Dowling. The programmes of the Chamber Music Union alone afford incontestable evidence, not only of what has been done during the last decade for the musical education of the Cape Town people, but also of the high standard of taste which has been already attained. The recently erected organ in the new Town Hall, where recitals are to be given by Dr. Dowling and Mr. Denholm Walker, is sure to give an impulse to music in the southern capital.

To return to the life-work of Dr. Muir. In June last he had the satisfaction of seeing an Act of Parliament passed which made education compulsory, so far as the white children are concerned. The Act also provided for the division of the Colony into School Board areas, the election of School Boards, and the creation of rating powers over the whole area. By this means not only will greater efficiency result, but a greater local interest will be aroused in the great subject of education. It is for the purpose of guiding and smoothing the administration of this Act that Dr. Muir has gone back to South Africa, and it is pleasing to know that in this work he will have the wise and moderate men of both political parties on his side. The present Government has of course loyally stood by him, but that the Bond and South African party have not been wholly unfriendly may be gathered from the fact that a gratifying and generous tribute was paid to him and his wise administration during the past fourteen years by the Leader of the Opposition when the recent Education Bill was introduced in the Cape Parliament. As the Cape Times said: 'It may be doubted whether so noble a panegyric has ever been passed in the House of Assembly upon the services of a Government officer, and the cordial cheers which rose from all sides of the House showed that the eulogy was felt by all parties to be just and well merited.'

THE FATHERS OF GREAT MUSICIANS.*

BERLIOZ.

Louis Berlioz, the father of the great French composer, was a doctor. In this respect the paternal relatives of Handel and Berlioz were alike in that they both followed the medical profession. But how different the art-creations of their respective offsprings! In the earliest years of the last century Dr. Berlioz was in practice at La Côte St. André, a little town near Grenoble, where, on December 11, 1803, his distinguished son Hector was born. In his 'Memoirs'—which he began to write during his sojourn in London in 1848—Berlioz records that his father inspired great confidence in the town and district wherein he practised the healing art. 'He was a credit to his profession, which he regarded more as an opportunity for doing good to the poor than as a means of personal emolument.' With filial devotion the musician bore eloquent testimony to the character of the old doctor. In 1810 Dr. Berlioz gained the prize offered by the medical society of Montpellier for an essay on 'Chronic diseases.' It was published in Paris, and not a few eminent physicians 'sucked the brains' of their provincial brother without any acknowledgment. 'What matter, so long as truth triumphs?' remarked the prize-winner on hearing that the great men of the faculty had appropriated his ideas. Dr. Berlioz suffered from an incurable internal disease, which often brought him to death's door. He constantly relieved his maddening pain by taking opium; and on one occasion, after taking an unusually strong dose, he said to his son: 'I don't mind telling you, it was not to cure myself that I took it.' Instead of killing him, as he expected, the dose afforded him immediate relief from his agony.

An exceedingly well-read man, Dr. Berlioz himself instructed his son. 'What a patient, unwearied, careful, clever teacher of languages, literature, and geography he was!' records Hector, 'He even taught me music!' The boy having discovered a flageolet hidden away in a drawer, made the most futile efforts to pick out the melody of 'Malbrouk' upon that unpleasant instrument. Annoyed at this 'tiresome tootling,' the doctor told his son to lay aside the flageolet until he could find time to teach him to play heroic music in a less exasperating manner. This he did, and after two days' lessons Master Hector creditably flageoletted 'Malbrouk' to the delight of the assembled family. The paternal teacher followed up this achievement by giving his apt pupil regular instruction in the elements of music and taught him 'to read.' Adopting Devienne's method, he instructed Hector in playing the flute, and the boy worked so hard that in seven months he could play fairly well. In connection with the early attempts at mastering 'Malbrouk' on the flageolet, Berlioz characteristically remarks: 'Does not this clearly prove my instinctive feeling for the great capabilities of the wind instruments?' And again: 'What born biographer could fail to draw the inevitable conclusion from such an incident!'

Master Hector's first attempt at composition—a quintet for flute and strings—failed to arouse the enthusiasm of his father, as it had those friends who had heard that juvenile creation. 'My father,' says Berlioz, 'was like many people who think they can judge of a concerted piece by hearing the melody; and when, at his request, I played to him the flute part alone, he exclaimed at Berlioz père would not allow Hector to learn the pianoforte, nor did he wish him to follow the profession of music. He doubtless regarded the household instrument as somewhat of a snare that should be avoided: as a matter of fact Berlioz never played the pianoforte. In after years he expressed his gratitude to his father for having delivered him from 'the tyranny of the fingers,' and that therefore he had been compelled to 'compose in silence.'

When the time came for the young man to choose a vocation, his father wished him to follow a particular passage: "Bravo, that is music!" It is interesting to know that the phrase which called forth that 'Bravo' from the father has been preserved in the 'Frans Juges' overture: it is the melody in A flat played by the first violins in the allegro:

the profession of medicine, which he considered to be the finest in the world. Thereupon began a warfare between music and medicine as a career for the imaginative and highly strung Hector. The youth's passionate love for music was in inverse ratio to his hatred of medicine. His father determined to cure 'the musical fermentation' in his son's head and, as an antidote thereto, compelled Hector to embark at once on the study of anatomy. With professional enthusiasm Dr. Berlioz spread out in his study an enormous treatise on anatomy, and displayed life-size illustrations of the body, telling his son: 'This is the work you are to study. I do not suppose you will any longer show a prejudice against medicine; and if you promise to work diligently at anatomy, I will give you a beautiful flute, with all the new keys'! The keen desire for such an instrument, the earnestness of the proposal, and the mingled fear and respect which Hector felt for his father, caused him to stammer out a faint 'yes'; the music-loving youth then fled to his room, and throwing himself on his bed gave vent to his feelings in a flood of tears.

At the age of nineteen Hector Berlioz was sent to Paris in order to study medicine, though much against his will. In course of time, however, his father became reconciled to the art of music which, in spite of much opposition and discouragement, his son Hector followed and the exercise of which enabled him to obtain a prominent niche in the temple of fame. A complete reconciliation took place, and if truth were known, the old doctor became not a little proud of his distinguished son. On the return of Hector from Russia (in 1847) the old man said that one of his greatest desires was to hear 'that terrible Dies Irae (Requiem) of which they talk so much,' and, he added, 'having done so, I would gladly say my Nunc dimittis.' But this was not to be. Dr. Berlioz died on July 28, 1848, without having heard any of his son's great works.

Hector's sister, Nanci, furnishes a touching account of her father's death in a letter she wrote to her brother, who was then in his forty-fifth year. She says:

'We must not regret our dear father's life, for it had become a heavy burden to him. His one wish was to die as soon as possible. He had evidently no further interest in the things of this world, and was in haste to leave it. A glorious procession of the poor and the sick, whom he had helped and cured, accompanied him to his last resting-place. Two speeches were made over his grave, amid the tears of all present; one by a young doctor, who did homage to his knowledge and his virtues, and the other by one of the people, the natural interpreter of the class among whom he spent that useful and unobtrusive life of which there are now so few examples. If anything can soften the bitter regret you feel at not being able to receive his last sigh with us, let it be the thought that his extreme weakness prevented him from feeling your absence. He was frequently unconscious, and spoke with difficulty . . . But he asked me one day if I had any news of you and Louis.*'

WAGNER.

Paternal affection, influence and guidance were denied to Richard Wagner, as his father died when he, his ninth child and only son, was only six months old. It is true that Richard had a good step-father in the person of Ludwig Geyer, but as he died when the boy was eight years old, the composer of 'Die Meistersinger' had to make his way in the world without having benefited by that fatherly care and paternal advice which is the heritage of most men.

Karl Friedrich Wilhelm Wagner—now known by his second christian name—was born on June 18, 1770, in the same year as Beethoven. Very little is known of his early years, which were spent at Leipzig. It may be assumed, however, that he became impressed with the early works of Schiller as performed at the theatre; and it is not without significance that the famous Gewandhaus concerts began during his boyhood—in 1781, when he was eleven years old. But Friedrich's artistic leanings were towards the drama rather than music. He probably attended the first Leipzig representations of Schiller's 'The Robbers' and 'Kabale and Liebe,' and perchance he came into personal contact with the poet during his visit to Leipzig.

At the age of nineteen Friedrich Wagner became a law student in the University of his native town (Leipzig). Upon the death (March 21, 1795) of his father in the prime of life, the young man (then nearly twenty-five) was well 'on his own feet' and able to assist in supporting his relatives. He had entered the service of the State as deputy-registrar (Vice-Aktuaris) at the Leipzig Town-court, in which office 'his clear intelligence, unselfishness and candour soon won him the respect alike of his superiors and fellow-townsmen.' At the same time he did not allow the routine of his official duties to lessen his interest in poetry and the drama; he took part, from time to time, in private theatricals, on one occasion playing in a performance of Goethe's 'Mitschuldige.' Hence the source of his son Richard's great dramatic genius may be traced.

On June 2, 1798, three years after his father's death, Friedrich married Johanna Rosina Bertz, 'a charming girl of nineteen.' As already stated, nine children were born to them, and, it may be added, within the space of twelve years. The youngest, who became the great tone-poet, and who received the name of Wilhelm Richard, was born at Leipzig, on May 22, 1813. The quaint old house in which the composer of 'Die Meistersinger' entered the world stood on the Brühl, and was called 'Der rothe und weisse Löwe' ('The red and white lion'), not 'Der weisse und rothe Löwe' as biographers state.

Five months after the birth of Master Richard Wagner the great battle of Leipzig—called the 'Battle of Nations,' and one of the most bloody and decisive of those which effected the deliverance of Europe from French domination—raged in and around the city. 'The aspect of the town was terrible: the avenues hewn down, the promenades laid waste; at every step in the outer city one trod upon the dead bodies of men or horses.' The sickening consequences of preceding panic and the accumulation of dead and wounded round the walls and in the city's streets and squares, soon manifested themselves in a ghastly death-roll of the townspeople. An epidemic fever, attributed to the carnage, fell upon the inhabitants, among them Friedrich Wagner. Worn out by incessant exertions and the mental strain of those terrible days, he died after a short illness on November 22, 1813, at the age of forty-three. Thus the half-year old infant never knew his father. Could the father accepted the inevitable, Master Johann Jakob was apprenticed for five years to a neighbouring musician and learned to play the violin, viola, violoncello, flute and horn. He then made his way to Hamburg, where he obtained the means for a bare existence by playing in the courtyards and dancing-saloons of the sailors' quarter of the city amid demoralising scenes of low-life gaiety.

have had any presentiment of the extraordinary and world-wide fame that awaited his only and genius-endowed baby boy?

BRAHMS.

The son of an innkeeper and retail dealer, Johann Jakob Brahms—father of the composer—was born on June 1, 1806, at Heide, in Schleswig-Holstein. Passionately fond of music from his earliest childhood, he several times ran away from home in order to satisfy his insatiable craving to become a musician. As in so many similar instances, his father at first offered the strongest opposition to a musical career. When he ultimately

A change for the better in his life took place when he became one of the horn-players in the band of the Bürger-Militair of Hamburg, a body of citizen-soldiers, or town guard, in which nearly every burgher or inhabitant between the ages of twenty and forty-five was bound to serve. From Miss Florence May's 'The Life of Johannes Brahms' we learn that 'each battalion of the force had its own band, and each band its own uniform, the musicians of the Jäger corps, to which Johann Jakob was attached, wearing a green coat with white embroidered collar, headgear decorated with a white pompon, and a short weapon called a Hirschfänger.' In due time he was enrolled among the burghers of Hamburg. A young man, not greatly gifted in music and ill-equipped educationally to fight life's battle, he was not without shrewdness, and, being upright and diligent, he made steady progress. To quote further from Miss May's interesting book: 'He and his colleagues used to form themselves into small brass bands, and to play wherever they saw opportunity, sometimes getting trifling engagements in dancing-rooms, sometimes dependent on the goodwill of a chance audience in a beer-garden or small house of entertainment.'

In spite of so precarious an existence Johann Jakob, at the age of twenty-four, took unto himself a wife aged forty-one! 'Small and plain, with a bad limp, sickly in health and somewhat complaining,' is the description given of the mother of Johannes Brahms; but as a set-off against these physical drawbacks, she 'had a sweet expression in her light-blue eyes that testified to the goodness of her heart.' After a girl had been born to the poor couple their famous son Johannes came into the world on May 7, 1833. The house, 60, Speckstrasse (see the photograph on page 94), still stands in a small dismal court amid most unromantic and unpicturesque surroundings. Later on the family removed to less confined quarters, where the anxious wife and mother was able to add a trifle to her husband's scanty earnings by selling needles, cottons, tapes, &c., and by taking in a boarder. Johann Jakob, who was the first teacher of his distinguished son, became an excellent double-bass player and one of the original members of the Hamburger Musikverein, a kind of musical trades union founded in 1831, the father of Carl Rosa being for some time the president. He subsequently became a member of the small band which played from six to eleven every evening throughout the year at the Alster Pavilion. This curiously constituted orchestra—two violins, one viola, two flutes, and one double-bass!—performed 'evening entertainment-music' which consisted of overtures, airs, operatic selections, and pot-pourris. Light refreshments were served to the crowds of fashionable people who listened, and during intervals between the pieces a collection was made for the benefit of the performers. 'Count Woronzow from St. Petersburg,' records Miss May, 'who was present with his son in the audience one fine summer evening, was so delighted with the music and so gratified at hearing the Russian national air played con amore in his honour, that he not only put a gold piece in the plate, but wanted to carry off the six performers to Russia, guaranteeing that they would make their fortunes there, and would not take a refusal till they had had a week or two to consider the matter.'

The remaining incidents in the life of Johann Jakob Brahms may be briefly told. He obtained repute as a contrabassist in the orchestras of the Stadt Theater and the Philharmonic Society, Hamburg. He joined the latter upon the appointment of Julius Stockhausen as conductor, in 1862, and held the post till 1871, within a year of his death. At the age of sixty he entered into the bonds of matrimony a second time, his bride being a doubly-widowed lady of forty-three; thus she was seventeen years younger than her third husband, whose first wife was seventeen years his senior! One of his hobbies seems to have been 'bargains.' In this connection Miss May must again be quoted (vol. ii., 49):

Once a week he amused himself by walking in the Jews' quarter of the city and inspecting the cheap second-hand wares with which the vendors sought to tempt his custom. His weakness for bargains was sometimes a source of embarrassment to his wife, in spite of her firmness in limiting his loose pocket-money to the sum of a few pence. Now he would send home to her a quantity of wardrobe hooks; another time many pounds' weight of honey. 'Goodness, Brahms! what are we to do with it?' she would despairingly inquire. 'Yes, Lina, but I couldn't let it stand at the price,' he would answer.

Johannes used to lecture his father for spending money, telling him how careful he himself was obliged to be; but the greatest affection existed between them. Brahms took his father with him on two tours in successive years—the Austrian Alps (1867) and Switzerland (1868); and when, six years after his father's death, flowers were showered on Johannes at a concert he conducted at Hamburg, and Elsie (his sister) begged her brother to give her the wreaths that had been presented to him, Johannes said:

So you want to brag with them? Come to me early to-morrow morning: we will go together and lay them on father's grave.

MENDELSSOHN'S ORGAN SONATAS.

A COMPARISON OF THE ORIGINAL AUTOGRAPH WITH THE PUBLISHED VERSION.*

By F. G. EDWARDS.

For the purpose of making the subjoined comparison, Mr. Arthur O'Leary kindly placed at my disposal his copy of five of the Sonatas, written entirely in Mendelssohn's own hand. Nearly all the movements in these autographs are written on two staves, the pedal part being indicated by the word 'Ped.' The manuscript, like all Mendelssohn's calligraphy, is the perfection of neatness: he was artistic even in his erasures.

Through the kindness of a member of the Mendelssohn family, I have been no less favoured by the loan of a manuscript in a copyist's hand, which contains some alterations made by Mendelssohn himself. In the opinion of Dr. Joachim, this particular copy is that from which the printed copy was engraved.

With the aid of these two manuscripts it is possible to trace some of the alterations made by Mendelssohn. I use the word 'some,' because his own draft copies, preserved in the Royal Library, Berlin, would probably show still further changes. No attempt will be made to notify all the differences between the composer's initial intentions and those made permanent in the printed version. Only the more important afterthoughts will be set forth.

SONATA I.

Originally No. 3 of the set, No. 3 (in A) being No. 1: Mendelssohn inverted the order in the proof copy.

First Movement.—The title of the chorale (bar 40) is given in the autograph, 'Was mein Gott will, das gescheh allezeit.*' Bar 31 in the pedal, instead of crotchet B natural, the first beat consisted of two quavers, B natural and E natural above. The latter note was probably deleted as not being within the compass of the pedal organ of that time. Anyone who has a feeling that the chorale sounds thin when played on the great organ against the moving pedal quavers (bars 93, et seq.) will be interested to know that Mendelssohn at first doubled the melody in the octave below. Bars 98 and 99 will furnish an example:

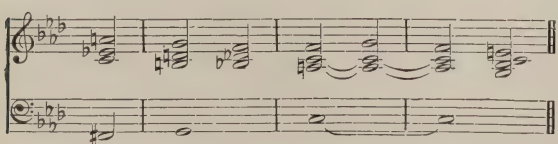

The pedal quavers, beginning at the half-bar of 96, were originally thus:

and the movement concluded:

Recitative.—The close, originally an eight-bar instead of a seven-bar phrase, ended thus:

Last Movement.—At bar 26 the fine effect of the low pedal D against E in the left hand was not in the original. At that particular bar (26) the pedal D (held from bar 23) moved up to E (semibreve) in octaves with the left hand, and in the next bar (27) proceeded to the next note, F sharp (minim). The low pedal C, at bar 100, began four bars earlier. Mendelssohn, with rare judgment, afterwards changed it for the octave above (bars 96-99), as printed. The crotchet rest in the penultimate bar was an afterthought, the chord originally occupied the whole bar; and the final chord contained that extra F (first space, treble stave) which not a few organists are prone to put in.

SONATA II.

Adagio.—Originally in 4-4 time, notes of double length, crotchets for quavers, &c. So far as I can decipher it through the erasures—the penultimate bar being a little doubtful—the movement ended thus:

Allegro maestoso.—The dots to the quavers, which form such a strongly marked feature of this movement, were afterthoughts; as shown in bar 44 in the subjoined examples.

Bars 24-26, 41-44 stand thus in the autograph:

The fine effect of the descent of the pedal to the lowest note (C) of the pedal board in bar 44 will not escape notice. Some reader may feel disposed to ask: 'Is the printed version a change for the better?' The diminished seventh chord, in bars 24 and 41 of the printed version, is absent from the autograph, as shown above.

Fugue.—The subject of this fugue is the same as that of one of three organ fugues composed by Mendelssohn in 1839 (the MS. being dated * See Nos. 41, 115, 120 and 265 of Bach's '371 vierstimmige Choralgesänge.

'Frankfurt, d. 14 Juli, 1839'), five years before the Sonatas were written; but the exposition and subsequent treatment are quite different in this Sonata as compared with the earlier fugue.

SONATA III.

This Sonata, originally No. 1, is only in a copyist's hand in Mr. O'Leary's set. There are, however, two interesting references to it in Mendelssohn's published letters. He evidently wished to include a movement he had written during his visit to Wales in 1829, for his sister Fanny's wedding. One of the extracts may be quoted; the letter, to Fanny Hensel (née Mendelssohn-Bartholdy), is dated 'Soden, July 25, 1844':

Look for the organ piece in A major that I composed for your wedding, and wrote out in Wales, and send it to me immediately; you shall positively have it back, but I require it. I have promised an English publisher to furnish him with a whole book of organ pieces; and as I was writing out one after another, that former one recurred to me. I like the beginning but detest the middle, and am re-writing it with another choral fugue; but should like to compare it with the original, so pray send it here. . . . Do not forget the organ piece, and still less its author.

In a second letter, dated 'August 15, 1844,' he asked his sister to make further search for the piece, but apparently without result, as the two movements of this sonata are dated 'Aug. 9' and 'Aug. 17, 1844,' respectively. It seemed possible that the Welsh piece might be found among Frau Hensel's papers and MSS., but her son, Mr. Sebastian Hensel, was unable to trace the Welsh organ piece composed and sent by Mendelssohn to his sister to be played at her marriage ceremony.

SONATA IV.

First Movement.—The twelfth semiquaver in bar 45 is C sharp in the autograph, a note that has always been printed C natural!:

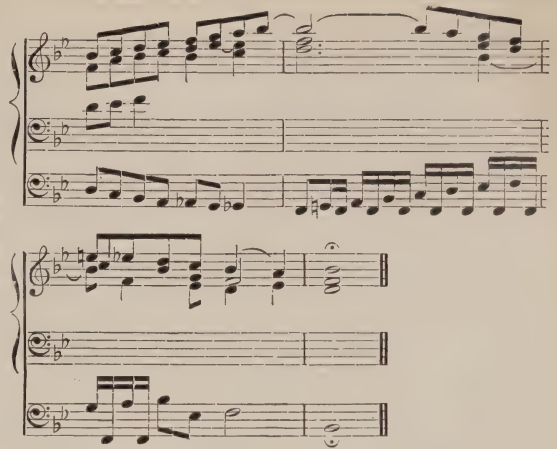

Mr. W. T. Best, in his edition (Novello), makes the above bar (45) to agree with bar 80.

Andante.—Originally written in minims and headed 'Andante alla marcia':

Allegretto.—Mendelssohn at first inserted a second crotchet in the pedal part in the following nine bars, where there are now corresponding rests: Bars 3, 5, 11, 13, 26, 36, 38, 44 (this bar began with a low pedal F) and 50. The deletion of these pedal notes considerably lightens the progress of this characteristic Mendelssohnian movement.

Last Movement.—The bars introductory to the fugue do not appear in the autograph. The movement began with the fugue subject in the pedal, and concluded thus:

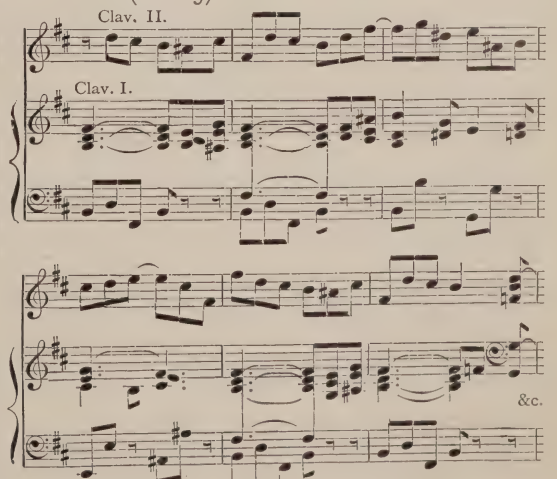

The Royal Library at Berlin contains another and MS. version of this fugue, dated 'Frankfurt, 2 April, 1845,' in which the subject is slightly different:

It will be noticed that the semiquavers in the first bar of the above extract are much more difficult to pedal than those in the printed version. May not this have caused the alteration? This MS. fugue, which is quite complete, while similar to the printed version (but without the introductory bars), contains many points of interest.

SONATA V.

Andante con moto.—Mendelssohn first wrote this movement in the tonic minor, but subsequently changed it to the relative minor, the key in which we now know it. This (B minor) form originally contained a counter-subject at the return of the first theme (bar 25):

This Sonata had an extra movement, placed between the Andante con moto and the Finale. It consisted of a repetition of the chorale, but with different harmonies and the addition of passing notes in the inner and pedal parts.

Here it is :

No. 3.

Andante.

Last Movement.—This has often puzzled organists by reason of the disappointing result of the octave skip in those places (bars 4, 7, 17, &c.) where it is smothered by heavy chords. It is therefore exceedingly interesting to find from the autograph, that Mendelssohn's original intention was to make frequent changes of manuals in this Allegro. He uses the direction 'Clav. I.,' or 'Clav. II.,' no fewer than thirty-eight times in the movement. These directions were subsequently crossed through in pencil. It is probable that he may have thought the frequent changes gave a restlessness to the movement; or, still more probable, that the want of balance of tone between the great and swell manuals—especially the limited bass compass of the latter—in the organs of that time would have more or less nullified the effect of his registering. Without printing the music in full it would be impossible to give a complete idea of Mendelssohn's intention, but the opening bars are quoted as a specimen of the composer's antiphonal design :

In bars 7, 8, 13, the octave skip is marked 'Clav. II.,' while in bar 17 it is indicated 'Clav. I.'; this will give some further idea of the original plan in regard to the change of manuals. It would be interesting to hear this movement played, as Mendelssohn first registered it, on a modern organ of adequate resource.*

SONATA VI.

The two manuscripts of this Sonata that I consulted seem to be in the nature of 'clean' copies. I have therefore not been able to trace Mendelssohn's possible alterations. Most probably his own copies, preserved at Berlin, would show many changes. From the MS. Thematic Catalogue (formerly in the possession of Sir George Grove) of the Mendelssohn collection of autographs in the Royal Library, Berlin, I find that the last movement was originally written in crotchets with a 3-4 time-signature.

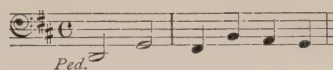

As foreshadowing the composition of the Organ Sonatas, attention may be drawn to a 'Nachspiel' in D, for 'Organo Pieno,' which Mendelssohn composed in Rome during his fruitful Switzerland and Italian journey. The first four bars—which appear three times in forty-five bars—of the Introduction are identical (except the dotted notes) with the opening of the 3-4 movement in Sonata II., but the remainder is different :

NACHSPIEL.

* In the Litloff Edition of the Sonatas, the editor, Dr. W. Volckmar, indicates in this movement an interchange of manuals similar in design to Mendelssohn's original idea.

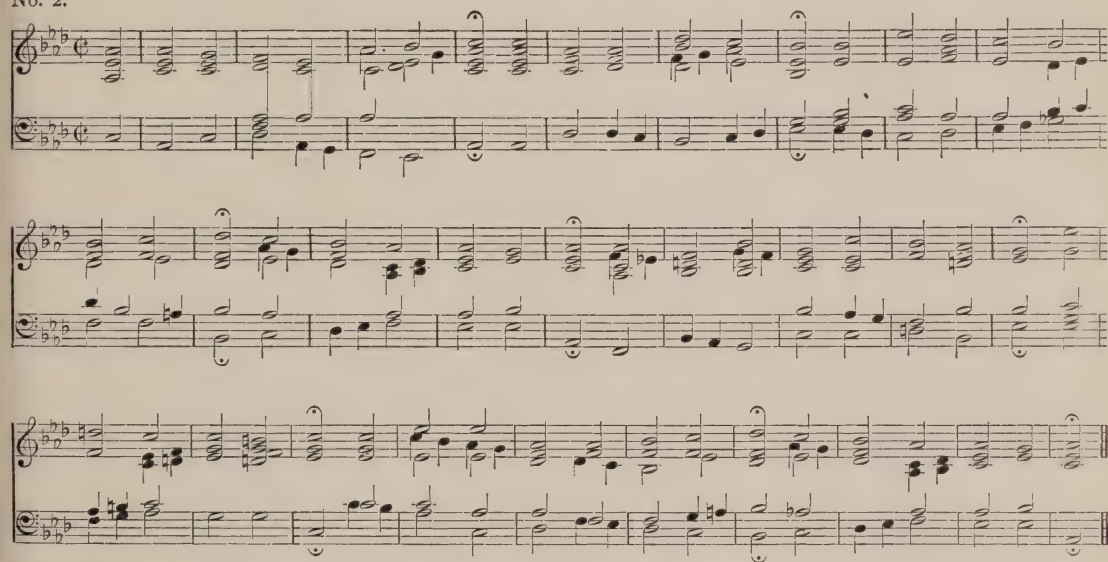

A five-part fugue follows, on the subjoined short subject:

which brings this effective composition to a brilliant conclusion on a tonic pedal thirteen bars long.

Several pieces—part of 'a parcel,' to use Mendelssohn's term—that were composed for the Sonatas are still in manuscript, but two—an Andante with variations in D and an Allegro in B flat respectively—were published by Messrs. Novello in 1898. A chorale movement, which has never before been printed, I am enabled to give. It is dated '10 Sept. 1844,' and headed 'No. 2.' Was this chorale intended for the second movement of the First Sonata?

No. 2.

The first and last sections of the above, it will be observed, are identical with the beginning and ending of the Old 100th tune and 'Nun danket alle Gott' respectively: but the remainder appears to be an original chorale composition by Mendelssohn.

It will be remembered that Mendelssohn dedicated his Organ Sonatas to his friend Dr. F. Schlemmer, a lawyer of Frankfort. In this connection I am indebted to the kindness and thoughtfulness of Dr. Frank J. Sawyer for obtaining an interesting side-light on these masterpieces of organ music. In 1884 there lived at Frankfort House, Clifton Road, Brighton—a house then opposite to Dr. Sawyer's own habitation—a Mr. Schlemmer. With natural and excusable curiosity Dr. Sawyer one day boldly marched across the road, rang the bell of his neighbour, and asked to see the inhabitant of Frankfort House, who proved to be a brother of the identical Dr. Schlemmer, Mendelssohn's friend! By this means Dr. Sawyer was enabled to get into correspondence with Dr. Schlemmer himself, who, in a letter dated 'Roederberg, Frankfort-on-Main, March 28, 1884,' gave some interesting and hitherto unknown information concerning the Organ Sonatas which Mendelssohn dedicated to him. In his letter to Dr. Sawyer, Dr. Schlemmer says:

'Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy sent me the six Organ Sonatas from Leipzig on October 28, 1845, together with a few friendly lines. I must mention that we had often in the preceding years—as often as he came here—spoken of J. S. Bach and his immortal works. In my room stood a small English pedal-piano, on which Mendelssohn was fond of practising his pedal passages. At the great organ in St. Catherine's Church here we often spent many hours together, when many experiments were made in stop registration.

The Sonatas originated little by little, and I had no idea that such a long work would appear when he surprised me with a copy of it. He carried them "in his head" for many years, especially towards the end of the thirties and the beginning of the forties, and then wrote them down amidst idyllic surroundings [at Soden, near Frankfort], in the full strength of his powers and in the happiest frame of mind.'

In answer to the first of four questions put to him by Dr. Sawyer—'Where were the Sonatas written?'—Dr. Schlemmer replied:

'In previous years in a similar manner Mendelssohn had often written out in his rapid and elegant handwriting, many of the "Songs without words" as we sat in the arbour in my vineyard enjoying grapes and wine and chatting about everything.'

'Could you give any reason for the introduction of the chorales: had they any connexion with a church service?' (Question 2.) To which the dedicatee answered:

'This is to be ascribed to his great love for J. S. Bach's works, especially the chorale preludes and the treatment of the chorales in the church cantatas.'

Question 3. 'Were the Sonatas the result of extemporizations subsequently written down?'

'No; they are well thought-out works. As in the oratorios, so in the organ sonatas, he raised them to a higher rank by his individuality of style.'

The fourth and last question had reference to the 'form' of the Sonatas: 'Had Mendelssohn any special reason for departing from ordinary "sonata form" in some instances, e.g., the 3rd and 6th Sonatas, which finish with a soft movement?' (Dr. Sawyer thought that possibly these were intended for some special occasion as preludes to some work, since in the Hymn of Praise the slow movement of the symphony precedes the choral section.) To this Dr. Schlemmer replied:

'The history of music shows us that the form of sonata or symphony was never a definitely fixed one, but possessed a certain elasticity, within which genius was free to make its flights.'

In conclusion, it should again be stated that these Organ Sonatas owe their origin to an English music-publisher. Some of the leading English organists of sixty years ago had so enjoyed the privilege of listening to Mendelssohn's wonderful improvisations on the organ during his several visits to this country, that they wished he would write down some such pieces in various styles for their instrument. Acting upon their initiative, Mr. Charles Coventry, of the firm of Coventry & Hollier, music publishers, then of 71, Dean Street, Soho, communicated this desire to Mendelssohn during his visit to England in 1844—in fact, Mr. Coventry really 'commissioned' Mendelssohn to write the Organ Sonatas. From the Mendelssohn Coventry correspondence relative to their publication, some extracts may be quoted. The letters are entirely in English:

(Mendelssohn to Coventry.)

Frankfort, August 29, 1844.

I have also been very busy about the organ-pieces which you wanted me to write for you, and they are nearly finished. I should like to call them '3 Sonatas for the Organ,' instead of Voluntaries. Tell me if you like this title as well; if not, I think the name of Voluntaries will suit the pieces also, the more so as I do not know what it means precisely.

The original idea, either Coventry's or Mendelssohn's, seems to have been only three Sonatas. The term 'Voluntary' was doubtless suggested by Mr. Coventry, who, only too anxious to get the 'copy' without arguing about a title, wrote to Mendelssohn: 'I like the term Sonata just as well as Voluntary.' The composer, who had promised to send the Sonatas if possible before the year was out, subsequently wrote to the English publisher letters of which the following are extracts:

Frankfort, Dec. 1844.

I hope to send you soon the promised organ-pieces. 9 are ready, but I want to have 12 before I make a parcel of them.

May 1, 1845.

I beg you will let me know whether a letter, which I wrote to you some weeks since, has reached you or not. It contained the communication that I had written a kind of Organ-school in Six Sonatas for that instrument, and the question whether you would like to have the whole work or only one half of it.

May 26, 1845.

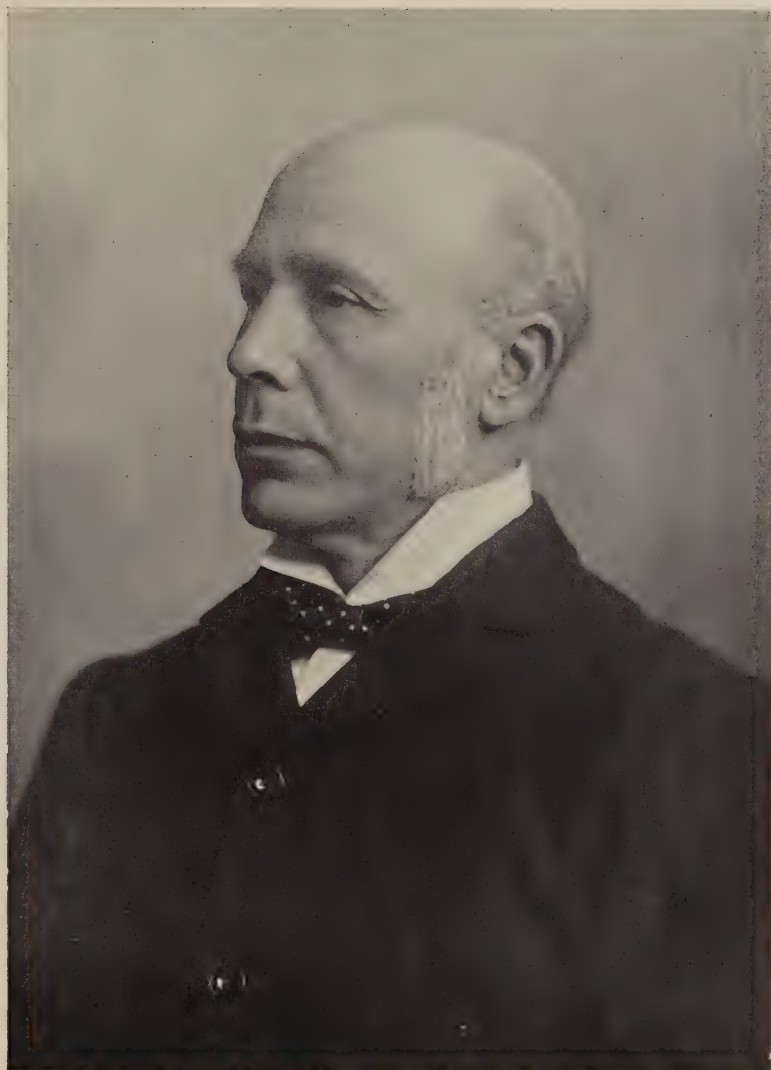

I duly received your favour of the 29th April, and, as I have no objection to your dividing my Sonatas into two books, I was very glad to see that they are to appear altogether at your house. I even think it would be well to sell each Sonata separately, if somebody wants to have them so; but it must always be with the title of 'Six Sonatas, &c.; Nos. 1, 2, &c.' Pray, if you place it into the engraver's hands, let him be most careful, in order to get a correct edition. I attach much importance to these Sonatas (if I may say so of any work of mine), and accordingly wish them to be brought out as correctly as possible. Perhaps some one of my English friends and brother organ-players would look them over for me, besides the usual corrections of the proofs. Perhaps Mr. Gauntlett would do it?

It appears that Vincent Novello, and not Gauntlett, looked over the proofs, as is shown by the original proof copy of the work, formerly in the possession of the late Mr. Julian Marshall, which he kindly allowed me to examine.

Mr. W. Barclay Squire, of the British Museum, writes:

Mr. Algernon Ashton and others who agree with him in deploring the desecration which Handel's Brook Street house is now undergoing, may be interested in the following from the Introduction to Dr. Edward Miller's, 'New Flute Instructor' (published about 1800). The author states that the flute 'was my first instrument, being one of the few performers now living, who assisted at Handel's Oratorios, during his life-time, and constantly attended the rehearsals at his house, in Brook Street, in the Lent season.'

Now I am writing, may I also mention that I think the statement on p. 33 of your January issue to the effect that Jeremiah Clarke's 'Barbadoes Ode' 'took the form of a cantata, "The Assumption,"' is a mistake. The former, if I remember right, is an ode in praise of the Barbadoes; the latter is an 'Ode on the Glorious Assumption of the Blessed Virgin,' beginning 'Hark, she's called,' and the two works are quite distinct.

Occasional Notes.

By the way,
Have you observed that there's a sort of talk
In music; something that appears to mean
More than we can give its lovely tongue the credit of,— Positive argument, and chains of reasoning?

Often De Torcy used to love an air
I played on the spinnet, that seemed to question,
Answer, and question, and so run the round
Of some sweet logic; every link of it Being so drawn from, so deduc'd from t'other,
That at the close you felt as much convinc'd
Of some fine truth, although you knew not what,
As though an angel had been talking it.

From 'Lovers' Amazements': a drama by Leigh Hunt.

The Handel Festival is to be held at the Crystal Palace on June 26, 28 and 30, under the conductorship, as in 1903, of Dr. F. H. Cowen. While the 'Messiah' and Selection will retain their accustomed place, the third and last day of this gigantic music-making will be devoted to a performance of 'Judas Maccabæus,' instead of to 'Israel in Egypt.' At the first (preliminary) Festival in 1857, 'Judas' was performed in its entirety. On that occasion Queen Victoria, the Prince Consort, our present King, the future Emperor and Empress Frederick of Germany, and other members of the Royal Family honoured the performance of 'Judas' by their presence. THE MUSICAL TIMES of July, 1857, in recording the event, said:

At the conclusion of the oratorio, the Old Hundredth Psalm was sung, Her Majesty and the whole assembly standing. The third verse, 'O enter then His gates with praise,' was given in unison by the united voices of the 2,000 singers; a more grand and impressive effect cannot be imagined.

It was understood that the Old Hundredth was sung at the request of the Queen. The Times account of this Royalty-attended performance consisted of two-and-a-half columns of large type. After describing in detail the music and rendering thereof, the writer—could it have been Mr. J. W. Davison?—referred to the subject of 'the inner man' in these words:

The refreshment department is now most thoroughly organized; in fact, nothing but a great institution of comestibles could have met yesterday's drain at the Palace, when 6,000 dinners and luncheons were served, very many thousand pints of sherry drunk, and 800 quarts of ices distributed before six in the evening.

Although 'Judas Maccabæus' will displace 'Israel in Egypt,' Handel's double-chorus oratorio will not be altogether shelved at the Festival. A preliminary prospectus issued by Mr. J. H. Cozens, general manager and secretary of the Crystal Palace, states that 'excerpts of the more popular solos and choruses from "Israel in Egypt" will be included in the Selection programme, in addition to the choruses "See the proud chief" (Deborah), "Then round about the starry throne" (Samson), "Gird on thy sword" (Saul), and the tenor solo and chorus "The trumpet's loud clangour" (St. Cecilia's Day).' Some of the most distinguished singers of the day (including Mr. Santley, one of the soloists at the Festival of 1862) have been engaged, and Mr. W. W. Hedgcock, musical director of the Crystal Palace, will, as heretofore, preside at the organ, while the orchestral and choral resources will be on the same gigantic scale as at previous Festivals.

M. Alfred Bruneau, the distinguished composer and critic, writing in Le Matin on the recent concerts given in Paris by the London Symphony Orchestra and the Leeds chorus, said:

Nous y avons entendu des morceaux modernes allemands et français... des pièces classiques sur lesquelles je reviendrai tout à l'heure et des productions de l'école anglaise. Pour bien apprécier certaines de celles-ci, il faudrait faire abstraction complète de nos habitudes et de nos goûts. La forte substance musicale, l'ample et riche polyphonie, la vaste et haute poésie à quoi nous accoutumèrent nos compositeurs préférés y manquent presque entièrement. L'ode: Blest Pair of sirens, de sir Parry, a une rudesse un peu sèche; la Danse des Nymphes, de Sullivan, paraît dépourvue de signification; le Benedictus, de sir Mackenzie, ne nous offre qu'une longue mélodie assez facile. En revanche, le scherzo de la Symphonie scandinave, de M. Cowen, est légèrement, adroitement développé, et The Challenge of Thor, de sir Elgar, âpre et sombre, a de la tenue et de la vigueur.

Notre public ne pouvait manquer d'accueillir avec la plus cordiale sympathie ces divers ouvrages, mais le meilleur de l'enthousiasme est allé à sir Charles Stanford et à ses exécutants. On a chaleureusement applaudi l'andante et le finale de sa Symphonie irlandaise, pleine de couleur populaire, les expressifs et émouvants fragments de son Requiem, et l'on a profondément admiré les chœurs, l'orchestre et les solistes, qu'il mène de bonne et sûre manière. Formés d'amateurs, humbles gens de travail, employés, étudiants, que réunit et enflamme la passion de l'art, ces chœurs possèdent une discipline, une souplesse, une justesse, une précision, une cohésion incomparables. Ils ont interprété magnifiquement le Psaume CXLIX et le Sanctus de la Messe en si mineur de Bach, The Horse and his Rider, de Hændel, et la neuvième symphonie de Beethoven, où l'orchestre, très remarquable, lui aussi, a rivalisé de talent avec eux. Les solistes, miss Marie Brema, miss Perceval Allen, soprano de voix claire et vibrante; MM. Francis Braun, baryton généreux et ardent; John Coates, ténor excellent, et Plunket Greene ont prêté un vif éclat à la dernière journée.

It must indeed be gratifying to the Leeds singers, and through them to English choralists generally, that M. Bruneau paid so great a tribute to the choral excellence of which we in England can well afford to boast. At a civic reception given to the Paris choir at Leeds Town Hall on January 20, it was stated that the King, in a letter through Lord Knollys to Sir Charles Stanford, has expressed his great satisfaction at the gratifying success of the visit to Paris. The letter added that the excellent singing of the 'Marseillaise' in French reflected the highest credit on the Chorus.

The prospectus of the Philharmonic Society for the coming season is an interesting and eclectic document in which novelties are not conspicuous. Only two works are designated by 'first performance,' a piano-forte concerto (in one movement) by Mr. York Bowen, the solo part to be played by the composer, and 'Orchestral variations on an African theme' by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor. Herr Weingartner is to conduct the first performance in London of his Symphony in G; Miss Marie Hall and Master Elman are to appear (the latter in Glazounov's violin Concerto); and special interest will centre in the visit of the Bradford Choral Society, who will take part in Beethoven's 9th Symphony and sing a motet by Bach. The symphonies, in addition to those already mentioned, are Beethoven No. 5, Brahms No. 1, Schumann No. 2 (in C), and Tchaikovsky No. 5. The name of Mendelssohn is absent from the scheme. Dr. Cowen retains the post of conductor.

The Incorporated Society of Musicians held its twenty-first annual Conference at the Empire Hotel, Lowestoft, from January 1 to 5, with the success which always attends this reunion. As heretofore the social element obtained the pre-eminence, but matters more serious, if not so holidayified, were by no means elbowed out by the prevailing good fellowship of congenial spirits then gathered together. Papers were read on the following subjects: 'Modern harmony as exemplified in the works of Elgar, Strauss, and Debussy' (Dr. F. J. Sawyer); 'Some East Anglian musicians' (Dr. A. H. Mann, himself one of them); 'Some notes on the improvement of popular musical taste in England' (Mr. A. E. Grimshaw); 'Is modern music decadent?' (Mr. H. A. Keyser); and 'Municipalities and music' (Mr. J. C. B. Tirbutt). To attempt to give a résumé of these discourses and the discussions consequent thereupon would hardly do the writers and speakers justice; and there is all the less reason to give condensed reports, as a full record of the Conference proceedings, including verbatim reports of all the papers, is contained in the January issue of the Journal of the Society. Reference must however be made to the epoch-making discourse of Dr. Sawyer, who began his paper on 'Modern harmony' with these words:

There are NO RULES in harmony.—There can be no rules in harmony. Harmony is one branch of an art, and no 'art' can have rules to fetter and restrict it save the one great rule that, as an 'art,' it must do the work for which every 'art' exists, namely, to ennoble the soul, to develop the love of beauty and imagination, and to stir up the highest emotions. How can an art, which exists for such aims, be hampered and confined by any rules? It is self-evident that no art can be so bound, if it fulfils the great functions for which it exists.

The only rule that harmony knows is this:—Every chord can go everywhere, and every combination of sounds can be used, provided the composer produces, by the means he uses, a true art work which fulfils the definitions already laid down.

These portentous statements suggest the question: What will become of all the theory treatises? As to the 'fifth hunters,' their occupation will be gone, a result that no one with true artistic feeling will deeply regret.

With all the enthusiasm of an antiquary and a historian Dr. Henry Watson has compiled 'A Chronicle of the Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club,' a society of which he has held the conductorship for twelve years. This interesting brochure not only furnishes the history of the Glee Club since its formation in 1830, but gives complete lists of all the music performed at the meetings, the catalogue of glees filling no fewer than twenty-eight closely-printed pages. In addition to the portraits of officials and others, and views of the various meeting-places of this part-singing organization, there are facsimiles of the autograph MSS. of Cooke's famous glee 'Strike the lyre'—sent in for the competition of 1832 but which failed to get a prize!—and Wesley's fine setting of 'I wish to tune my quivering lyre,' which gained the prize for a 'cheerful glee' in 1833. Among other prize compositions which the Manchester Gentlemen's Glee Club called into existence are: 'Old May morning' (Vincent Novello), 'At that dread hour' (S. S. Wesley), 'Hushed in death' (Hiles), 'Hence, loathed melancholy' (Lahee), and 'Humpty Dumpty' (A. J. Caldicott). Dr. Watson's industry in compiling this record of 'something attempted, something done,' is sure to have its reward. Copies of the book are to be obtained from Mr. Charles H. Barber, 24, St. Ann Street, Manchester.

The second part of the Alexander Meyer Cohn collection of autographs will be sold by auction at Berlin (J. A. Stargardt's Buchhandlung), February 5-10. Among them are interesting letters by Beethoven, Berlioz, Bizet, Brahms, &c., &c. In one, written by Haydn in 1776, the composer speaks of the hardships during the eight years which followed his dismissal from St. Stephen's Cathedral, Vienna, and adds by way of comment: 'Through the wretched necessity to earn one's daily bread many a genius goes to wrack and ruin.' There is a letter written by Mendelssohn in 1842 to Dr. A. J. Becker, from Ostend, with the concluding part from London. He complains that Berlin is a city which offers no good outlook for music or musicians: 'Everything in Berlin suffers from egoism; hence the unGerman and degenerate state of all that concerns music there.' And once again, Cosima Wagner, writing in 1874, i.e., two years before the production of the 'Ring' at Bayreuth, to Dr. Wilhelm Hensen, says: 'The work on which my husband is incessantly engaged—if ever it comes off—seems to me like a funeral festival; how many good people who have worked with us have passed away, and among them the best, the most beautiful, and the dearest.' The 'if' (the italics are ours) is not surprising.

Much sympathy will be felt for Sir Frederick Bridge in the loss he has sustained by the death of Lady Bridge, which took place, we regret to record, on January 13, at The Cloisters, Westminster Abbey.

We would call special attention to the notice of the Competition in Queensland on page 123, as an instance of enthusiasm in music in the Colonies.

For anthem, choice fell upon Mendelssohn's 'Be thou faithful unto Him,' from St. Paul, the solo being taken by Mr. Ernest Pike.

'Now for two trifles of my own, just to lighten the programme, you know,' remarked Miss Apollina Shewoff, in drawing up the scheme of her pianoforte recital:

- (a) The Grasshopper (Op. 1).
- (b) Icicles.

In addition to her pianistical propensities, Apollina was an entomologist and a bicyclist.

Some musicians think more of money than of harmony.

A QUEEN OF SONG.

HENRIETTA SONTAG.

Last year was allowed to pass with little, if any, notice having been taken of the centenary birth-year of Henrietta Sontag, Countess Rossi. And yet one who achieved an international popularity and fame never before accorded to a German singer should not be completely forgotten. Moreover, did she not create the part of Euryanthe in Weber's opera of that name, sing the soprano solo parts at the first performance of Beethoven's Mass in D and Choral Symphony, and gain the approval of Berlioz, and was not she held in the highest estimation by Mendelssohn?

Her father a comedian, her mother an actress, Henrietta Sontag was born at Coblenz, January 3, 1806. At the early age of six she made her first appearance in public at the Darmstadt Theatre, when she took the part of Salomé in Kauer's 'Donauweibchen.' Three years later, after the death of her father, she acted juvenile parts at Prague, where Weber was conductor, and in 1815, though under the prescribed age, she became a pupil at the Conservatoire. When only fifteen she was suddenly called upon to take the place of an absent prima donna, and at once made her mark. The next few years were spent at Vienna, where she gained fresh experience by singing in both Italian and German opera. So delighted was Weber with her in 'La Donna del Lago' that the next day he offered her the title-rôle in his 'Euryanthe,' in which—at its production on October 25, 1823—she made a triumphant success. 'How did little Sontag sing?' inquired Beethoven after the performance, as he, poor deaf man, could not hear her. At the production, both on the same day, —May 7, 1824—of Beethoven's Mass in D and Choral Symphony, Sontag sang the soprano solo parts. When she and Unger (the contralto soloist) protested against the unsingable passages in the 9th Symphony, and requested him to bring them within the compass of their voices, Beethoven dryly replied, 'Nein, und immer nein.'

From the age of eighteen her career was one unbroken triumph. At Leipzig, Berlin, Paris, London, and elsewhere she was idolized, and she created an enthusiasm which was not without absurdity; as, for instance, at Göttingen, where her post-chaise was thrown into the river by the ardent crowd because they counted no one worthy to use it after her. She came to London in 1828. In recording her first appearance here—in Rossini's 'Barbiere,' April 15, 1828, King's Theatre—the Harmonicon eulogistically said:

Reports of her unrivalled talents, her matchless beauty, her irresistible manners, and her all-conquering foot, were the precursors of this incarnation of song, symmetry, and elegance; this Pandora without her box; this all-gifted present of the very gods and goddesses themselves, in their most benign mood. Ambassadors, princes, nay kings, it is said, are intoxicated by her charms: no wonder then that the journalists of Germany and of France should also be inebriated by the draughts of delight which they drank from her eyes, her voice, and—her feet! No wonder, on her advent here, and when the 'delightful vision lighted' on the threshold, 'which she hardly seemed to touch,' that the minister of Imperial Majesty should have received her at his portals,—that the representative of the most Christian Sovereign on the face of the earth should have led her to a throne, prepared for her by a great English Duke, where she was to receive the first homage of that august body, the British world of 'rank and fashion'!

Mademoiselle Sontag is stated to be nineteen years of age; she cannot exceed one or two-and-twenty. She is of a middling stature, and inclining to embonpoint. Her hair and complexion are fair, her eyes blue, with that kind of Roxalane nose, the nez retroussé, which often gives an appearance of great vivacity, though not in her case. Her mouth is well made, but she distorts it sometimes in singing, and it is lined by a set of teeth, the beauty of which she does not conceal. Her countenance indicates good temper, and is extremely pleasing, but has no pretension to what is properly called beauty, either as to feature or effect, and is not indicative of more than an ordinary degree of intellect. She is, altogether, well made, though there are defects in her person. Her hand and arm are beautiful, and her foot is not unworthy of the encomiums lavished on it. Her carriage is not objectionable; but to judge accurately of this, she must be seen in a character of more dignity. Estimating her by the part of Rosina, we can afford her but little praise as an actress; she here betrays either a great want of animation, or a perfect indifference to the dramatic business of the stage.

HENRIETTA SONTAG
(THE COUNTESS ROSSI).

From a miniature in the possession of the Hon. M. A. B. Somerville and Hon. C. L. Somerville, and reproduced by their kind permission.

In his entertaining diary Moscheles refers to her wonderful impersonations which attracted crowds so great at the Opera 'that gentlemen, by the time they found their seats, were minus their coat-tails, and ladies lost their head-dresses.' He speaks of joining her and other friends in a visit to Epsom races, and adds that 'the Duke of Devonshire danced with her at his own ball, where her beauty and grace made a great sensation.' Still more interesting is the distinguished pianist's account of a dinner-party he gave, at which Sontag, Sir Walter Scott and Clementi were the principal guests. Moscheles says: 'The great man [Scott] was all ears, and eyes too, I think' in conversation with the fair singer, who was then just about to appear in 'La Donna del Lago.' To quote further from Moscheles:

'When she questioned him [Scott] about her costume as the Lady of the Lake, he described to her with the utmost minuteness every fold of the plaid, and was greatly pleased when I produced a genuine satin clan plaid, the present of Lady Sinclair, whilst I was in Edinburgh, the loan of which I was delighted to promise Sontag. Sir Walter showed her the particular way the brooch should be fastened at the shoulder, and would not allow any alteration. Henrietta had two worshippers that evening, the second being Clementi [then in his seventy-seventh year], who seemed to be as much fascinated as Scott. He got up from his chair and said: "To-night I should like to play also." The proposition was received with acclamation. He extemporized with all the freshness of youth, and we listened with intense delight, for Clementi very rarely played before company. You should have seen the ecstasy of the two men, Scott and Clementi; they shook each other by the hand, took it in turns to flirt with Sontag, without seeming jealous of one another; it was a pretty duet of joint admiration—of course the poet, musician, and songstress were the observed of all observers.'

In the year 1829 Mdlle. Sontag contracted a secret marriage with Count Rossi, in the diplomatic service of Sardinia—secret, as it was feared that 'the young diplomatist's future might be compromised were he to acknowledge an artist of low birth as his wife.' The King of Prussia, however, subsequently bestowed a patent of nobility on the young bride, who thenceforth appeared in documents as 'née de Launstein,' and she definitely retired, as it appeared, from public life, although she occasionally sang for charitable objects. The revolutionary period of 1847-48 on the Continent so impaired the fortunes of the Count and Countess that Henrietta resumed her operatic career in order to retrieve her fortunes. When it was intimated to Rossi that he could retain his ambassador's post if he consented to a formal separation from his wife, to be annulled when she had left the boards, he refused to be a party to any such arrangement, and resigned his post, though keeping on friendly terms with the Court. On July 12, 1849, Henrietta Sontag reappeared (using her maiden name) in London at Her Majesty's Theatre, Lumley, the impresario, having offered £6,000 for an engagement of six months. Through the great care she had taken of her marvellous voice, her powers were unimpaired, though she had for twenty years forsaken the rôle of a prima donna. Three years later she and her husband went to America, tempted thither by a generous offer. In the United States she, as elsewhere, achieved a brilliant success. Her voice became so strengthened by the climate that she could sing in 'Lucrezia Borgia' and in 'The daughter of the regiment' on a single evening without experiencing over-fatigue.

The remarkable career of this gifted queen of song was brought to a sad termination at Mexico. An attack of cholera, of only a few days' duration, caused her death on June 17, 1854, at the age of forty-eight. Her remains were interred in the San Fernando Cemetery, Mexico, the funeral procession being more than a mile long, and including no fewer than 147 carriages, sent, as a mark of sympathy, by the principal families of the city. The news of her death caused much regret in London, where she was greatly esteemed, and the Musical World which contained her obituary notice appeared in mourning. Berlioz ascribes her great success to her having so many qualities combined in that wonderful personality—sweetness unsurpassed, fabulous agility, perfect intonation, and expression.

The portrait of the Countess Rossi which accompanies this article is reproduced from a miniature presented by her to Sir William Somerville, Bart. (afterwards Lord Athlumney), when he was Secretary to the British Embassy at The Hague between seventy and eighty years ago.

That Henrietta Sontag had a vein of humour in her nature is proved by a letter she wrote to Lord Athlumney (as Sir William Somerville, Bart.), dated 'The Hague, 30 Dec., 1830,' which reads as follows in a translated version:

I thank you heartily, dear Somerville, for sending the things. They have my fullest approval, and I laughed right heartily over the conscientious account you have rendered about so trifling a matter. I really have a right to be very cross with you, for you escaped me at Hamburg like a Dutchman; I could not even bid you farewell.

I am now already formally settled in my domesticity and feel inexpressibly happy. The ladies of the diplomatic corps received me in endless kindness, especially the Ambassadors, Lady Bagot, who distinguished herself above all others. She wished to present me at Court; but as I have not yet been presented at my own Court, I had to refuse or postpone the presentation until a later period. The Hague is on the whole a sad place to live in; the present circumstances of the country do not by any means attune the inhabitants to joyfulness.

I occupy myself very much with my domestic duties and I never feel bored in the least. . . . Politics are very much to the fore here, and I must confess that progress in that direction is becoming more marked every day. One of these days soon I shall work for an Ambassador's post myself.

As a finish to my epistle I beg of you to rejoice me with a few lines, and to give me your address, for it is my intention to worry you a good deal and to appoint you as my chargé d'affaires.

Adieu, dear Somerville. Remember me occasionally in the hubbub of London.

Yours,

HENRIETTA ROSSI.

The foregoing letter was evidently written by the Countess Rossi soon after her marriage, the date of which is not given in the various books of reference.

THE ENGLISH CONCERTS IN PARIS.

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The concerts given on the afternoons of January 10 and 12, in the Théâtre du Châtelet, Paris, by the London Symphony Orchestra, had a success that must have surprised everyone concerned. Both were crowded, and at the second many hearers had to stand in the gangways, and every inch of available space was filled. Even for English ideas the programmes were a great deal too long, and it was a marvel that a French audience should have been so patient as to sit out two and a-half hours of serious music with so much complacency. The primary intention of the enterprise was undoubtedly to give the French people an opportunity of hearing the best that England can produce in the way of orchestral and choral executants, rather than to endeavour to obtain a wider recognition for modern English compositions. The object was splendidly attained, for the Parisian public was naturally amazed at the quality and power of the Leeds Chorus (consisting of 300 picked voices from the Festival Choir), and at the wonderful refinement and musicianship they showed in the choruses of Bach and Handel. The former master was represented by the unaccompanied motet, 'Singet dem Herrn' (of course sung in English), in which the pitch was maintained with astonishing accuracy. In the Choral Symphony, too, at the end of the second concert, the singing of the choir was extraordinarily fine, and the singers, greatly daring, began the proceedings by giving the 'Marseillaise' in quite tolerable French. The orchestra showed off the splendid quality of its strings in Saint-Saëns's 'Phaëton,' and its skill in Strauss's 'Don Juan,' both being conducted by M. Messager. The second day's concert began with another French work, the fine 'Benvenuto Cellini' overture of Berlioz, which M. Colonne directed with absolute perfection of authority and sympathy. These performers and the conductor of the bulk of the two programmes, Sir Charles Stanford, achieved a great and unmistakable success, the quality of which may be gauged by the fact that the few French critics who found any fault with the concerts were driven to suppose that the English colony was strongly represented on both occasions, a statement which was far from being true. From the President downwards, the audience represented what is sometimes called 'Tout Paris,' and the greatest tributes of admiration came from the French listeners.

Whether the impression made by the compositions chosen to represent English music was quite as unanimous, we may be permitted to doubt. It is obvious that the opinion of the Parisian critics, even if they represented the public, upon such typically English music as was given, can be of uncommonly little value, but as a matter of curiosity it is interesting to see how things struck them. Here the arrangement of the programme might easily have been improved; the masterpiece of modern English music, Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens,' was put so early in the programme that the choir had not got accustomed to the disadvantages inseparable from the theatre, and in the book of words there was no reference to the fact that the poem was by Milton. Seeing that it was entitled 'Le Couple de Sirènes bénies,' it is not surprising that the majority of the audience, expectant of some 'ballet des sylphes,' should have found it inappropriately solemn, and that even the most intelligent of the French musical critics, M. Alfred Bruneau, should have described it as being marked by a certain 'dry roughness.' Some of his colleagues played terrible havoc with the opening words, one quoting them as 'Blest paisof Sireus.' It was another matter of regret that Stanford's music should have been represented by no complete work, but by two extracts, a couple of movements from the 'Irish' Symphony and three from the 'Requiem'; for, beautiful as both the extracts undoubtedly are, one of the composer's best qualities, his power of conceiving and designing his works as a whole, was never seen at all. It was difficult for Sir Edward Elgar to be represented in an entirely favourable manner, for not very long ago his best orchestral work had rather a doubtful reception in Paris, so that for the choral selection recourse was had to the 'Challenge of Thor,' from 'The Saga of King Olaf.' On the whole, perhaps the short group of orchestral pieces, representing Sullivan, Mackenzie and Cowen, was the most successful, and all the critics united in praising the Scherzo from the 'Scandinavian' Symphony of the last-named composer, in spite (or perhaps in consequence) of its Berliozian style. Sullivan's pretty 'Dance of nymphs and reapers,' from 'The Tempest' music, was very popular with the audience, and Mackenzie's long-drawn 'Benedictus' served to show the tone of the violins to perfection. The Andante and Finale of the 'Irish' Symphony made a good effect, and the extracts from the noble 'Requiem' of Stanford were very finely sung by chorists and soloists, the quartet consisting of Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Marie Brema, Messrs. John Coates and Plunket Greene. The first three of these were joined by Mr. Francis Braun in the solos of the Choral Symphony, and the young baritone gave out the recitative with excellent effect, the quadruple cadenza near the end being sung with rare ease and fluency. After the end of the second concert, the 'Marseillaise' and 'God save the King' were again sung, and at the end of the whole a large golden palm-branch was presented to the conductor as representing the choir. Even then there was so much applause that the Yorkshire men and women could not refrain from giving three cheers. All the French critics and the public were surprised to find that these incomparable singers were entirely amateurs. Of course the expenses of their visit to Paris were paid—we understand, by private subscription; and after the concerts various congratulatory speeches were made to them, notably by Mr. Walter Behrens as representing the British residents in Paris.

The occasion was in all respects a most interesting one, and not without significance for the music of France and England alike, even if we admit that the programmes might have been even more representative. Hopes have been held out by various French writers and authorities that the visit will be repeated at some future time; it would be most interesting to have a return visit from one of the best French choral societies, such as the famous Schola Cantorum, to instruct us in the art of singing the sort of music in which they excel. The full programmes of both concerts are appended:

The Kensington Choral Competition (female voices only) will take place at the Kensington Town Hall on March 30. There is a special class for Ladies' Church Choirs, and Dr. McNaught will be the adjudicator. Full particulars can be obtained from the Hon. Secs., Miss C. E. Denison, 2, Strathmore Gardens, and Miss Rawson, 34, Pembroke Road, Kensington. In connection with this Competition there will also be one for orchestras, consisting of two classes—one for orchestras composed of ladies only, the other for mixed orchestras of ladies and gentlemen, strings only. For this Competition the Hon. Sec. is Miss I. Colville, 85, Lexham Gardens, W.

SUBSCRIBERS AND A LIST OF SUBSCRIBERS.

Many an old music-book becomes invested with an interest and value far beyond that of its crotchet and quaver importance. Here, a prolix preface penned in quaint language; there, a deferential dedication set forth in phrases of fulsome flattery; and anon a list of subscribers, prefixed perchance to a work by a forgotten composer, whose creative fancies have long ago sunk deep down in the sea of oblivion. A list of subscribers to a musical work often serves two useful purposes. It shows that the composer received, at least, some substantial acknowledgment of his work; and then, as time goes on, such registers of names often become very useful in furnishing proof of where this or that man lived, or the office he held, at the time of publication. Again, one may unexpectedly find an illustrious name. For example, that of Handel, in compositions by John Bennett, Thomas Chilcot, Barnabus Gunn and Musgrave Heighington—departed worthies whose patronymics are restricted to the ken of musical antiquaries. These men and their strains must, however, have seemed worthy of so practical a kind of patronage by the mighty master, because he would not always say 'yea' to such requests. Burney, in his 'Commemoration' (of Handel), relates an incident which amusingly bears out that statement. It is true that the story is a second-hand one, having been related to Burney by Mr. Brown, 'leader of his Majesty's band'; but it probably gains in piquancy by the process of transmission. We give Burney's own words, so far as they are parliamentary, even at General Election times:

When the late reverend Mr. Felton found that his first organ concertos were well received, he opened a subscription for a second set, and begged of Brown to solicit Mr. Handel's permission to insert his name in the list. Brown, who had been in great favour with Handel the winter before, when he led his Oratorios, remembering how civilly he had been attended by him to the door, and how carefully cautioned, after being heated by a crowded room and hard labour, at the rehearsals in Brook-street, not to stir without a chair [Sedan chair], had no doubt of his success: but upon mentioning Felton's request, as delicately as possible, one morning when he [Handel] was shaving, by telling him that he was a clergyman, who being about to publish some Concertos by subscription, was extremely ambitious of the honour of his name and acceptance of a book, merely to grace his list, without involving him in any kind of expence; Handel, putting the barber's hand aside, got up in a fury, and, with his face still in a lather, cries out with great vehemence: "— your seluf, and go to der —: a barson make Concerto! why he no make sarmon?" &c. In short, Brown, seeing him in such a rage, with razors in his reach, got out of the room as fast as he could, lest he should have used them in a more barbarous way than would be safe.

What the Rev. Mr. Felton felt on being told of Handel's decision is not recorded.

Burney tells us that organists existed on Handel's concertos for many years. And how long have the Sonatas of Mendelssohn, in conjunction with Bach's fugues, furnished sustenance to players on the king of instruments? The answer to this question is 'sixty years,' and there seems little likelihood that these masterpieces will ever fall into disuse. In another column (p. 95) will be found some notes on the organ sonatas of Mendelssohn: as a sequel thereto, and as something in the way of a novelty, we reprint the entire list of the subscribers to that work, issued in 1845 at the subscription price of one guinea.

From a copy of the original edition—with its sumptuous margins and clear type—now before us, we find that among the names recorded are those of eleven cathedral organists. Other names will readily attract attention—E. J. Hopkins, at whose instigation Mendelssohn inserted metronome rates in the proof copy: W. H. Monk, the first editor of 'Hymns Ancient and Modern'; Alexander Macfarren, as he is designated; J. W. Davison, the famous musical critic of The Times, who lodged at No. 1, Berners Street, then in the occupation of 'Mrs. Mary Wood, boot and shoemaker'; J. B. Cramer; Cipriani Potter; Mr. Joseph Street, of Madrigal Society fame; and Vincent Novello, then getting towards his three score years and ten, and who, like the rest of the subscribers, had been brought up on the G organ. But we must no longer stand between the reader and the list of subscribers to Mendelssohn's Organ Sonatas. The names are given in the same order as in the original, but a few obvious misprints have been corrected:

'SOMETHING IN D.'

Printers at Calgary (Canada) do not seem to be above reproach. One of the newspapers in that town furnished the following information respecting the Christmas services at the Pro-Cathedral of the Redeemer:

7.30 p.m. Christmas Eve Service and Cards.
 11.0 a.m. (Christmas Day) Choral Communion:
 (Something in D).

We are informed on good authority that 'Carols,' not 'Cards,' formed part of the service on Christmas Eve, and that 'Something in D' was intended for 'Woodward in D.' In addition to the foregoing service and other music, Sir Frederick Bridge's anthem 'In that day' was sung under the direction of the organist of the Pro-Cathedral, Mrs. Annie Broder.

Messrs. Harrison & Harrison, of Durham, are about to build a new organ for Birmingham Parish Church.

The above illustration is from a photograph of the chaste monument to the memory of Sir John Stainer, recently placed on the west wall of the ante-chapel of Magdalen College, Oxford. The gift of Lady Stainer, this memorial consists of a mural tablet of brass, framed in alabaster, after a design by Mr. G. F. Bodley, R.A., the Latin inscription being the composition of the President, Mr. T. Herbert

Warren, M.A. Sir John Stainer became organist of Magdalen College in the summer of 1860, just before he took leave of his teens, and held the post with great distinction for twelve years, until his appointment to St. Paul's Cathedral in 1872. No more fitting summary of Sir John's life-work could be found than the scroll-words on the memorial,

CHURCH &amp; ORGAN MUSIC—(Continued from page 108).

The '985th recital' would seem to be a record, yet this can be put to the credit of St. Nicholas Cole-Abbey Church, Queen Victoria Street, where, on December 19, Spohr's 'Last Judgment' was sung. These recitals—usually consisting of organ pieces and vocal solos—are given weekly in this city church, of which the Rev. C. N. Kelly is the rector, an office formerly held by the late Canon Shuttleworth. Mr. Herbert Hodge, under whose direction the recitals are given, is the organist and choirmaster of the church.

Mr. T. Westlake-Morgan, organist of Bangor Cathedral, has recently been presented with an illuminated address, signed by the senior residentiary canon, the minor canons, the lay clerks, the choristers, the vergers, ex-vergers and officials of the cathedral.

AN UNFORTUNATE POSTCARD.

DEAR SIR,—From a communication, signed 'An old professional organist,' which I have received, and now enclose for your perusal, I gather that he (and possibly others) regards my advertisement for an honorary organist as 'clerical sweating.' I should like to say that I would be glad indeed to offer a salary if the very poor church for which I need the organist could afford it. Had the writer known all the circumstances—had he known the awful poverty of the church and district, the fact that the assistant-organist, about whom he speaks so sarcastically, is being paid, though now crippled with rheumatism and unable to do the work adequately, for which I am asking for an offer—he would never have written the scurrilous card he did not dare to sign with his own name. Surely the man who occupies so honourable a position as leader of the praises of the people in God's house should believe what he is taking so important a part in: therefore I ask that he be a 'Communicant.' It has no reference to his musical ability, but only to the fact that I would not willingly place the finest organist in charge of the organ if he were not, as far as one can judge such matters, able to lead the worship in the right spirit.

Fortunately I have proved that there are a large number of proficient organists who are willing to offer their services free to a poor church such as mine, just as many other voluntary workers in the church and choir are willing to do.

4, Alwyne Square, N., Yours, &c.,
Jan. 21, 1906. GEO. M. HANKS.

[We refrain from printing the typed post-card to which the Rev. G. M. Hanks refers, and can only express regret that 'an old professional organist,' whoever he may be, should demean himself and degrade the office of church organist by writing an anonymous communication in offensive terms.—ED. M. T.]

We regret to record the following recent deaths:

MRS. ELIZABETH BACON, better known as Miss Poole, at Langley, Bucks, on January 15, aged eighty-six. Although she began her public career in pantomime when only seven years old, she made her reputation in opera and in the concert-room, her mezzo-soprano voice, of great compass and sweetness, no less than her attractive appearance and extensive repertoire, causing her to become a great favourite. A portrait of her, in uniform, painted by Meyer, is at the Garrick Club.

FRITZ SPINDLER, aged eighty-eight, a prolific composer of popular and brilliant pianoforte music, of which he wrote upwards of 300 pieces.

GABRIELLE KRAUSS, at Paris, formerly one of the greatest operatic artists of the 19th century. Born in 1842, she retired from the stage rather early in order to devote herself to teaching.

HENRY SUTHERLAND EDWARDS, on January 21 at 19, Westbourne Terrace Road, in his 79th year. A veteran journalist, Mr. Sutherland Edwards was the first editor of the Graphic, and his literary experiences included the work of a war correspondent, dramatist, novelist, and musical critic. He contributed many articles to THE MUSICAL TIMES and to Concordia. A few years ago he published his 'Personal recollections'—an interesting book—of which a review article appeared in our issue of August, 1900, p. 532.

Reviews.

The Oxford History of Music. Vol. II. The Polyphonic Period, Part II. By H. E. Wooldridge, M.A. Vol. VI. The Romantic Period. By Edward Dannreuther. Under the general editorship of W. H. Hadow.

[Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1905.]

These two portly volumes bring this great undertaking to a conclusion. On this we congratulate the Editor and his fellow-labourers most heartily. While the Histories of Padre Martini, Forkel, La Fage, Fétis and Ambros remain magnificent fragments, it is the boast of our own country that those of Burney, Hawkins, and the work now before us have been completed on the lines laid down by their projectors. It was a wise course to entrust the different volumes to writers specially acquainted with the special periods into which the work has been divided, and in his selection the Editor has exercised a wise discretion.

Readers of the first volume will not need to be reminded of the remarkable knowledge and research which Mr. Wooldridge brought to bear on the history of the infancy of the Art, a subject bristling with difficulties. In his new volume these qualities are equally apparent. The development of harmony from its rude and primitive beginnings is traced with much detail, and it is this gradual elaboration which rendered necessary some means of defining the duration of a note. Hence arose the Cantus mensurabilis, with the complex contrivances by which the ancients attempted to compass this end. Mr. Wooldridge has done all that is possible to make the matter clear, the difficulty of which will have been brought home to anyone who has attempted the scoring of any of the unbarred compositions of a former age. In a history of the infancy of an art, the consideration of its technics must receive adequate treatment; but we cannot altogether get over the feeling that the artistic aims of these early writers have been somewhat overshadowed by too exclusive attention to technical detail, and we confess that we should have welcomed a little more expression of enthusiasm in treating for example of the work of Orlando di Lassus, and still more in the case of Palestrina, surely the composer of the noblest music ever devoted to the worship of God. We should like also to know the grounds on which our author throws doubt on Baini's statement—which, indeed, he was not the first to bring forward—that the composition of the 'Missa Pape Marcelli' saved the situation when the abolition of polyphonic music was in serious contemplation at the Council of Trent.

It is a far cry from the days of Palestrina to those covered by the sixth volume, which was entrusted to the capable hands of Mr. Dannreuther. We deeply regret that his lamented death prevented him from seeing his work through the Press, a duty which has been admirably performed by Mr. Hadow, the Editor of the series. Mr. Dannreuther was known as a champion of the advanced school, and it is therefore with great pleasure that we recognize an evident and, we may add, a successful attempt to be fair even where he is probably not in sympathy.

We are disposed to regret the title of the 'Romantic Period' which is given to this volume. Mr. Dannreuther, who forbears to give an absolute definition of the term 'romantic,' which he characterizes as 'elusive,' finds its parallel and its origin in the literary 'storm and stress' movement of which Goethe and Schiller were the prime movers. If we may attempt a definition of its results on the Art of music, we should describe it as the subordination of form to expression. Mr. Dannreuther dates its origin from the works of Weber. We should place it earlier. Surely Beethoven's 'Leonora' No. 3 (1806) and 'Egmont' (1810) are brimful of the romantic feeling, of which many previous indications, as Mr. Dannreuther admits, are to be found; and this is really an argument in favour of the theory of development, which it is one of the main objects of this History to enforce. The fact is, this title as applied to the period covered by the present volume is misleading. The chapters on Rossini, Bellini and Donizetti appear like a remanet from the previous volume. While however we look on the chapter on Rossini as misplaced, it is a conspicuous instance of fair treatment. It is refreshing in these days to find a critic venturing to say a good word for that composer, and even to recognize merit in his 'Stabat Mater,' in spite of its incongruity as religious music. Perhaps Mr. Dannreuther is not quite so fair to Meyerbeer, but this composer has always been the bête noir of Wagner and his adherents. Of Mendelssohn he speaks with genuine admiration, and we are glad to find him endorsing the English opinion (in opposition to that current in Germany), which places 'Elijah' on a higher plane than 'St. Paul.'

The great question of programme music comes in for a large share of attention, especially as exemplified in its two most prominent exponents, Berlioz and Liszt. And here we are cordially in agreement with our Author. Speaking of the 'Symphonie fantastique' of the former composer, he says, 'in a large part, notably the Finale, the music is sheer nonsense, unless the hearer has knowledge of the programme; yet even if he has full knowledge, the heterogeneous factors interfere with one another, and leave an annoying sense of incoherence and incongruity.' Here appears to us the weakness of programme music. It is only when you know what the composer is striving to depict that you trace its appropriateness. When left to your own attempt at an interpretation the ideas presented to your mind probably have nothing in common with those intended by the composer. It is in most cases the untrained and unmusical listeners who weave a story into the music they are hearing, and this story differs with each listener. Mr. Dannreuther himself gives a curious instance of this. It appears that Weber admitted that 'a sort of story was present in his mind when composing the Concertstück, but that he hesitated to bring it forward for fear of being misunderstood.' Mr. Dannreuther (whether following Weber's story or forming one for himself, does not appear) pictures 'a lady sitting in her bower lamenting her knight who has gone to the Crusade. She fancies him in battle, and longing for one more sight of her before death. She is near to fainting away, when suddenly from the woods without comes the sound of men approaching. She looks out anxiously. There is her lover, and with a wild cry she rushes into his arms.' This is one interpretation. Weitzman, the well-known critic, having heard it performed by Liszt, saw in it 'an echo of the glorious uprising of Germany towards the close of the Napoleonic wars'! Two interpretations could not well be more divergent. The greatest composers have on occasions set themselves to imitate the sounds of nature—witness Haydn in the 'Creation,' and Beethoven in his Pastoral Symphony—but programme music, from the Biblical Sonatas of Kuhnau to the 'Symphonie Domestique' of Richard Strauss, is based on a misconception of the aims of music, which is powerless to express definite ideas. Of Liszt, nearly the whole of his original work for the orchestra is based on a programme; but he did not possess that remarkable command of instrumentation which is the prominent feature of Berlioz, and, in the words of Mr. Dannreuther, 'he put his trust in harmonic crudities and chromatic horrors from which sensitive musicians shrink with an intuitive dislike.' Of his compositions for the pianoforte Mr. Dannreuther looks on his transcriptions of the orchestral works of Beethoven, Berlioz and Wagner as his greatest efforts.

A very careful and appreciative analysis is given of the works of Schumann, and with this composer it was originally intended to close this History, but the scheme was afterwards wisely enlarged. The subject of national influence on music, of which of late we have heard so much, is, to our surprise, not separately treated, although there are notices of its prominent exponents, Gade, Rubinstein, Cui and Tchaikovsky; but by a remarkable oversight Dvůřák is entirely unmentioned, while still more strangely the name of Brahms appears in a few casual references only. At the hands of Mr. Dannreuther, a high-priest of the Wagnerian cult, this composer's works were certain to receive adequate treatment. So many musicians, and so large a number of their works are passed in review, that in a notice like the present only the more prominent features of the book can be noticed, but it is with much satisfaction that we find our two great composers, the Wesleys, father and son, placed on their own rightful eminence. All we can do is to send our readers to the book itself. We may add that it contains a chapter on the literature of music during the period under treatment, which, to us, seems a little inadequate.

NEW PART-SONGS.

- Sweet bird of hope.* Words by T. W. Wheeler, K.C. Music by H. M. Higgs.
Troll the bowl. Words by Thomas Dekker. Music by John B. McEwen.
If Love his arrows shoot so fast. Words by James Shirley (1594-1666). Music by Herbert W. Wareing.
If to my lady fair and true. Words by W. G. Rothery.
Bendeemer's stream. Words by Thomas Moore. Music by John Pointer.
The whispering waves. Words by P. B. Shelley. I call and I call. Poem by Robert Herrick. Music by Charles Wood.
Wanderer's night song. Words translated from Goethe by Longfellow. Music by C. G. Wood.
She's up and gone. Words by Tom Hood. Music by Joseph Holbrooke.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

The 'Sweet bird of hope' depicted in Mr. Wheeler's lines should linger with those who listen to Mr. Higgs's music. The part-writing flows along easily and the harmonies are equally rich and sympathetic in significance.

'Troll the bowl,' by Mr. McEwen, is not only a remarkably clever, but a most effective part-song. Particularly happy is the figure allied to the refrain 'Down-a-down hey,' used as a ground bass, and the passages in imitation in a central vivace section combined with rapid crescendi and diminuendi effects furnish excellent contrast. The music is also pervaded by a dry humour that greatly enhances the attractiveness of the little piece.

In setting 'If Love his arrows shoot so fast,' Dr. Wareing has paid due regard to the 17th century atmosphere of the text, and the harmonic scheme and character of the part-writing is admirably in keeping with the sentiment of the old-world words.

Part-writing and gracious harmonies are the prevailing and welcome features of Mr. Pointer's pair of part-songs. The composer has happily caught the spirit of Mr. Rothery's lover's lines no less than Moore's smooth-flowing Irish lyric 'Bendeemer's stream.' The result is that the music is as easy to sing as the words are simple in sentiment.

Dr. Charles Wood rarely fails to impart distinction to his music, and the strains he has allied to Shelley's poem, 'The whispering waves,' are no exception to the rule. The spirit of the text is charmingly expressed in the setting of the opening line. The change of tonality at the entrance of the phrase 'It seemed as if the hour were one sent from beyond the skies' has a beautiful effect, and the final cadence of the part-song is as delightfully fresh as it is unconventional. Different in spirit, but no less original in design, is Dr. Wood's music to Herrick's quaint poem 'I call and I call.' The humour underlying the text is greatly increased by the composer's treatment, and although the part-song will require diligent practice to do the setting justice, the time spent thereupon will be amply repaid.

'Wanderer's night song,' by Mr. C. G. Wood, would form a good study in the cultivation of expressive choral singing. Although the music is simple and easy to read, it imperatively demands finished singing.

Of the few young composers who have acquired a prominent position, Mr. Joseph Holbrooke is one who writes gratefully for the voice. His part-song 'She's up and gone' is a proof thereof. Particularly effective is the setting of the pathetic lines beginning 'She might have stayed a little yet,' and in other passages keen perception is shown of the inner significance of the lyric.

To the rain in summer. Trio for female voices. Words by Dr. W. C. Bennett. Music by Theo. Wendt.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

The text of this trio may be described as a prayer of Nature for the gentle rain which assuages her thirst caused by 'parching air and purple skies.' As set by Mr. Wendt for first and second soprano and contralto voices it might well be the song of three wood nymphs, so graceful and in sympathy with the spirit of the poem is the music. Moreover, the charm of the vocal strains is greatly enhanced by a tasteful pianoforte accompaniment of independent character.

The complete collection of Irish Music, as noted by George Petrie, LL.D., R.H.A. (1789-1866). Edited from the original manuscript by Charles Villiers Stanford.

[Boosey & Co., for the Irish Literary Society of London.]

To say that Ireland is exceedingly rich in folk-songs is only to repeat an oft-told truth. The collecting of these melodic treasures is, however, another story, and in this connection the name of Dr. George Petrie, a cultured Irish antiquary, deserves to be held in honourable remembrance. In December, 1851, he, with other enthusiastic Irishmen, founded the 'Society for the Preservation and Publication of the Melodies of Ireland.' This Society only succeeded in printing one volume of Dr. Petrie's work—that is to say, only a portion of his large collection of MSS. of Irish tunes. Sir Charles Stanford, with national enthusiasm and knowing that there was a mass of material still unprinted, determined to trace, and, if possible, publish the remainder. To use his own words: 'My investigations happily resulted in the discovery of the material, and it is now presented to the public exactly in the form which it took from Petrie's hand.' He adds, with pardonable pride: 'I am not aware that any collection of the folk-music of any country exists in such profusion of material or so straight from the mint.'

Even allowing for many of the tunes being duplicated by reason of their variants, the large number of 1,582 melodies is given in this volume. They appear 'straight from the mint,' as Sir Charles Stanford says, and happily, therefore, without the base ring of accompaniments which in their modernity so often spoil the native simplicity of folk-tunes. In some cases the words are given—e.g., No. 693:

Oh! Johnny, dearest Johnny, what dyed your hands and cloaths?

He answered him as he thought fit 'by a bleeding at the nose.'

A specimen of Dr. Petrie's annotations may be instanced in No. 1,098—'The lass with the golden tresses,' a Sligo tune—which, charged with antiquity, reads:

This tune was obtained by me from an old gentleman in the year 1810, who was then about 93 years of age, Owen Connellan, Professor of Celtic Languages, Queen's College, Cork. His mother, from whom he got it, died aged 110.

This splendid collection of Irish folk-songs has been well edited. The volume is one that forms a valuable contribution to the literature of an important subject in the development of national characteristics in music. Dr. Petrie's 'Introduction' and a facsimile of his very beautiful manuscript add to the interest of a welcome publication.

Songs of the West. Folk-songs of Devon and Cornwall, collected from the mouths of the people by S. Baring Gould, H. Fleetwood Sheppard, and F. W. Bussell. New and revised edition by Cecil J. Sharp.

[Methuen & Co.]

This handsomely got-up volume is of a different nature from the Irish collection noticed above, in that it contains pianoforte accompaniments to the songs. The preface says: 'A good many accompanists complained that the arrangements [in the previous edition] were too elaborate except for very skilled pianoforte players. We have now simplified the settings.' This is a step in the right direction which might with advantage have been carried still farther: for instance, in the love ditty, 'By chance it was' (No. 1), the continuous semiquaverous arpeggios are not only very fidgety, but they destroy the conversational simplicity of the melody, while the introductory bars seem quite out of place. The same remark applies to the restless accompaniment to 'The death of Parker' (No. 23), while the chopped-up pianoforte part to 'Lullaby' (No. 49)—clever enough as representing a choppy sea (the 'Daddy' of the song being a sailor)—is quite as unsuited as it can be for 'Sleep, baby sleep.' We mention these things not in any hypercritical spirit, but as calling attention to a vital principle in setting forth these songs of the people, wherein restraint should at all times be exercised, so that simplicity and appropriateness of accompaniment are secured. For the rest we have nothing but praise for these 'Songs of the West,' and Mr. Baring Gould's 'Introduction' will be read with interest.

Six Songs by H. Walford Davies. Op. 18, Nos. 1-6:—

Hame. Words by Allan Cunningham.

An uncouth love song. Words by George Wither.

This ae nighte. A Lyke-Wake dirge. Words Anonymous.

I love the jocund dance. Words by William Blake.

For a' that. Words by Robert Burns.

Fear no more the heat o' the sun. Words by Shakespeare.

[Sidney Riorden.]

This sextett of songs should find its way into the repertory of every cultured baritone vocalist. For home or concert-hall they are equally suitable, and in either, if well sung, they will both enchain attention and carry conviction. The lyrics have been chosen with keen perception of musical possibilities, and the opportunities afforded have been turned to excellent use by the gifted composer. Not only are these songs clever and scholarly, but they are dramatic and effective. The note of pathos rings true in 'Hame'; the quaintness of George Wither's 'Uncouth love song' is emphasized by the music; 'This ae nighte,' dramatically delivered, would thrill an audience; 'The jocund dance' is a delightfully gay ditty that no less stirs the pulse; the setting of 'For a' that' is instinct with the geniality of good fellowship; while the spirit of the old 'Morality' which pervades Shakespeare's lines permeates the music.

Edvard Grieg. By H. T. Finck.

Edvard MacDowell. By Lawrence Gilman.

[John Lane.]

Verdi. By Albert Visetti.

[George Bell & Sons.]

The biographies of Grieg and MacDowell—which form the latest additions to Mr. John Lane's 'Living Masters of Music Series'—have both been contributed by American writers. Mr. Finck has the advantage of personal friendship with Dr. Grieg, with the result that this interesting monograph is the most complete 'Life' of the distinguished Norwegian composer in the English language. All true biographers know the value of letters, of which Grieg has 'written in abundance—one of his friends, Mr. Feddersen, has over a hundred of them,' so his biographer informs us; therefore it is satisfactory to know that 'almost the only ones of his letters which have been made public are the few included in this volume.' Mr. Finck appears to have done his work well, and in discharging his task he has produced a book which is sure to find acceptance. A bibliography, a list of compositions, and a chapter on Norwegian folk-music—apart from the sixteen illustrations—add to the attractiveness of a readable 'life.' In a future edition an index should be provided and the birth-date of the composer given.

Mr. Gilman's book on his fellow-countryman, Dr. Edward MacDowell, is less biographical than critical, sixty of his seventy-seven pages being devoted to an essay on the composer's creative output—as a matter of fact the biographical sketch of Dr. MacDowell which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of April, 1904, gives more details of his career, its ups and downs, than are to be found in this little volume. Still, for all that, it deserves a welcome by reason of Mr. Gilman's critical insight into a series of compositions, extending to Op. 62, which bear the stamp of earnestness, originality, and high ideals of artistic endeavour. Among the ten illustrations is a sketch of Liszt made by Dr. MacDowell and bearing the inscription 'It looks like him though not well drawn.'

Mr. Visetti has written a capital life of Verdi. It is a multum in parvo and one of the best—if not the best—of Messrs. Bell's 'Miniature Series of Musicians.' It should have a large circulation.

Old English Organ Music. Edited by John E. West.

[Novello & Company, Limited.]

In the course of his rummagings among old English organ music Mr. West was fortunate in unearthing three short pieces by that renowned old Bachist, Samuel Wesley. They consist of a Prelude in A minor, a sweetly flowing Air in F, and a charming Gavotte (in the same key) which might have been written by Mozart, because of its melodic and simple character. These pieces, which would make an attractive suite for small orchestra, are sure to find their way into many recital programmes. Dr. Croft, of 'St. Anne's' tune fame, has been drawn upon for a Voluntary in D which comprises a dignified slow introduction (of ten bars) leading to an Allegro fugal movement, wherein will be found opportunities for pedal achievement up to a top F sharp, though the editor has considerably given an alternative note when the compass does not extend so far up the pedal-board. This is a good, solid bit of English music worthy of its composer. Of 'Three 17th century pieces' two have been printed from MSS. in the British Museum: they consist of voluntaries by Orlando Gibbons, Matthew Lock and Dr. John Blow, and those by the two composers last named are for a 'double organ,' i.e., an instrument containing a great organ and a choir organ. Two Voluntaries—in C and A minor—by Dr. Boyce form an interesting number. Printed from MSS. in the British Museum are two pieces by Henry Purcell, the second being 'on the rooth Psalm Tune,' which has a double interest by reason of the great composer's masterly treatment of the familiar church tune: the result is a contribution to English organ music of real value. And then we have an Introduction and Fugue in E flat by Dr. James Nares, the fugue having a sprightly little subject. As in the previous numbers of the Series, the six instalments under notice have been conscientiously edited by Mr. West, who has added phrasing marks, registration, &c., with judgment and reverence.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

Paraphrase on Tchaikovsky's Flower Waltz. By Percy Grainger.

A musical picture book. Twelve short pieces (Op. 102). By Nicolai von Wilm.

[Forsyth Brothers.]

Pianists with a firm touch and adequate technique will find brilliant opportunities for display in Mr. Grainger's adaptation of the Finale of Tchaikovsky's 'Nutcracker' suite. We note that the arranger follows the practice pursued by the American composer Dr. McDowell, and writes all directions for expression and dynamics in English. This has its advantages, but care should be exercised in the choice of words. 'Louder lots bit bit by bit' is certainly plain language, but 'bit by bit' sounds rather horsey. Even to one of unbridled imagination, is not the time-honoured crescendo preferable?

'A musical picture book' is of like character, but Nicolai von Wilm's music is slightly more realistic, and a few of the pieces require a technique a little more advanced. The young pianist who wrestles successfully with 'The dragon-fly' will have the comfortable sensation arising from 'something attempted, something done.'

BRAHMS'S REQUIEM.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—I have been greatly interested in your references to the first performance of this work in England, and am inclined to think I may be able to clear away, to some extent at least, the uncertainty of Sir Charles Stanford, Mr. W. Fitton and Dr. McNaught as to whether it was performed in its entirety at the Royal Academy public rehearsal on April 1, 1873.

I have in my possession the full-score which belonged to John Hullah, with his written name, book-plate and date, 1872; so that my authority is of the best. After a very careful examination I fail to find any mark or sign of either cut, omission, or ending before the proper finish. The score is singularly free from such signs as one generally sees in a used first-performance copy, particularly when it is remembered Hullah was a choral and not an orchestral conductor.

I need only refer to the numbers the performance of which is in question. In No. 4, in E flat, last bar, page 97, the pizz. viola entrance is marked, and also the pizz. violins, page 99. Again, the important horn passage, page 102; the entry in octaves of the sopranos and tenors; afterwards alto and bass, and the first violin above, on page 109.

In No. 6, on page 131, is written in a large hand 'Tromboni,' for their entrance at the fourth bar overleaf, and, considering the complicated orchestration of this grand chorus and the continual breaks in the passages for the wind during the fugue, it seems strange that in the whole of these forty pages there should not be a mark of any kind. For this reason and the unused look of these pages I have some doubt as to whether they have been conducted from.

presumably a note for correction at next rehearsal, and on the following page, bar 1 is marked F, first horn (the second being in E). On page 182, bar 1, on the fourth beat, the sopranos enter alone on E flat, and here the first clarinet has the same note written in and tied into the next bar, evidently to help the voices.

Now, if uncorrected errors exist in those numbers of Hullah's score which were unquestionably performed, it seems to me unlikely that he would have devoted time to the study—as is evident from the above—of what was not going to be performed.

Believe me, faithfully yours,

CHARLES J. HARGITT.

PIANOFORTE PIECES BY HOPKINS.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—The information respecting the three sketches for pianoforte ('Sunday morning,' &c.), for which, on page 673 of your October issue, you thank 'A. E.,' of Wellington, N.Z., is incorrect. The pieces in question were composed by neither Dr. E. J. Hopkins, as originally stated, nor by his cousin, Dr. J. L. Hopkins, of Cambridge, but by the Rev. Edward Larkin Hopkins, formerly Chaplain of King's College, Cambridge. In 1886, when in England, I paid a visit to the latter gentleman, then Rector of Monxton, near Andover, in Hampshire, and on that occasion he presented me with the MS. of these and several other pieces, which he was also kind enough to dedicate to me. The three sketches named in the paragraph I caused to be printed, and the others still remain in my possession in MS.

The matter is not important, but as the question of authorship has been raised, it is as well to be accurate.

Yours faithfully,

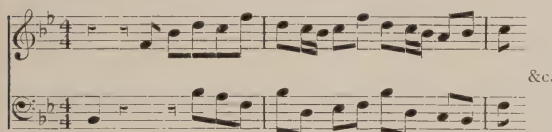

St. Paul's Pro-Cathedral, Wellington, N.Z.

THE HARMONIOUS BLACKSMITH.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—Dr. W. H. Cummings has lately shown that the credit of the 'Harmonious Blacksmith' can scarcely be given to Wagenseil. It would cause no surprise, however, if it should prove to be based on some earlier composition by Handel. Besides other instances of the use of earlier works in these Suites, there appear to be several cases in which suggestions were taken from Handel's earliest opera 'Almira,' 1705. The gigue in the 9th Suite (G minor) seems clearly derived from the air 'Du irrst dich, mein Licht,' and in the 7th Suite (G minor) the overture and sarabande look like imitations of the overture and first sarabande in the opera. It is reasonable therefore to suppose that the 'Harmonious Blacksmith' may have been suggested by the opening symphony of the air of Raymonde, the Moorish king, 'Mi da speranza al core':

It will be noticed that, not counting the introductory note, the first ten notes are identical in the two melodies, and the next three of the air might easily suggest the continuation in the Suite. The final cadences also are almost the same, though this does not mean much. Too much stress is often laid on slight coincidences, but the resemblance here may, in the circumstances, be found interesting.

Yours truly,
P. ROBINSON.

MOZART'S EARLY OPERAS.

With singular appropriateness as celebrating the 150th anniversary of the great master's birth, Mr. Clifford B. Edgar, the honorary treasurer of The Musical Association, selected 'Mozart's early efforts in opera' as a subject of discourse before the members of that learned body on January 16.

Although Mr. Edgar modestly regarded the musical selections as the meat, and his remarks as the bones of his Paper, he gave some very interesting information concerning the conception, plots and first performances of Mozart's juvenile attempts in writing for the stage. He said: 'His remarkable precocity is not less manifest in these early operas than in his other compositions of the same period.' Again: 'What strikes us most in Mozart's mastery of technique is the ease with which he assimilated whatever he could not have possessed intuitively.'

After referring to the various prodigy tours which Mozart and his sister, under their father's auspices, undertook, the lecturer directed attention to 'a work of glorious promise,' the opera-buffa 'La Finta Semplice' written in the Italian style when Mozart was only twelve years old. The intrigues which seem inseparable from operatic ventures prevented the work from being performed at Vienna, nevertheless the music remains to bear witness to the wonderful precocity of this master-musician; as the lecturer said: 'The remarkable talent for musical delineation of the several personages, which is so conspicuous in Mozart's later operas, is manifested in this boyish production.' In 'Bastien and Bastienne'—a sort of parody on Rousseau's 'Le Devin du village'—the overture, or intrada, offers a remarkable example of coincidences in music, in that its subject is almost identical with the principal theme of the opening movement of Beethoven's 3rd ('Eroica') Symphony, written some thirty-five years later.

The three-act opera seria, from Racine, entitled 'Mitridate, Rè di Ponto,' composed at the age of fourteen and performed no fewer than twenty times at Milan, prepared the way for 'Ascanio in Alba.' This 'theatrical serenata'—a festival piece produced in 1771—was written against time and in circumstances of great difficulty. One violinist occupied the room above that in which the masterful Master Mozart worked, and another fiddler the room below. Next door was a singing-master, and opposite lived an oboe-player! But Wolfgang made light of these drawbacks. 'It is capital for composing,' he said; 'it gives one new ideas'! This is the opera ('Ascanio') that led Hasse to predict the composer's future renown. 'La Finta Giardiniera,' or 'The pretended lady-gardener,' composed for the Munich carnival of 1775, made a great advance upon its forerunners in three important respects—characterisation, originality of themes, and constructive skill; moreover its orchestration is truly remarkable, the composer making the happiest use of the wind, the peculiarities of the oboe, bassoon and horns being turned to good account. In 'Zaide' (1780) Mozart used melodrama for the first and only time. 'L'Oca del Cairo' is an unfinished opera having an extravagant and weak libretto. The goose mentioned in the title is an artificial bird, large enough to conceal a man, which is to be employed in gaining a boastful wager. After a reference to 'King Thamos'—which the lecturer admitted did not strictly come within the scope of his paper—Mr. Edgar brought his interesting discourse to a close by stating that these early operas 'rarely fail to exhibit that true balance between beauty of form and beauty of expression so characteristic of Mozart, and the equally important balance preserved between the vocal and instrumental forces.' His concluding words were these: 'Mozart's grand achievement was the blending of Italian melody with German scientific structure, with a result so complete and apparently spontaneous that all sense of nationality is lost, as in the highest art it should be.'

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

SIR CHARLES STANFORD'S NEW SYMPHONY.

The programme of the fourth concert at Queen's Hall on January 18 included Sir Charles Stanford's new Symphony in E flat (Op. 94), written 'in honour of the life-work of a great artist, George Frederick Watts'; and it was performed for the first time under the direction of the composer. According to the analyst the work has no programme, and should be listened to simply as music. The composer, however, mentally worked to Watts' fine piece of sculpture called 'Physical energy,' and to his two pictures, 'Love and Life,' and 'Love and Death'; but so clear is the form of the various movements, so straightforward the developments of the thematic material, that the work may be fully appreciated quite apart from the source or sources whence the composer sought inspiration. There are many modern works in which the form is so absolutely determined by what is known as the 'poetic basis,' that knowledge more or less of the latter is indispensable. In the case of the symphony under notice such knowledge, however, is decidedly interesting. In the opening Allegro the syncopations of the principal theme seem to betoken rugged strength, a salient quality of the great painter's personality, while the phrase for trombones which follows the melodious second theme is naturally associated with Death. The slow movement is based on a flowing theme, the Scherzo is full of rhythmical life, while the Finale—if not perhaps the strongest of the four movements—has many points of interest. Throughout the work the scoring is admirable. At the close of the performance Sir Charles was recalled several times to the platform. Mr. Arthur de Greef played with marked success the solo part of Grieg's romantic pianoforte Concerto in A minor, while the remainder of the programme consisted of Tchaikovsky's symphonic fantasia 'Francesca di Rimini' and Dvóřák's 'In der Natur' overture.

OPÉRA COMIQUE, PARIS.

All who follow the performances at this theatre must bear testimony to the enterprise of the director, M. Carré. Classical works are not neglected, and of these there is a great variety. One of the conditions, however, of the impresario's contract forces him to give every season so many new works by living composers; and recently two have been produced, viz., 'La Coupe enchantée' and 'Les Pêcheurs de Saint-Jean.' The first opera, in one act, is by M. Gabriel Pierné, who studied at the Conservatoire and won the Grand-Prix de Rome in 1882 with his cantata 'Edith.' He has composed orchestral and chamber music, also choral works, of which latter 'La Croisade des Enfants' has been much played in Paris and also in various European cities. For the stage he has already written several operas. The libretto of 'La Coupe enchantée,' a musical comedy in one act, after La Fontaine, is by M. E. Matrat. The subject is quite light, so that there is no need to dwell upon the plot. That the composer in his music has caught the spirit of the piece there can be no question; moreover it is written and scored with considerable skill and with marked restraint. But there is a certain artificiality in the various numbers: they spring from the head rather than from the heart. This however is owing, so it seems, to the text: there is plenty of fun and frolic which, though amusing, is not calculated to inspire a composer. The opera does not 'fetch' the audience: it is merely a spirituel lever de rideau.

'Les Pêcheurs de Saint-Jean,' by M. Charles M. Widor, is a much more pretentious work; it is in four acts, and the poem is by the well-known librettist, M. Henri Cain. The composer, renowned as an organist and an accomplished musician, produced the two-act ballet 'La Korrigane' more than a quarter of a century ago, and with his light, tasty music achieved success. From such a work to a four-act opera it is, however, a far cry. The story of 'Les Pêcheurs' is simple. Jacques, the poor steersman, is in love with Anne-Marie, daughter of his rich master, Jean Pierre. His love is reciprocated, but on discovering this the master, though attached to the faithful Jacques, dismisses him from his service and forbids the girl to see him. But one day while Jean Pierre is at sea a violent storm arises. Signals of distress are seen. Jacques, at Marie's request, goes out in a life-boat and saves Pierre and all the crew; thus he is naturally restored to favour, and the two lovers are at length happy. Now in this story there are dramatic elements, but the material does not bear spinning out into four acts; there are dull moments, and anti-climaxes which are always ineffective. So much for the libretto. But of course the music suffers thereby; what is intended to be dramatic is often merely melodramatic. There is much good, fluent writing, yet nowhere strong inspiration; there comes no thrilling moment which, even if afterwards weakened for reasons above stated, would still make its momentary impression. The work is admirably performed at the Opéra Comique, and the stage effects are particularly good; and thus, but only partially, the weak points of the work are hidden. The rendering of 'La Coupe enchantée' also deserves very high praise.

PARRY'S 'JUDITH' AT TREORCHY.

The Rhondra Musical Festival was held at Treorchy on December 25 and 26, the 'Messiah' being given on Christmas Day. The following afternoon was notable for an exceptionally fine performance of Parry's 'Judith' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' while a miscellaneous programme (including a selection from Mozart's 'Twelfth Mass') was given in the evening. It was expected that Sir Hubert Parry would himself be present to conduct his oratorio, but owing to indisposition the distinguished composer was unable to attend. The choir consisted of the Noddfa Choral Society, and the greatest credit is due to these singers and their excellent conductor, Mr. William Thomas—who has long had a reputation as the organizer of the Royal Welsh Male Choir—for their remarkable interpretation of the choral music throughout the Festival. The work of the choir was indeed superb, the quality and balance of voices, phrasing, enunciation and attack being everything that could be desired. An excellent quartet of vocalists was provided in Madame Siviter, Miss Maud Foreshew, Mr. Anderson Nicol and Mr. Charles Tree.

London Concerts.

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRA.

New Year's Day was greeted with musical honours at the Queen's Hall by an orchestral concert in the afternoon, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood. It cannot be said that the sentiment of hope commonly associated with the dawn of a new year found an echo in the programme which, indeed, was more tragic than joyful in character, for it opened with the 'Entrance of the gods into Walhalla,' from 'Das Rheingold,' and was continued by the 'Trauermarsch' from 'Götterdämmerung,' the overture to 'Tannhäuser' and Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony. Except that the tone of the brass was permitted at times to become strident, the above works were finely interpreted. The second part of the concert began with Bach's aria for strings taken from the Suite in D for two oboes, three trumpets, tympani and strings. The aria, which in the suite is written only for strings, is so often played as a violin solo that it would be satisfactory to hear the work in its entirety. In marked contrast to the foregoing came Beethoven's Rondino in E flat for two oboes, two clarinets, two bassoons and two horns, a delightfully melodious and smoothly-written work composed apparently when the master was about twenty years of age, but not published until after his death. Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' Suite and Tchaikovsky's '1812' overture completed the scheme.

The principal achievement at the succeeding concert (on January 20) was a masterly performance of Tchaikovsky's beautiful Symphony in E minor, re-hearing of which excites deeper esteem. Another pleasing feature was the finished singing of Madame Camilla Landi of the 'Cavatine de Kontchakovna' from Borodine's opera 'Prince Igor,' and a 'Chanson Circassienne' from César Cui's 'Prisonnier de Caucasse.' Eastern musical idiom permeates both these excerpts, but otherwise they have nothing in common, the former being an impassioned love-song set in florid style, and the latter a coquettish ditty in dance rhythm. It may be added that 'Prince Igor' was left unfinished by its composer, but was completed by MM. Glazounoff and Rimsky-Korsakoff, and produced at St. Petersburg in 1890. The remainder of the programme consisted of excerpts from Bizet's 'L'Arlesienne' music and Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture.

Miss Vera Warwick-Evans, a scholar of the Royal College of Music, who gave her first violin recital at Steinway Hall on January 9, made a very favourable impression by the intelligence and firmness of her playing. These qualities were specially in evidence in her interpretation of Beethoven's Sonata in C minor, in which she was associated with Mr. Charlton Keith, and particularly in her rendering of Bach's 'Chaconne,' which the fair violinist played with remarkable artistic intuition and technical brilliancy.

The Misses Constance and Ruth Baxendale, the former a contralto vocalist and the latter a reciter, gave an agreeable evening at Steinway Hall on January 16. Miss Constance Baxendale would profit by further study, but she was very successful in several of her songs, notably in Godard's 'Chanson de Florian' and Bemberg's 'Chant Hindou,' which she sang with great charm. Miss Ruth Baxendale has a musical speaking voice, and she showed dramatic intuition in her recitation of Queen Katherine's speech in 'Henry VIII.' and 'The Bells.'

Miss Leginska showed considerable skill as a pianist at her recital on January 17 at Bechstein Hall. In some works the intentions of the composer were not always realised, but musical perception and good taste prevailed in her readings, and she manifestly pleased her audience.

Miss Edie Reynolds gave distinction to her violin recital on January 18 at Bechstein Hall by giving the first performance in England of Signor D'Ambrosio's Concerto in B minor (Op. 29). No orchestra being provided, a complete estimate of the value of the work cannot be formed; but it may be said that the concerto consists of three movements, severally headed Grandioso, molto moderato e sostenuto, Andante, and Finale. The first two sections suffer from over-development and looseness of construction, but the Andante is built upon an expressive melody, and the work contains many effective passages for the solo instrument. These were brilliantly played by Miss Reynolds, who received sympathetic support from Mr. F. A. Sewell at the pianoforte. A feature of the afternoon was the dramatic delivery by Mr. John Coates of Mr. Reginald Somerville's 'Eastern tale,' which drew forth enthusiastic applause.

The Mozart Society, so ably directed by Mr. J. H. Bonawitz, fully justified its title at the concert on January 20 (given as usual in the Portman Rooms), when it celebrated the 150th anniversary of the birth of the great composer by a programme the main feature of which was the beautiful Symphony in G minor. The choir was heard in choruses from the Masses in F and G, and several vocal solos added to the enjoyment of the interesting occasion. A eulogy on Mozart was delivered by Mr. George W. Pye.

Mr. Frederic Warren presented a judicious selection of songs at his recital on January 22 at Æolian Hall, and used his light but musical tenor voice with vocal skill and artistic intelligence. The amorous warmth of Richard Strauss's 'Heimliche Aufforderung,' the meditative melancholy of Brahms's 'Mondenschein,' and the gaiety of the latter composer's 'Mein Mädel, hat einen Rosenmund,' were duly expressed, and equally effective readings were given of a group of English songs, including a brightly written ditty entitled 'The Fiddler of Dooney,' by Mr. Warren. Pianoforte solos were played with good taste and brilliancy by Mr. Frederick Fairbanks, who claimed to give the first performances in London of three pieces severally entitled 'Danse,' 'Ormond,' and 'Caprice Impromptu,' by Signor Alberto Randegger, jun. Of these the best is the 'Danse,' a light, delicate, fanciful and pretty composition.

The interesting series of concerts of old chamber music given by Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton—to which we made lengthened reference in our last issue—was resumed on January 23, special items of interest being a suite by Couperin in honour of Corelli, Haydn's string Quartet (Op. 76, No. 2) in D minor, and a Rondo in D major for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, by Mozart, announced as the first performance in England.

QUEENSLAND MUSICAL COMPETITION.

The Brisbane Courier of November 14 gives a graphic account of the last great musical Competition annually held in Queensland at Toowoomba, a charming city just about one hundred miles from Brisbane, the capital city of Queensland, Australia. The Austral Society—with a vigorous President in Mr. Vernon Redwood and an equally energetic Secretary in Mr. Murdoch McLeod—owns its own buildings. The main hall will seat between seven and eight thousand people, while the adjoining gardens will hold an almost unlimited number of auditors who could hear with reasonable effect. The crowning event of the week's festival was the great choral competition when, in addition to the Toowoomba Chorus, three choirs, each over 120 strong, travelled long distances by rail to compete. The winning choir came from Gympie, nearly three-hundred miles away. Handel's 'Worthy is the Lamb' and the 'Amen' chorus formed the test-piece. The adjudicator was Mr. Henry John King, who was brought from Victoria, some 1,300 miles away. The adjudicator bestowed most generous praise on two of the contributing choirs. The second on the prize list was the Toowoomba choir, which lost its chance of 'a tie' with Gympie through making an unauthorised swell tone on the final Amen of Handel's great chorus. The audience on each occasion was vast, amounting at times to 9,000 people, who were admitted at prices varying from two to five shillings. With the addition of a suitably large organ, the Austral Hall will be the most complete building in the State. Undoubtedly the Toowoomba Competitions are the largest in the Australian Commonwealth. May increased success attend them!

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

VIENNA, January 16.

The month (January) which brings with it the 150th anniversary of Mozart's birth naturally furnishes opportunity for the performance of a number of the composer's works which, as a rule, are shelved. At the Philharmonic Society Felix Mottl gave the Serenade for four orchestras, and although it was given with all neatness and refinement, the work did not produce the right effect on a concert platform, even though the players were strictly divided into four groups; as open-air music the threefold echo might be justified. This Society has been busy with modern music: Strauss's 'Macbeth' and Bruckner's 4th ('Romantic') Symphony proved brilliant performances. Franz Schalk deputised for Mottl at one of these concerts. The programme included a Brandenburg Concerto by Bach, in which only violins, violoncellos and basses are employed, and the deep, rich tone of these instruments was productive of fine effect. Max Reger's Sinfonietta in A offered a strong contrast; it is full of youthful freshness and impulse, yet at times somewhat overlaid and fanciful; a strong, manly feeling, however, pervades the whole. The composer himself was present, and, like all who have something new to say, he found his work approved by some and censured by others; the former, however, were in a majority.

A delightful orchestral suite 'Cyrano de Bergerac,' by J. B. Förster, has been given by the Concert Society. The hero of this modern play is musically depicted in different situations in the various sections, not objectively, but by genuine art means. It was a good idea on the part of the director, Ferdinand Löwe, to perform in immediate succession the two overtures which Cornelius wrote for his 'Barber of Bagdad.' The first has greater spontaneity, while the second displays greater art, a result which often happens in revisions of this kind.

The programme of the Mozart Festival at the Conservatorium was well selected. It consisted of a small, favourite Serenade, the 'Ave Verum,' for voices and strings, the double Concerto for violin and viola, the D minor pianoforte Concerto, the Quintet for pianoforte and wind, and the Finale of the second act of 'Titus,' well performed by students of the institution. Grillparzer's poem, written for the Mozart Festival at Salzburg fifty years ago, served as prologue. In regard to the opinion therein expressed as to Mozart's position in the musical world, it is now still more forcible: modern art, said Grillparzer, in comparison to that of Mozart, attempts something greater, but only achieves something less.

Some interesting works have been given at the Rosé Chamber Concerts, among which a Serenade for strings by Jacques Dalcroze, and a very characteristic pianoforte Quintet by Vítěslav Novák, a young Czechish composer of such marked ability that he has been named, and not unjustly, Dvořák's direct artistic heir. A new violin Concerto was introduced by Frau Marie Röger-Soldat, our excellent native violinist; the composer is Joseph Labor, the distinguished court organist.

A performance of Mozart's 'Don Giovanni' at the Court Opera has been the subject of much talk and criticism in all artistic circles. Not only had a new text been written by Max Kalbeck, but the staging of the work was quite new. Finally, Mahler had so carefully studied every detail of the music, that the performance are always given to overcrowded houses.

A novelty has recently been successfully launched at the Jubilee Theatre, i.e., 'Barfüssele,' by Richard Henberger. The charming subject is taken from one of Auerbach's most celebrated Village Tales. The music, while pretty and taking, is closely allied to the text, but there are some charming detached instrumental numbers.

On December 26 the Festival Choral Society gave its fiftieth consecutive Christmas performance of Handel's 'Messiah.' The Society has a longer record with Handel's great epic, but there had been occasional breaks of a year or so. For this jubilee performance the principals were Mesdames Agnes Nicholls and Alice Lakin, and Messrs. William Green and Dalton Baker. Their work was well done, and the chorus sang magnificently. Mr. Perkins rendered good service at the organ, and Dr. Sinclair skilfully conducted. The audience was exceptionally large, and tremendously enthusiastic.

Five performances of 'Iolanthe' were given by the Birmingham Amateur Opera Society during the week of the Midland Institute annual conversazione, commencing January 8. Mr. E. W. Priestley conducted, and there was a full professional orchestra.

Our musical season was resumed on January 16 with the fifth Halford concert. The programme comprised Beethoven's 'Pastoral' Symphony, finely played; Liszt's pianoforte Concerto in E flat, in which Miss Gertrude Peppercorn was superb as soloist; an Aubade for small orchestra by Cyril Scott, fanciful, and tastefully scored; a Romance for violin and strings by George Halford, a meritorious composition, the solo part well played by Mr. Schiever; and Tchaikovsky's Overture '1812,' with realistic effects. This fine concert was well attended, and Mr. Halford's conducting was masterly. On January 19, the first of a series of Oratory musical evenings was held in the Ladywood Rooms. The Rev. Richard Bellasis conducted an excellent performance of Mendelssohn's 'Lauda Sion,' given by a small chorus and orchestra, with Mr. William Sewell, the Oratory organist, at the organ. The soloists were Master W. Ward, and Messrs. J. Green, J. Chambers and B. Bradley. In the second part of the programme Miss Elsie Cornish sang some solos, and among the choral pieces was Bishop's glee 'Now by day's retiring lamp,' which, with orchestral accompaniment, produced a very pleasing effect. Other glees of Bishop's might be revived in a similar manner. Opportunity for friendly converse was afforded by the half-hour's interval, when tea and coffee gave a social aspect to the function.

The Ladies' Night of the Bristol Madrigal Society, held on January 11, was most successful, the principal saloon at the Victoria Rooms being filled by an appreciative audience. There were a few changes in the choir, consequent upon the death of Mr. Abraham Thomas, of Gloucester Cathedral, who had sung for the Society upwards of thirty-five years, and the absence through illness of Mr. Samuel Rootham (brother of the conductor), who had an unbroken record of fifty-three years. A special feature in the programme was the insertion of pieces composed by Walter Cecil Macfarren and Samuel Reay, whose productions had been included in the schemes of the Society, these musicians having passed away since the Ladies' Night of 1905. Soon after that event Mr. Macfarren wrote to Mr. D. W. Rootham (the conductor) expressing a desire that his 'Good-night, good rest' might be given, and if it were chosen he would endeavour to be present. Death prevented what would have certainly proved an interesting visit. This piece, which had not before been given by the choir, and the same composer's 'Up! up! ye dames,' were sung by way of an In memoriam. Two examples by Mr. Reay were also given; one, 'Waken, lords and ladies gay,' which had been written specially for the Bristol society, and the other 'The clouds that wrap.' Among the madrigals given on the present occasion was Bateson's 'Down the hill Corinna trips,' which the choir rendered for the first time. Mr. D. W. Rootham, as heretofore, ably directed the concert.

The balance-sheet of the Bristol Musical Festival held in October last shows a net profit of £155 12s., which amount is carried forward to the credit of the next Festival.

MUSIC IN CUMBERLAND.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

The collaboration between the Carlisle Choral Society and the Cumberland Orchestral Society, which began some three years ago, when Mr. Edward G. Mercer was conductor of both these organizations, has since been continued with marked benefit to the cause of music. When Mr. Mercer, owing to ill-health, was obliged to resign the post of acting organist of Carlisle Cathedral in the summer of 1904, Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson was appointed to the position, and at once devoted the whole of his energies to widen the field of work which had been opened out by his predecessor. In addition to undertaking the conductorship of the two societies named, he organized and successfully carried through a choral festival of the city church choirs, held in the Cathedral on November 16, which has given a much needed impetus to the cultivation of church music in the city.

A further development in this direction will be the performance of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion in the Cathedral on April 5 by a special choir drawn from the Choral Society and the city church choirs, this being the first occasion upon which such a musical service will have been held in Carlisle Cathedral.

The Carlisle Choral Society gave its Christmas concert on Boxing-night as usual, the orchestra being composed of twenty-two members of the Cumberland Orchestral Society (who formed the body of the strings), and about thirty professional instrumentalists, chiefly from Manchester. Miss Mabel Manson, Mr. Walter Lawley and Mr. Llewellyn Roberts were the principal vocalists. The first part of the programme consisted of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' and 'The Death of Minnehaha,' and the second part of a miscellaneous selection, concluding with the first performance of a new choral ballad 'Ivry: a song of the Huguenots,' by Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson. The latter, a vigorous piece of choral writing cleverly scored for a full orchestra, was much admired. Mr. Bertram Lewis, the instructor engaged by the Cumberland Orchestral Society, led the orchestra.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At his second chamber concert, on January 18, Mr. Denhof, aided by Mr. Plunket Greene and the London Instrumental Quintet, and with Mr. Scott Jupp as accompanist, provided an ideal programme. Pre-eminent for delicacy and beauty was Mozart's Quintet for pianoforte and wind instruments.

The fourth orchestral concert was devoted to Sir Edward Elgar. To perform 'The Apostles' is a formidable undertaking, and the Choral Union and its able conductor, Mr. F. H. Collinson, are to be heartily praised for their enterprise and the zealous care lavished on the preparation of the work. The band also did its share in the production to the satisfaction of all. The performance took place on December 18, 1905.

The fifth concert, on December 27, brought to a first hearing the F minor Symphony of Richard Strauss. Mr. Frederick Lamond gave a powerful and picturesque reading of Liszt's E flat pianoforte Concerto, ably supported by the orchestra. The features of the concert on January 3 were the brilliant performance of Mozart's 'Jupiter' symphony, and the equally brilliant singing of Miss Agnes Nicholls. M. Colonne conducted the concert of January 8, when the programme included 'Le Rouet d'Omphale' (Saint-Saëns) and Brahms's Symphony in D. At the concert on January 15 an enthusiastic reception was accorded to Lady Hallé, who played the Beethoven Concerto and the Introduction and Capriccio of Saint-Saëns. The symphony was the No. 1, in D, of Dvorák. At the eighth concert (January 22), conducted by Dr. Richter, the band played superbly, and the programme included the Brahms C minor Symphony and Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung.'

Dr. E. Markham Lee delivered a lecture on 'Richard Strauss and his works' at the London Institution on January 11.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the seventh classical concert on December 26, our townsman, Mr. Frederic Lamond, appeared in the dual rôle of solo pianist and composer-conductor, playing with great power Liszt's pianoforte Concerto in E flat, and conducting a first performance here of his own concert overture 'From the Scottish Highlands.' At the same concert Dr. Cowen secured a fine rendering of another novelty in the shape of Strauss's Symphony in F.

The programme on January 2 was framed on popular lines, and included Mozart's Symphony in E flat, the 'Rienzi' and 'Prometheus' overtures, the Largo from Dvorák's 'New World' symphony, and Mendelssohn's 'Hebrides' overture. January has been notable for the appearance of two distinguished visiting-conductors, viz., M. Colonne on the 9th and Dr. Richter on the 23rd. With the exception of three numbers M. Colonne's programme was confined to the works of his compatriots, Saint-Saëns, Berlioz and Bruneau, the last-named composer being represented by an initial performance of the prelude from 'Messidor.' Dr. Richter selected a programme of wide range, which embraced Strauss's 'Tod und Verklärung,' Brahms's Symphony in C minor, the Prelude and Finale to 'Tristan and Isolde,' and Beethoven's overture 'Leonora' No. 3. Needless to say the Scottish Orchestra put forth their best efforts on both occasions.

In pursuance of a plan whereby all Beethoven's symphonies are being given in regular order at the Saturday Popular Concerts, Nos. 5 and 6 were performed on January 13 and 20 respectively. As an interpreter of Beethoven's music Dr. Cowen is undoubtedly a specialist, and in the case of the C minor Symphony he secured one of the finest renderings ever heard here. On January 6 an Andante and Rondo for pianoforte and small orchestra by Mozart was performed for the first time in Britain. In the solo part Dr. Cowen revealed his gifts as a pianist, and the novelty was received with unmistakable favour.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The seventh Philharmonic Concert took place on January 9, when M. Victor Maurel sang and Miss Fanny Davies was the solo pianist. The programme included Saint-Saëns's 'Le Rouet d'Omphale' and Stanford's Irish Dances. Miss Davies won a conspicuous triumph by her performance of Saint-Saëns's second pianoforte Concerto.

The Symphony Orchestra's concert on January 18 was chiefly noticeable for a finely-rendered performance of Mozart's 'Jupiter' Symphony, and for Mr. Alfred Ross's interpretation of Saint-Saëns's violin Concerto No. 3 (Op. 31), in B minor. Miss Cecilia Owen was the vocalist.

At the third Ladies' Concert of the Orchestral Society, which occurred on January 20, the programme included the 'Freischütz' overture, Schubert's 'Unfinished' Symphony and Dvorák's symphonic poem 'Heldenlied' (first time in England), and the overture to 'Tannhäuser.' Mr. Granville Bantock conducted.

A strong plea for Mozartian revival was incidental to Mr. J. Butler Forlay's lecture on 'Mozart and his Music,' given on January 6 at the Marsh Lane Assembly Rooms.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Schiller-Anstalt reopened the second half of the season on January 6, conferring a high compliment upon the Hanley Caudon Vocal Society, and its conductor, Mr. John James, by giving place in the programme for twelve of the Society's repertory pieces in part-song and chorus. The singing by the choir of some fifty voices quite justified the compliment, which, so far as we remember, only one other choir has secured—the Blackpool Madrigal Society. Mr. Webster Millar (tenor), Mr. Michael Zacharewitsch (violin), and Mr. Isidor Cohn (pianoforte), were content for the evening to occupy retiring places on the programme.

The Hallé Concerts, at their resumption on January 11, broke comparatively new ground with an operatic programme—the 'Paris Venusberg' Music; five scenes for principals and orchestra from Weber's 'Euryanthe'; an air, remarkably well sung by Miss Agnes Nicholls, from 'Il Seraglio'; the 'Forging' scene from 'Siegfried'; and the Chorus of Vassals from 'Lohengrin.' The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. John Harrison, Mr. Francis Harford and Mr. William Wild. The scenes from Weber's opera proved a most successful experiment. Not quite so the 'Siegfried' scene. Mr. William Wild and Mr. John Harrison were stifled in it by the orchestra. The concert of January 18 brought the warm welcome to Lady Hallé which Manchester loves annually to bestow upon her. She played with astonishing vigour and grace combined the Beethoven Concerto and Max Bruch's 'Romanza.' The band positively surpassed itself in the playing of one of the worthiest of Liszt's symphonic poems, 'Les Préludes,' and Brahms's Symphony in D. The latter is one of Dr. Richter's many godchildren, as under his conductorship it was first performed at Vienna on December 30, 1877.

The series of meetings of the Gentlemen's Concerts was continued on January 15, Dr. Richter, of course, conducting. The most prominent item in the light programme was Beethoven's 1st Symphony. Elgar's 'Sérénade Mauresque' and an unpretentious little orchestral piece entitled 'Scherzo Chromatique,' written by Mr. Mauritz Speelman, a member of the Hallé Orchestra, were also in the programme. The latter shows, as some other musical trifles written in good taste by Mr. Speelman have shown, that the composer possesses a clear gift of musical speech, bearing on it the flavour of some musical feeling. Miss Esther Palliser, whom we have not heard in Manchester for some years, was the vocalist.

Mr. Kreisler gave a violin recital here on January 22, his programme relieved only by songs by Miss Dorothy Wiley and the capable accompanying of Mr. Haddon Squire.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There is little to be told of music in Yorkshire for the past four weeks, whilst the close of the year was occupied chiefly with the customary 'Messiah' concerts. The greater part of January has been taken up with electioneering and this, as we know from the classic case of Eatanswill, does not exactly promote harmony. This state of things enables me to correct an oversight in my last notice, in which I neglected to mention a most interesting Brahms concert, given on December 18 by Mr. Albert Jowett, who directed a small choir in some delightful part-songs, among which were some of those with accompaniment for horns and harp. A number of songs were sung by Miss Emilie Green, Mr. Collett and Mr. Edmund Armitage, while the bonne bouche of the concert was the horn trio, most ably played by Miss Gertrude Wortley (pianoforte), Mr. E. Elliott (violin) and Mr. Paersch (horn). On December 23, Mr. Edward German visited Leeds to conduct one of the concerts of the Municipal orchestra. The orchestral performances were excellent, full of the spirit with which he can so well inspire an orchestra, and in point of neatness and finish quite admirable. The vocalist was Miss Mary Peddle, a young contralto who made a most favourable impression, and should make a name for herself, since she has not only a remarkably even and beautiful voice, but sings from memory songs of many kinds in a way that argues exceptional intelligence. Another Municipal concert, on January 6, was concerned chiefly with choral music, the Armley Choral Society, under Mr. Pickard, singing with much freshness and good taste, while Miss Alice Simpkin as violinist and Mr. Herbert Johnson as pianist played instrumental solos in thoroughly artistic style. On January 20, the concert took the form of an official reception by Mayor and Corporation of the choir which has recently visited Paris. With the assistance of the Municipal orchestra, several of the pieces given in Paris were repeated under the direction of Mr. Fricker, the chorus-master, and abundant proof was given that the enthusiasm of the Parisians was well founded, for the singing was admirable. There was the usual congratulatory speech-making during the interval. On January 16, at one of the Leeds Musical Evenings, Mr. Willibald Richter appeared as soloist in Beethoven's great E flat pianoforte Concerto. He played in brilliant and musicianly style, and was ably accompanied by Mr. Edgar Haddock's Leeds Orchestra, which one hears with regret is likely to be disbanded. It is to be feared that there is no room for two local orchestras at Leeds, but this one has done well enough, from an artistic point of view, to make one regret its dissolution.

The Bradford Subscription Concerts were resumed on January 19, when Dr. Richter conducted a fine programme of orchestral music, including Schumann's Symphony in B flat, Liszt's 'Les Préludes,' and Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings, of which a most powerful, full-blooded, and convincing reading was given by Dr. Richter. Mlle. Antonia Dolores was the vocalist. The Ripon Choral Society, of which Mr. C. H. Moody is the energetic conductor, gave on January 18 an interesting programme in the Victoria Hall, which included two choral works, Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' and Blair's 'Trafalgar.' The singing was fresh and intelligent, and Miss Emily Waddington and Mr. F. W. Godley were efficient soloists.

On January 4, Mrs. Henry J. Wood appeared at one of the Malton Subscription Concerts, and sang a long and exacting series of songs in brilliant style. A feature of the programme was Brahms's clarinet Sonata in F minor (Op. 120, No. 1), which was played by a couple of amateurs, the Rev. H. C. de Brisy and Miss C. A. Bigge, in a style which required absolutely no apology whatever on the score of amateurship, but was both brilliant in execution and artistic in feeling.

Foreign Notes.

BERLIN.

The last concert of the Royal Orchestra, under Felix Weingartner—previous to the great conductor's departure for a two months' tour in America—was devoted to Beethoven, and included the 8th Symphony, the C minor pianoforte Concerto, the Choral Fantasia (soloist, Bernhard Stavenhagen), and the stupendous B flat Fugue (Op. 133)—the last named played by all the strings in a most brilliant manner.—At the 'New Concerts,' conducted at the Philharmonie by Herr Oskar Fried, a new work by that gifted musician, entitled 'Verklärte Nacht,' for contralto and tenor soli and orchestra was produced, and in spite of the somewhat 'risky' text (by the distinguished modern German poet R. Dehmel), was received with great favour.—The Singakademie, under Prof. Georg Schumann, gave its twenty-third annual performance of Bach's Christmas Oratorio on December 22, before a crowded audience. As usual, the concert-room was decorated with enormous and brilliantly illuminated Christmas trees.—The programme of Eugen d'Albert's pianoforte recital on January 5 consisted of four sonatas, viz.: Beethoven's 'Waldstein,' Brahms's in F minor (Op. 5), Liszt's in B minor, and Weber's in A flat (Op. 39)—a colossal task which the great artist triumphantly surmounted.—Young Mischa Elman created a veritable sensation at his third concert by his astonishing performances of Glazounov's and Beethoven's violin concertos.—A concert of more than average interest was that given by Herr George A. Walter (tenor) and Fräulein Elsa Haas (pianist), the programme being devoted exclusively to compositions by members of the great Bach family, viz., the great 'J. S. B.' himself, and his four gifted sons, Friedemann, Philipp Emanuel, Johann Christoph Friedrich and Johann Christian (the 'London' Bach). Of the various pieces performed, a delightfully simple yet most artistic song by Friedemann Bach, 'Kein Halmlein wächst auf Erden,' created astonishment and delight, and was enthusiastically re-demanded.

BONN.

In the little garden at the back of the Beethoven Haus a more than life-size bronze bust of the master, by N. Aronson, a Russian pupil of Rodin, has been unveiled.—The local Männergesangverein produced with much success a new ballad for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, 'Der Troubadour,' by Prof. Fritz Volbach, of Mainz.

BRUNSWICK.

To celebrate the 150th anniversary of Mozart's birth, the Court Theatre has arranged for a cycle of the master's operas. The performances are announced to commence on January 27 with 'Die Zauberflöte,' conducted by Hofkapellmeister Riedel.

COLOGNE.

A new symphonie fantasia entitled 'Die Wächterweise' (The watchman's song), by Paul Juon, was produced at the fifth Gürzenich concert under Fritz Steinbach. The work is based on Danish folk-songs.—The two-hundredth local performance of 'Lohengrin' was given on December 21. The opera was first heard in Cologne, without any great success, on June 11, 1855, but after twelve performances it disappeared for ten years from the repertoire of the municipal theatre.

DRESDEN.

The local Sängerbund, under Herr P. Büttner, lately produced a symphony with choral Finale entitled 'King Lear,' exactly thirty-seven years after its completion! Its composer is Herr Heinrich Schulz-Beuthen, and the work which has had to wait so long for its first appearance is his sixth symphony.

Richard Strauss's opera 'Salome' is proving an undoubted success, and has already been accepted for performance by the theatres of Cologne, Leipzig, Frankfurt on the Main, Nürnberg, Breslau, Wiesbaden and Prague.

GÜRLITZ.

A new concert hall, designed to accommodate an audience of 2,000 persons, besides an orchestra of 120 instrumentalists and a chorus of 800 singers, is to be erected at a cost of 800,000 marks, chiefly in order to provide a suitable modern building in which to hold the Silesian musical festivals, which have developed in a remarkable way during recent years.

KIEL.

The programme of this year's Schleswig-Holstein musical Festival includes Wolf-Ferrari's 'La vita nuova,' a Bach cantata, selections from 'Parsifal,' Bruckner's 9th Symphony, Brahms's 'Liebeslieder' waltzes, a Beethoven overture, and a new work by Felix Woyrsch.

LEIPZIG.

At the sixth Philharmonic concert of the Winderstein orchestra a new symphonic fantasia 'Resurrection and Last Judgment,' by a young Russian composer, Gerhard von Keussler, and a violoncello Concerto (Op. 61) by Emanuel Moór, played by Marguerite Caponsacchi, were produced with success.

MAINZ.

A scenic representation of Liszt's best known oratorio 'St. Elizabeth' was given at the municipal theatre on Christmas Day, under Emil Steinbach, and very warmly received.

MONTE CARLO.

During the forthcoming season a new opera by the veteran composer M. Camille Saint-Saëns, entitled 'L'Ancêtre,' will be produced. A little-known work by Bizet, 'Don Procopio,' is also announced, in addition to such rarely-heard operas as Rubinstein's 'Demon,' Boito's 'Mefistofele,' Massenet's 'Le roi de Lahore' and Verdi's 'Don Carlos.'

MÜNSTER (WESTPHALIA).

According to the local press the MS. of an capella Mass by Johannes Brahms has been found among the papers of the late J. O. Grimm. The work is supposed to belong to the master's Detmold period, during which he wrote a considerable number of choral pieces for the choir which he conducted at that place. If the report is true, as all lovers of Brahms hope it will be, the Mass will doubtless appear in print before very long.

NANCY.

Mr. Isidore de Lara's opera 'Messalina' has just been performed here with great acceptance. The work was splendidly mounted, and Madame Croizat as the disreputable 'heroine' was excellent.

PRAGUE.

'Aschenbrödel' (Cinderella), a new fairy-tale opera in three acts by Dr. Richard Blatka and Leo Blech, was produced at the enterprising new German theatre on December 26, and received with frantic applause. Herr Blech, conductor at the theatre, is known as a composer of exceptional talent.

REGENSBURG (RATISBON).

Generalmusikdirektor Felix Mottl was invited to conduct a Mozart Festival on January 19, 20 and 21, at the municipal theatre. Performances of 'Die Zauberflöte,' by artists of the Munich Court Opera, 'Don Giovanni,' by members of the Vienna Court Opera, and 'Figaro,' by some of the best singers from the Dresden Court Opera, were to constitute the programme. Regensburg is the birthplace of Schikaneder, the librettist of 'Die Zauberflöte.'

RIGA.

'Lucullus' is the title of a new 'burlesque' opera by Herr Erik Meyer-Helmund, produced at the municipal theatre with great success. Revolution-making does not seem to interfere with artistic enterprise in Riga!

ST. PETERSBURG.

The Glinka Prize for composers has been distributed as follows: Mr. A. S. Arensky receives 300 roubles for the introduction to his opera 'Nala and Damajanti'; 300 roubles go to Mr. J. J. Wihtol for his Variations on a folk-song; 500 roubles to Mr. R. M. Glière for a sextet; 400 roubles to Mr. N. A. Sokolov for two female-voice trios; 500 roubles to Mr. Serge Tanaiëw for the overture to his opera 'Orestie,' and 1,000 roubles to Mr. A. N. Scriabine for his 2nd Symphony. The jury consisted of Messrs. Rimsky-Korsakov, Glazounov, and Liadov.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music—Hine Prize, Composition, to Myra Hess (London); Sain-ton-Dolby Prize, Sopranos, to Clara Smith (Stratford-on-Avon); Bonamy Dobree Prize, Violoncello-playing, to Kenneth Park (Newcastle-on-Tyne); Rutson Memorial Prizes, Contraltos, to Gwladys Roberts (Llanely), Basses, to David Brazell (Llanely); Potter Exhibition, Pianoforte-playing, to Lawrence Taylor (Barbados, W.I.); Westmorland Scholarship, Singing, Aileen Hodgson (Pietermaritzburg, S.A.).

The Gloucester Co-operative Choir, which won the fifty-guinea Novello Trophy at the Crystal Palace Competitions, gave a most successful concert at the Shire Hall, Gloucester, on January 11, when Mr. W. H. Morgan, the able conductor, received well-earned congratulations. Having been won three times in succession by the Gloucester choir, the trophy becomes their possession.

The Stratford Musical Festival (Competitions) is announced to be held from March 28 to April 2, excluding the first day of the latter month. As heretofore, the classes offer every variety of vocal and instrumental testings, and Mr. John Graham, 70, Dacre Road, Upton Manor, retains his accustomed place as a genial and efficient secretary.

The South London Musical Festival will be held at the Royal Victoria Hall, Waterloo Bridge Road, on March 29. The prospectus gives particulars of public competitions in various subjects for amateurs. Mr. T. Lester Jones, 49, Terrace Road, Upton Manor, E., is the Honorary Secretary and Treasurer.

A long programme of the music performed at the annual students' concert (on December 13) at the University of Melbourne Conservatorium of Music, furnishes evidence of the kind of artistic and practical work that is being done under the guidance of Professor Franklin Peterson.

Mr. Paul England has been giving both song and pianoforte recitals—the latter of music previous to Bach—also lectures, at Los Angeles, with much acceptance: he expects to return to London in April.

A new Musical Society entitled 'The West London Choral and Orchestral Society' has been formed, the practices being held at the Fulham Town Hall, under the conductorship of Mr. Gatty Sellars.

The Society of Arts has issued its lists of music for the Practical Examination in Music. The examiners are Dr. Ernest Walker and Mr. Burnham Horner.

Sir Edward Elgar's 'Apostles' is announced to be performed in Berlin on February 23 by the Singakademie, under the direction of Herr Schumann.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

ABBOTS LANGLEY.—The Woodside Choral Society gave a good performance on January 8 of Gaul's cantata 'Joan of Arc' in the beautiful Recreation Hall of the Leavesden Asylum. The solo vocalists were Miss Irene Moncrieff, Mr. James Parish, Mr. E. J. Saltwell, and Mr. E. H. Slade. The chorus parts were well sustained throughout, and great credit is due to the conductor, the Rev. E. Athelstan Clark. On the following evening the work was repeated for the inmates of the Asylum.

BATH.—Miss Lilian Holbrook made her final appearance, on January 4, at the Pump Room orchestral concerts, where she has been accompanist for five years. Miss Holbrook appeared at both afternoon and evening concerts as solo pianist, playing Liszt's Concerto in E flat and 'Humoreske' by Dvorák on both occasions with considerable success.

BENFIELDSDALE (DURHAM).—Sullivan's Festival Te Deum was given in commemoration of the King's accession by the choir (thirty-six voices) of St. Cuthbert's church on January 21. Mr. A. Swordy, the choirmaster, conducted and Mr. H. W. Brown presided at the organ.

GRAHAMSTOWN.—The second concert of the Grahamstown Orchestral Society took place in the Town Hall on November 29, and judging by its success and the appreciation of the audience the Society may now be considered to be firmly established. The programme included Mendelssohn's 'Cornelius' and 'Wedding' Marches, Haydn's Symphony in D, 'Novellette,' Coleridge-Taylor, and one of Handel's Bourrées. Mr. Bernard Streatfield was the vocalist, and solos were contributed by Mrs. W. Deane (pianoforte) and Herr Israel (violin). Mr. W. Deane who conducted deserves every encouragement in his efforts for the cause of good music in this locality.

HOVE.—The Brighton and Hove Symphony Orchestra gave its first concert in the Town Hall, Hove, on January 9, an interesting programme including Beethoven's Symphony in C minor, Mozart's Overture 'Die Zauberflöte,' and the 'Menuet' and 'Marche Hongroise' from Berlioz's 'Faust.' The performance of these works under the tactful direction of Mr. Edward Stephenson was excellent. Miss Agnes Nicholls was the vocalist.

LEICESTER.—The Vocal Society recently gave a most creditable performance of 'The Death of Minnehaha' (Coleridge-Taylor). Miss Honor Bright and Mr. Norman Ridley were the solo vocalists and Mr. Gatty Sellars conducted. Violin solos were contributed by M. Zacharewitsch.

MORETONHAMSTEAD.—The choral union organized by Miss Esther West, shortly after her appointment as organist of the Parish Church, gave a performance of Gaul's 'Ruth' in Smethurst Hall on January 4. The choir sang efficiently, and gave evidence of careful training by Miss West, who will no doubt be encouraged by the satisfactory results which were obtained.

STOURBRIDGE.—On New Year's Day the Concert Society gave its ninety-fourth concert. The work performed was Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from Hiawatha.' The performance was excellent in all respects. The choir sang with great expression and intelligence, and the band did full justice to the graphic and picturesque orchestration. The principal vocalists were Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. Ripley-Evans and Mr. Charles Tree. Mr. Halford conducted with much skill and discretion. In the interval the choir and orchestra made a presentation to their able conductor of a fine Zeiss field-glass.

SWANSEA.—Elgar's 'King Olaf' was performed by the Choral Society in the Albert Hall on January 16, for the first time in this locality—indeed it is stated to be the first performance of any of the distinguished composer's works in Swansea, and the occasion was consequently an event of some importance. The choir, trained by Mr. J. D. Thomas, contributed materially to the success of the performance, and the orchestra gave an excellent interpretation of the accompaniments. The solo parts were in the capable hands of Miss Perceval Allen, Mr. Evan Williams, and Mr. Meurig James. The cantata, which was warmly appreciated, was preceded by a miscellaneous selection.

UNBRIDGE.—The Unbridge and Hillingdon Choral and Orchestral Society gave its first concert of the season on January 10, under the conductorship of Mr. Louis Hamand. 'The Revenge' occupied the first part of the programme, and an excellent performance was secured, the chorus and orchestra numbering over 100. In the second part of the programme the orchestra gave a good account of themselves in German's 'Nell Gwyn' dances and Elgar's 'Pomp and Circumstance' march, besides supplying the accompaniments to Max Bruch's 'Kol Nidrei,' admirably played by Mr. Charles Warwick-Evans, and one of Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea,' for bass solo (Major B. C. Green), male chorus and orchestra. The choir also sang part-songs by Parry, Stanford, Elgar and Hatton.

VENTNOR.—The programme of the Musical Society's concert on January 17 at the Town Hall included Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Mozart's Twelfth Mass, preceded by Wesley's anthem 'The Wilderness.' The choir and orchestra numbered 100, and the solo vocalists were Miss Alice Baxter, Madame Kate Munns, Mr. Alexander Webster and Mr. Daniel Richards. Mr. Evan Jones conducted.

Answers to Correspondents.

C. H. H.—Michael Este's 'Seventh Set of Bookes,' &c., was published (quarto) in 1638, and dedicated 'To the truly noble lover of learning and patron of arts, Sir Christopher Hatton.' The title-page reads:

The Seventh Set of Bookes, Wherein are Duos for two Base Viols, so composed, though there be but two parts in the eye, yet there is often three or foure in the eare. Also Fancies of 3 parts for two treble Viols and a Base Violl: so made as they must be plaid and not sung. Lastly Ayerie Fancies of 4 Parts that may be as well sung as plaid. Lately set out by Michael Este. The 'Fancies of 4 Parts' are entitled:

Name right your notes.	Not over long.
Sing this as that.	Somewhat short.
Some alteration.	Softly at last.
A re the first.	Play not too fast.
A re the second.	The last but one.
A re the third.	This and no more.

G. G. (a) The Rev. William Felton (1713-1769) was a vicar-choral of Hereford Cathedral in 1741, custos of the vicars-choral, and chaplain to the Princess Dowager of Wales (Augusta of Saxe-Gotha). There seems to be no record of any sermons preached by this divine, but in addition to writing for the harpsichord and organ, on which he was a skilled performer, he is said to have composed the glee 'Fill, fill the glass,' and to have acted as steward at the Three Choirs Festival, Hereford, in 1744, and Gloucester in 1745. He died December 6, 1769, and was buried at Hereford Cathedral. Mr. Felton composed a single chant which is found in most collections. For an amusing account of Handel's refusal to subscribe to the reverend gentleman's organ concertos see p. 106 of our present issue. (b) Yes, there are solo and duet pianoforte arrangements of Tchaikovsky's 'Capriccio Italien.'

SHARP-PITCH.—The high pitch—formerly called the Philharmonic pitch—was due to Costa in seeking after brilliancy, and remained in vogue from 1846 to 1895. In 1896 the Philharmonic Society adopted the Diapason Normal, which, however, Messrs. Novello, as far back as 1869, used at their Oratorio Concerts conducted by the late Sir Joseph Barnby. British military bands unfortunately still stick to the high pitch which in equal temperament agrees with  $a^1 452.4$  and  $c^2 538$  double vibrations, at a temperature of 60° Fahrenheit.

A. M. T.—There are biographies of Liszt (in German) by L. Ramann (Leipzig, 1880-1894), E. Reuss (Dresden, 1898), and R. Louis (Berlin, 1899). The first-named has been translated into English.

CANTOR.—We do not know of any book which gives the names of former choristers of St. Paul's, and it is quite possible that even the authorities may not have a record of the boys who have been in the choir. Write to the Headmaster of St. Paul's Cathedral Choir School, Carter Lane, E.C. 'The organists of St. Paul's,' by Mr. John S. Bumpus, is out of print, but we understand the author intends to issue a new edition of that useful work.

J. L.—Hipkins, in his 'History of the pianoforte' primer (Novello), gives the following information in regard to the 'touch-weight' of pianoforte keys. 'A trial of the weight required to produce the faintest pianissimo in one of Broadwood's concert grand pianos with repetition action, gives approximately for:

Lowest A	Middle C	Highest C
$3\frac{1}{2}$ oz.	$2\frac{1}{2}$ oz.	2 oz.

J. B. M.—Accompanying is an art that cannot be learned from books. Experience, combined with musicianship, is the best teacher. You should attend any concerts within your reach and pick up all you can by observation, and, in addition, take a few lessons from a capable pianist who has made accompanying a specialty.

ORGANIST.—(1) If you have a good three-manual organ and a competent player it will perhaps be advisable to restrict your orchestral accompaniment to players on stringed instruments. (2) There are two methods of getting your compositions published: either by inducing a music publisher to purchase them, or to issue them at your own expense.

M. C. Y.—(1) The 'silver piano' which formed one of the fair bride's presents was doubtless a model instrument, and not a full-sized grand. (2) You should make inquiries of the organists of the churches in your neighbourhood as to the conditions upon which you could obtain practice on the organs in those sanctuaries.

W. T.—The 'Master Musicians Series,' published by Messrs. Dent & Co., is issued in uniform binding, each volume—of which eleven have been published—is devoted to the life of one composer. Good engravings of the old masters are only to be obtained through a second-hand print-seller.

CONTRALTO.—For contralto songs published with orchestral accompaniments see 'Rock of ages' (in E), by T. Adams; 'Slumber song,' by J. S. Bach; 'The soul's expression,' four sonnets, by S. Coleridge-Taylor; and 'There is a green hill far away' (in D), by Gounod.

G. C. J.—For books on the training of boys' voices see Sir George Martin's primer 'The art of training boys' voices' (Novello); 'The boy's voice,' by J. S. Curwen (Curwen); and 'A treatise on a practical method of training choristers,' by J. Varley Roberts (Clarendon Press).

L. R. A. M.—You will find full and trustworthy information on the proper interpretation of ornaments in pianoforte music in Dannreuther's 'Musical Ornamentation' primers and Franklin Taylor's 'Technique and expression in pianoforte playing.'

AMATEUR VIOLINIST.—There is no bar in the second violin part of Schubert's B minor symphony (Allegro moderato movement) corresponding to that which you send. Your quotation is probably from an arrangement.

M. J.—Yes, it is possible 'to play a church service on a two-manual and pedal pipe organ without using the pedals, but we doubt the 'efficiency' resulting from such a limitation of the instrument's capabilities.

WIMBORNE.—There are two forms of the 'Tannhäuser' overture: (1) that which is complete in itself, and (2) a version subsequently written by Wagner which leads without break into the 1st Act of the opera.

DUMKA.—A biographical sketch of Sir William Sterndale Bennett appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, June and August, 1903.

R. W.—Thanks for your suggestion. 'Dotted Crotchet' has his eye on the two cathedrals you name.

A. D.—We cannot give the names of scholastic agencies.

A. R. C. O. (TRURO).—See answer to L. R. A. M.

T. L.—Yes, the metronomic rates to Beethoven's pianoforte sonatas vary in the different editions.

FIRST STEPS

AT THE

PIANOFORTE

BY

FRANCESCO BERGER.

(No. 45. Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series.)

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
 In Paper Boards, Three Shillings.

The Daily Telegraph, March 27, says:—"Mr. Francesco Berger has made a useful and therefore valuable contribution to Messrs. Novello's 'Music Primers and Educational Series' in the shape of a manual entitled 'First Steps at the Pianoforte.' Every point is conveyed in the simplest fashion, and every step taken with due care and deliberation, so as to be sure of the ground gained before going another pace ahead. Moreover, typographical devices are employed to force essential facts upon the child's attention. I think this is, on the whole, a very admirable book, calculated to help not only the pupil, but the teacher also."

The Sunday Times, October 13, says:—"It is more practical, more systematic, more simple for the beginner than any I have yet seen. The exercises and pieces specially prepared are excellent, and the explanation which accompanies every example is written in language that the youngest student may comprehend without further assistance from the teacher."

The Musical Times, September, says:—"Mr. Berger's book is distinctly the best introduction to the pianoforte at present extant."

J. H. MAUNDER.

Score, paper cover, One Shilling and Sixpence ; Paper boards,
Two Shillings.
Tonic Sol-fa, 9d. Words only, 10s. per 100.
String Parts, 11s. Wind Parts and Full Score MS.

STANDARD (London), August 1, 1904.

Mr. Maunder has long since proved his ability to write melodiously without becoming secular, and to meet the requirements of average choirs and congregations while preserving the dignity and solemnity of English Church Music. His Cantata is a happy example of his talents in these respects, and the work may be warmly recommended to the clergy and choirmasters.

DAILY TELEGRAPH (London), April 2, 1904.

The Cantata is of devotional character. Not a few of the composer's pages are effective, and show a skilful hand.

CHURCH TIMES, March 26, 1904.

The work is decidedly attractive, and should be a welcome addition to the growing stores of Passion Music. The writing is melodious, and there is considerable vigour in the chorus work.

MUSICAL OPINION, June 1, 1904.

The work is remarkably clear and effective. A feature of the Cantata is the choral writing, throughout plain and straightforward yet invariably impressive and beautiful. The solo portions reveal many points of melodic beauty and musicianly interest, and are quite in keeping with the general high tone and character of the Cantata. One does not need to be a prophet to foretell the ultimate popularity of "Olivet to Calvary" in Church singing circles.

MUSICAL NEWS, April 2, 1904.

The music which Mr. Maunder has written is marked by those qualities of appropriate expression, melodiousness, and absence of great difficulty which have made his compositions in the past so acceptable, and we are sure that this Cantata will prove very welcome. We cordially recommend it to the notice of choirmasters.

MUSICAL TIMES, March 1, 1904.

The composer has approached the subject with a full sense of responsibility and in a devotional spirit. The music is charged with that melodious attribute with which Mr. Maunder's name is favourably associated, and is free from interpretative difficulty. The Cantata is one that may be welcomed, not only for its appropriateness to the Lenten Season, but upon its own merits.

BIRMINGHAM POST, April 1, 1904.

The musical treatment is reverent, and the Cantata should be impressive.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH, March 28, 1904.

The music is impressive throughout, and the work forms a notable addition to its class.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL, March 9, 1904.

A glance at the vocal score reveals a style of composition calculated to please, the various sections betraying facile and scholarly workmanship. The soli are lyrical and effective, and the Cantata throughout is written in a popular vein.

THE LADY, April 21, 1904.

Organists and choirmasters will find the Cantata excellent for uniting the choir and congregation in a common interest. . . . "Olivet to Calvary" is an excellent work for a special service of song.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR

SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK.

(OP. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY

FRED. J. W. CROWE

(Organist of Chichester Cathedral).

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

NOTE.

This English version of Dvořák's "Stabat Mater" brings the beauties of the work within the reach of those who, for various reasons, prefer not to use the original Latin. The adaptation avoids the use of any passages of a controversial nature, thus making it available for use in any English place of worship; and, whilst preserving as far as possible the original rhythm, no pains have been spared to make this English version both vocal and practical.

Chichester, 1904.

F. J. W. C.

The accompaniment, while not professing to be purely an organ arrangement (which would necessitate the use of three staves), will, it is hoped, be found useful at the organ and at the same time easily playable on the piano at rehearsals.

Very few suggestions as to stops have been made, but the plain indication of the pedal part throughout the work and of the instrumentation (marked in brackets) will be a useful guide to the organist in his interpretation of this complex score.

H. E. B.

If there is one choral work of the past twenty years that can claim to have been universally and thoroughly accepted as a masterpiece by all who have any right to express an opinion, it is this most beautiful composition. Its position among the masterpieces of music is too assured to need any defence, and it may suffice to recall the fact that since it made the composer's reputation in this country, it has been heard at the Cathedral Festivals of Worcester, Hereford, Gloucester, Chester and Lincoln, at the Birmingham, Norwich, Leeds, Sheffield, and Hovingham Festivals, and, of course, in countless churches and concert-rooms, one memorable occasion being in 1891, when the composer conducted it at Cambridge, on the day when he received an honorary degree from the University. . . . The version, which is by the organist of Chichester Cathedral, Dr. Crowe, is at least a translation of the original, and not an irrelevant and absurd concoction like the unsectarian libretto, entitled "Tribulation," which one William Ball provided for Rossini's "Stabat Mater."—Yorkshire Post.

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF

LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

Price, paper cover, 2S. 6D.; paper boards, 3S.; scarlet cloth, 4S.

Words only, 7S. 6D. per 100.

The loan of Parts for a limited Orchestra—namely, Strings, 2 Flutes, 2 Clarinets, 2 Cornets, Bass Trombone or Euphonium, and Kettledrums, may be had on application to the COMPOSER, Gillott Lodge, Edgbaston.

BRECONSHIRE, SOUTH WALES.

GENTLEMEN,

December 30, 1905.

The Gramophone of to-day I find is such an improved instrument for recording the human voice to the older machines with which so many of us are familiar, that my hitherto objection to allow the thousands who cannot hear me sing personally to listen to the reproduction of my voice through the instrumentality of your Gramophone is now quite removed, and the records which you have lately made for me I think are natural reproductions of my voice.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

NOVELLO'S CHORISTER SERIES OF CHURCH MUSIC.

There are many Churches and some Colleges and Schools where a daily or occasional service is sung by boys only. The "Chorister Series" furnishes the necessary music for such occasions. It includes Responses, Services—Matins, Communion and Evensong, also Wedding and Funeral Services—and Anthems, all specially composed for equal voices. It need hardly be said that the "Chorister Series" meets the requirements of Ladies' Colleges and Schools where a choral service is in vogue.

THE COUNCIL SCHOOL HYMN BOOK

A COLLECTION OF HYMNS, WITH PRAYERS,
FOR USE IN COUNCIL SCHOOLS

COMPILED TO MEET THE PARTICULAR NEEDS OF THE NEW EDUCATION
AUTHORITIES ESTABLISHED BY THE ACT OF 1902.

PRICES.

- a. Words and Tunes with complete Accompaniment, the usual hymnal form, price 2s. 6d.
- b. The Words with the Melody only (staff and tonic sol-fa notations combined), for the use of the children, price 1s.
- c. Words only (limp cloth), 6d.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE MUSIC EDITION.

The music of the Council School Hymn Book has been selected for its melodic interest and general suitability to children's voices. These essentials have been kept steadily in view as regards the new tunes composed expressly for the book, wherein many well-established favourites find a place. It will be observed that some of the tunes appear in lower keys than usual in order that young voices may not be unduly strained.

Every care has been taken to make the music of the book acceptable to teachers as well as children, in the hope that daily hymn-singing may become a specially enjoyable feature of school life.

The Hymns (150) chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

PRESS NOTICES.

THE GUARDIAN.

This little book is excellent for the purpose announced by its title. The hymns which it contains are very suitable for a Christian School; and it would not be easy to show that any old favourites have been shut out which ought to have been included, nor that many which are below what a hymn for children should be, have crept in.

CHRISTIAN WORLD.

Outwardly unpretentious, "The Council School Hymn Book" will be eagerly scanned by those who know how important it is to preserve sanity and wholesomeness in hymns that are often sung by children. Put briefly, the aim of the editors has been to avoid sectarianism and doggerel; and they have succeeded so well as to prompt the wish that this book could displace those in use at the average Sunday school.

THE BOOKSELLER.

We do not think that a better hymnal for use in public elementary schools than the present could be wished or hoped for. The editors, it is sufficiently clear, were bound in such a publication to exclude strictly denominational hymns, and to select those only which express the central truths of religion. This they have consistently done throughout, and have at the same time admirably suited the varied collection to the capacities of the young. Such classics as "The spacious firmament on high" (Addison), "Hark! the herald angels sing" (C. Wesley), "Let us with a glad some mind" (Milton), and other more modern hymns, of which the inclusion has been permitted by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, the Rev. J. Page Hopps, and Miss Betham-Edwards, among other writers; and the prayers at the end of the collection (and chosen on the same principle) for the opening and closing of school, and for certain special occasions, will be found well adapted to their object.

THE SCHOOLMISTRESS.

The editors of this beautiful collection of hymns have done their work well, and have thoroughly carried out their aims in including only those hymns which express the central truths of religion, and in making the collection as large and varied as possible, consistently with the maintenance of a high literary standard.

BRISTOL TIMES AND MIRROR.

"The Council School Hymn Book" contains well and widely-chosen hymns, which express the central truths of religion, and are within the comprehension, and suited to the capacities, of children. At the end are prayers for the opening and closing of school, which have been selected on the same principle as the hymns. The collection is an admirable one, and deserves to be generally adopted.

THE SCOTSMAN.

A useful little compilation for elementary schools. It is handy, well edited, and well printed, and has no particular denominational tendency.

WESTERN MORNING NEWS.

Whoever were the compilers of this book, they have discharged their task very well. The 150 hymns selected express the central truths of the Christian Faith, and with one or two exceptions are just suited to the comprehension of the children for whom the selection is intended. As should be, catholicity is the note of the book; cheek by jowl we find John Bunyan and John Keble; Walsham How and J. Montgomery; T. Kelly and F. W. Faber; J. Page Hopps and R. S. Hawker; C. Wesley and J. M. Neale; Bishop Wordsworth and John Milton; Baring-Gould and Isaac Watts. How's Diamond Jubilee Hymn, "O King of kings" appropriately finds its place, and perhaps Kipling's "Recessional" might have been included also. The short prayers at the end of the book are drawn up on the same broad principle as the hymns, and some special ones are added for "Our Country," "before and after holidays," for times of "dangerous sickness," and for those connected with the school who are in "trouble or sorrow." Altogether the compilation is a model of what such a book should be, and it richly deserves the widest use in the Council schools of the land.

ALFRED R. GAUL.

"Is well ahead of all Mr. Gaul's previous efforts. . . . Special mention may be made of the treatment of the parable of the Prodigal Son, which occupies a conspicuous place."—Daily Star.

"The Victoria Hall, Hanley, was well filled by an audience who gave enthusiastic evidence of their approval of Mr. Gaul's music. The chorus and band numbered 350 performers. . . . A striking feature in the form of a delightfully instrumented Eastern dance in itself is sufficient to enhance Mr. Gaul's reputation."—STAFFORDSHIRE CORRESPONDENT, The Musical Times.

"Judged by the appreciative reception accorded it by the crowded audience at Griffithstown, it bids fair to eclipse the popularity of the same composer's 'Holy City,' . . . 'The Prince of Peace' is a work of an exceptionally high order. There are passages of surpassing beauty and brilliance. The work is varied and interesting, and, like all of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, supplies a need which no other composer of music so satisfactorily meets, viz., a moderately difficult work written on classical lines. . . . The cantata occupied about ninety minutes, and from the opening bars to the finish there was not a dull moment. . . . Already we understand numerous requests have been made for an early repetition."—Pontypool Free Press.

"No man knows better than Mr. Gaul how to write for voices. . . . 'Thou art the King of Glory,' a singularly fine chorus, worthy of any composer, living or dead. . . . Throughout the work we have spontaneity, elegance, attractiveness, in short, a never-ending charm. This cantata, which completes the octave of Mr. Gaul's cantatas, we hold to be the best. If it prove less popular than the composer's 'The Holy City,' we shall be surprised."—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

"In every way worthy the great reputation and experience of its composer. . . . Is indeed a work of a very unusual character, and most probably destined to become more popular than any of his other compositions. . . . Worthy the study of choral societies of every grade."—North Staffordshire Sentinel.

"Admirably written for the voice, enhanced by charm of rhythm and picturesque accompaniments."—Birmingham Daily Mail.

"Is interesting from beginning to end, and shows considerable accomplishment, as well as a leaning towards the modern influences in the art. . . . The ideas are good, the theme is developed with great ingenuity, there is plenty of variety as well as technical difficulty in the variations, and the whole composition is one that calls for high praise."—The Times.

"We find these variations extremely interesting. . . . Here is a very original theme upon which is built a series of as really original variations, stone upon stone, so to speak, until at length is completed an admirable, even beautiful, musical structure that should find its way into many a pianist's repertoire."—The Queen.

A SONG OF HOPE.

What though the day be dark, and storms rage over the seas,
What though the fields are brown, and leaves fall fast from the trees,
What though the birds are flown, and skies overhead are grey,
What though the sun goes down so soon on a winter's day?

Spring will come with her joy, and glory of bud and flower,
Spring, with her song of hope in every bright ning hour,
Spring, with her dress of green embroider'd with woodland bloom,
Spring, with her April tears and sunlight after the gloom.

Deep in the warm earth's breast the flowers are living still,
Hid till the spring shall come, proclaiming her royal will;
"Wake! O ye sleeping flow'rs, and bloom on the earth once more—Wake! for the spring has come and the winter time is o'er."

VERDI'S "REQUIEM." LEEDS CHORAL UNION.

"Mr. Herbert Parker in the bass part made a step in advance. He sang exceedingly well, not only correctly and with good musical effect, but with a close appreciation of the words and the mood of the music, showing intelligence as well as considerable vocal powers, of which his impressive reading of the 'Mors stupebit' may serve as an example."—Yorkshire Post, Feb. 16, 1906.

"The soloists were Mdlle. Antonia Dolores, Signorina Giulia Ravogli, Mr. Henry Brearley, and Mr. Herbert Parker, who, one and all, sang with fine artistic effect."—Yorkshire Observer, Feb. 16, 1906.

BEETHOVEN'S "CHORAL SYMPHONY."

LEEDS CHORAL UNION.

"Mr. Herbert Parker declaimed the opening baritone recitative with good effect."—Yorkshire Post, Feb. 15, 1906.

"Mr. Parker was excellent throughout."—Leeds Mercury, Feb. 15.

"ELIJAH." LICHFIELD MUSICAL SOCIETY.

"The honours of the occasion were, however, borne away by Mr. Herbert Parker, who sustained the rôle of the Prophet with really magnificent effect. It was his first appearance in oratorio since his election as Vicar-Choral of the Cathedral, and much as was expected of him, his singing proved a revelation and surprise. He was in splendid voice, and won the highest admiration and elicited loud and appreciative applause."—Staffordshire Advertiser, Dec. 16, 1905.

"HIAWATHA." MORLEY CHORAL SOCIETY.

"Mr. Herbert Parker was excellent as the baritone, and invested the 'Farewell' with fitting dignity and depth of expression. He is quite one of the best of our younger baritones."—Leeds Mercury, Dec. 8, 1906.

"THE APOSTLES." GLASGOW CHORAL UNION.

"The performances of Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Herbert Parker were artistic in the extreme."—Evening Citizen, Dec. 20, 1905.

MR. MONTAGUE BORWELL

(BARITONE)

(Westminster Abbey).

Of the Royal Choral Society, Queen's Hall Symphony and Promenade Concerts, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace Concerts, Glasgow Choral Union, Belfast Philharmonic Society, &c.

Telegrams—"SOLOIST, LONDON." Telephone—519 (P.O.) HAMPSTEAD.

DUBLIN.—ORPHEUS CHORAL SOCIETY.

"Dr. Culwick was fortunate enough to be able to reinforce his list of artists by a baritone of quite exceptional endowments. . . . Among the songs contributed by Mr. Montague Borwell, a distinguished baritone who has sung in Westminster Abbey and at the Queen's Hall concerts, were 'Zueignung,' 'Allerseelen,' and 'Ich Liebe Dich' (R. Strauss). It was flattering to our linguistic pride that a visitor to our shores should assume that songs with German words would prove as delectable to our ears as those in English. However, we are all able to appreciate a voice as rich and as artistically used as that of Mr. Borwell. He is a truly splendid artist, and his series of songs, the singing of which was characterised by brilliancy of tone and thoroughly refined art, delighted his audience. The finest effort of the series was Handel's 'Oh, Ruddier than the Cherry,' which was given with brilliancy and consummate ease. He was enthusiastically encored, and his concession to the demand took the form of a dainty Irish number, which proved equally popular. Again he had to respond to a thunderous encore, and this time he illustrated his skill in gentle shading—equally to the delight of his audience."—IRISH TIMES, February 7, 1906.

SOUTHAMPTON.—PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

"Mr. Montague Borwell, who is gifted with a rich and refined voice, capable of wide musical appreciation, is possessed of the somewhat uncommon power of expressing in the language of song the poetical spirit which sleeps in the soul of the written page, and which can only be called forth by the artist who continuously seeks the correct interpretation of the composer's meaning. The tremendous applause which continuously greeted Mr. Borwell's efforts demonstrated the keen appreciation of true talent. Mr. Borwell's choice of numbers was a representative one. His contributions to the first part of the programme consisted of three of Rubinstein's best known compositions, viz., 'The Dewdrops Shine,' 'The Azra,' and 'The Wood Witch,' the peaceful and suggestive beauty of the first, the pathos and pain of the second, and the dramatic intensity of the last, being all the subject of sympathetic interpretation at the hands of Mr. Borwell. Leoncavallo's Prologue to 'I Pagliacci' was also particularly well received. Mr. Borwell's effort in the second part of the programme was a brilliant one, entailing considerable vocal strain, consisting as it did of no less than five of Stanford's settings of Henry Newbolt's 'Songs of the Sea,' in succession, viz., 'Drake's Drum,' 'Devon, O Devon,' 'Outward Bound,' 'Homeward Bound,' and 'The Old Superb.' These works constitute a study in contrast, at one moment being identified with wild vigour and dauntless courage and the next wrapped in tender melancholy. 'The Old Superb' was perhaps the most popular number, and vociferous applause followed Mr. Borwell as he retired from the stage, having rendered each song with splendid effect."—Southampton Echo, February 3, 1906.

MR. JOHN BROWNING

(BARITONE).

Soloist, Leeds Musical Festivals, and of the leading English and Scotch Concerts. Extensive repertoire of over 120 works.

Will sing, on April 4, for THE LEEDS CHORAL UNION—Handel Concert—at which the Yorkshire contingent for the HANDEL FESTIVAL, consisting of 400 voices, from Leeds, Sheffield, Huddersfield, &c., will take part.

Engaged for THE HUDDERSFIELD CHORAL SOCIETY, Oct. 19, 1906.

STANFORD'S "SONGS OF THE SEA."—LEEDS, Feb. 8, 1906.—"His voice is admirably suited to them. . . . The exclamations, 'Devon! O Devon! in wind and rain,' were brought out with thrilling effect, while a well-polished climax was reached in 'The Old Superb.'"—Yorkshire Post.

"Contributed Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea' with rare incisiveness and vocal volume."—Leeds Mercury.

HARTLEPOOL, Feb. 14, 1906.—"New to local audiences, but last night he established himself in the good graces of those present in the Town Hall by his masterly renderings. . . . In Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea' he put some vivid character, great spirit and a boldness or tenderness, as occasion required, which appealed to the audience strongly, carrying their interest unflinchingly from start to finish."—Northern Daily Mail.

LIVERPOOL METHODIST CHORAL UNION.—"MESSIAH."—Dec. 26, 1905.—"Mr. John Browning's full and sonorous bass voice invested 'Why do the nations' with great impressiveness, and his singing evoked the warmest approbation."—Post.

"Roused enthusiasm with his singing."—Courier.

DUNFERMLINE CHORAL UNION.—"MESSIAH."—Dec. 19, 1905.—"Mr. John Browning received quite an ovation for his vigorous singing of 'Why do the nations.'"—Times.

"By his skill in managing the long runs and the expression he put into his rendering, quite brought down the house."—Journal.

GAINSBORO' CHORAL SOCIETY.—"SAMSON."—Dec. 13, 1905.—"The enthusiasm was intensified at the conclusion of Mr. Browning's great rendering of 'Honour and Arms.' It is hard to think that there could be a more perfect rendering of this favourite solo. I have heard it sung almost times without number, and I cannot call to mind a superior performance. Every squaver received its value, and the whole of the solo was given with fiery declamatory power and admirable emphasis. Three times Mr. Browning was compelled to rise and bow his acknowledgments."—Times.

Address, Marlbro' Grove, Leeds.

MR. ARTHUR WALENN

(BARITONE).

Now Booking for Next Season.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S "EVERYMAN."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, RICHMOND, May 3. Of this Concert—The Herald says: "Mr. Arthur Walenn's fine baritone voice was heard to much advantage in the exacting solos for Everyman."

The Surrey Comet: "Mr. Arthur Walenn gave to the character of Everyman the deepest expression and impressiveness, at the same time avoiding that exaggeration which would tempt a singer of less culture."

The Richmond Times: "Of the soloists, the place of honour must certainly be given to Mr. Arthur Walenn, who, as Everyman, had so much to do. It was always difficult, requiring great variety and expression, to ward off a suspicion of dullness that might otherwise have crept in. In Mr. Walenn's hands nothing of the kind happened; he has a bass voice of very pleasing quality, well under control, and was evidently thoroughly acquainted not only with the music itself, but with the spirit of the work."

South Wales Daily Telegraph: "HIAWATHA" (conducted by the composer).—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was heard to real advantage. The first part was full of poetry and imagination, and in the 'Vision' ('True is all Iago tells us') he sang with a dramatic intensity which was little short of a revelation."

Tunbridge Wells Courier: "ELIJAH."—"Mr. Arthur Walenn afforded us an intellectual and musical treat in his embodiment of the idea of the Prophet Elijah. To enact a character of this kind, an arduous duty is imposed on the singer, who not only requires a voice of good power and range, but an artistic insight into the nature of the subject to be dealt with is imperative. That Mr. Walenn fulfilled these attributes is undeniable, and nothing but praise can be accorded him for a really superb delineation of the part."

Liverpool Daily Post: The "MESSIAH" at Liverpool.—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was very successful in sustaining the bass solos, both voice and vocalization being excellent."

(Vicar Choral, Lichfield Cathedral).

Of the London and principal Provincial Concerts.

NOW BOOKING FOR NEXT SEASON.

WARWICK MUSICAL SOCIETY.—"CARACTACUS."—"Among the principals premier honours fell easily to Mr. J. Coleman, who interpreted the title-role with distinction. . . . His powerful and mellow voice, and his dramatic method, were eminently adapted to the music."—Warwick Chronicle, Feb. 10, 1906.

"The palm, however, belonged to Mr. James Coleman, whose rich baritone voice produced a fine effect in the 'Lament,' and in other places where dramatic delivery was essential."—Warwickshire Advertiser, Feb. 10, 1906.

"An admirable quartette of principals had been engaged, and among these stood pre-eminent Mr. J. Coleman, who rendered the music of the title-role with a power and ability rarely heard."—Warwick Daily Circular, Feb. 8, 1906.

COVENTRY MUSICAL SOCIETY.—"ELIJAH."—"The triumph of the evening was unquestionably that of Mr. J. Coleman: a finer exponent of the Prophet none could wish to hear. Among the chief characteristics of his singing were an intense devotional fervour, combined with a dramatic power, which raised the audience to the very highest pitch. His glorious organ seemed to permeate the whole building, and throughout the arduous task he never showed the slightest sign of fatigue. Those who had the pleasure of listening will not readily forget."—Coventry Herald, Jan. 19, 1906.

WARRINGTON MUSICAL SOCIETY.—"ST. JOHN'S EVE."—"Mr. Coleman confirmed the already high opinion which had been formed of him as a vocalist of the front rank."—The Guardian, Dec. 23, 1905.

A SUITE OF OLD ENGLISH DANCES

with Variations.

ARRANGEMENT FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO
BY THE COMPOSER.

"They should please popular audiences all over the country. Saturday's audience gave the work a most cordial reception, and insisted on a repetition of the 'Minuet d'Amour.' Some excellent contrast is provided in the variations of the last number."—Glasgow Herald.

"The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. 'The Lover's Minuet' was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored."—Glasgow News.

"First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity."—Glasgow Evening Times.

"Might be described as exceedingly graceful adaptations of more or less conventional ideas, and worked out with that delicate orchestration in which Dr. Cowen is such an adept. Of the four movements, the 'Minuet d'Amour' is the most consistently original. Based upon a really beautiful melody, it displayed a very happy treatment of solo string instruments, and the employment of a solo string quartet at its conclusion was notably charming in its effect. While all four movements were very well received, the 'Minuet d'Amour' had to be repeated."—The Scotsman.

HEREFORD CATHEDRAL.

There we heard a most sweet Organ, and voyces of all parts, Tenor, Counter-Tenor, Treeble, and Base; and amongst that orderly snowy crew of Queristers, our Landlord-Guide did act his part in a deep and sweet Diapason.

From a Diary of three visitors to Hereford Cathedral in the year 1634.

Homogeneity in diversity sounds paradoxical. Hereford Cathedral, however, furnishes proof of the statement. Its architecture embraces every single example, from Early Norman down to the Perpendicular of the 16th century, and yet no incongruity is apparent, all styles seeming to blend in perfect harmony. Although the early history of the building is lost in obscurity, there has been an unbroken succession of bishops since A.D. 676, when Putta, Bishop of Rochester, was translated to Hereford by Sexwulf, Bishop of Lichfield. 'An admirable stone church' ('ecclesiam egregiam, lapidea structura') was built, on the site of a former edifice, by Milfrid, Viceroy of Mercia. This Saxon church, which stood about two centuries, was rebuilt by Bishop Athelstan in the time of Edward the Confessor. After having been destroyed by fire it is said to have remained in ruins from the year 1055 to 1079, when Robert de Lozing (or Lorraine), on his consecration, began to build the present cathedral, his beneficent work forming the main portion of this mother-church which stands to this day.

Externally the grouping of the various parts is not without a pleasing effect. The great central tower, with its profusion of ball-flower ornament, is a fine example of Decorated work, while its massiveness forms a stern contrast to the graceful Lady Chapel. The Chapter House is, alas! in ruins, only the foundations and the south wall remaining; plans have been prepared for its re-erection, and their carrying out is only awaiting some generous-minded benefactor with the necessary funds. Until recent years the cloisters—of which the Lady's Arbour forms so interesting a feature—were also in a dilapidated state. Owing to the wise régime and energy of the present Dean, the Hon. and Very Rev. J. W. Leigh, much has been done in the way of restoration. For instance, a part of the cloisters has been admirably adapted for the Cathedral Library—of which more anon—and a portion utilized as a choir-practice room, called 'The Song School.'

Two bays of the western cloister are still non-existent; these and also the southern portion of the west front are only waiting the needful funds for the work of restoration to be completed. On Easter Monday, 1786, the west front, with its superimposed tower, fell with a terrible crash, destroying a considerable portion of the upper part of the nave and roof in its fall. The rebuilding was unfortunately entrusted to that arch-despoiler of English cathedrals, James Wyatt, who, at Hereford, surpassed his previous efforts at vandalism. Not only did he alter the whole proportion of the building by shortening the nave to the extent of fifteen feet by the removal of a bay, but he erected a new west front of a 'neat gothic pattern,' and, moreover, removed all the Norman work in the nave above the nave arcade and substituted a design of his own! No wonder that a critic remarked: 'The cathedral was only in ruins in 1786; it was not ruined until Wyatt had done with it.' The west front has been rebuilt (dedicated by the Archbishop of Canterbury, March 25, 1904), 'and,' in the words of the Dean, 'is a grand piece of architecture in the 14th century style of Decorated Gothic, elaborately adorned with statues and beautiful carving, the whole being in harmony with the fine central tower and other parts of the cathedral.' The new west window, designed and executed by Messrs. Clayton & Bell, is a memorial to Queen Victoria, and was subscribed for by 8,000 women of the county and diocese.

On entering the building its magnificent Norman pillars at once attract attention. Another Norman feature is the font, of which a photograph appears on p. 158. All the figures of the twelve Apostles around the basin have been broken, but the demi-griffins or sea-lions at the base have been spared. In strong and not altogether pleasant contrast to the grandeur of the Norman work is Sir Gilbert Scott's gorgeous metal screen placed at the entrance to the choir; and it is to be hoped that ere long the unsightly modern gaselier suspended from the lantern-roof will disappear. While no one could object to the opening-up of the lantern, the result is rather disastrous to realising the best effects of the music as heard under the tower or in the nave; the addition of a false roof of plate glass would be a great improvement in this respect and yet retain the openness of the lantern. For the remainder of the interior the reader is referred to the various views which illustrate this article. Mention may be made, however, of the following special features of interest.

The north transept (c. 1240-68) was entirely rebuilt for the reception of the shrine of Bishop Thomas de Cantelupe upon the removal of his body from the Lady Chapel in 1287, after the hundreds of miracles reported at his tomb had largely increased the revenues of the cathedral. The bishop bequeathed his heart to his friend, Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, and it was sent to Ashridge, in Buckinghamshire; part of his body was buried at Orvieto (Italy), where he died in 1282; and his bones were deposited at Hereford. Bishop Cantelupe, the last Englishman to be canonised, wore a hair shirt under his episcopal garb, and he rigorously excluded all women, however old and ugly, from his household. The unusual shape of the arches and the fine effective windows of this north transept cause it to be one of the most distinguished English specimens of middle geometrical style. In the south transept much of the fine Norman work remains, although this part of the church 'seems to have been the happy hunting-ground of successive races of builders, who have left the side walls in admired confusion': the use of the word 'admired' in this 'confusion' connection is exceedingly happy.

Like many cathedrals, Hereford originally had an apsidal ending. No one could regret the substitution of the exceedingly beautiful north-east and south-east transepts which, together with the vestibule of the Lady Chapel, form so striking a feature of the east end of the noble fane. From the retro-choir a few steps lead to the no less beautiful Lady Chapel (c. 1220) with its glorious east window of five narrow lancets recessed within arches supported by clustered shafts. Fergusson, in his 'History of Architecture,' remarks:

Nowhere on the Continent are such combinations to be found as the Five Sisters at York, the east end of Ely, or such a group as that which terminates the east end of Hereford.

Underneath the Lady Chapel is the Crypt, which, like the Lady Chapel, is Early English. Professor Willis has pointed out that Hereford is the only old cathedral in England whose crypt is later in date than the 11th century. Among the stained-glass windows in the cathedral are four in memory of the following musicians: John Hunt, George Townsend Smith, and Langdon Colborne (former organists), and the Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, a former precentor. Dr. S. S. Wesley has still to be commemorated in this the first cathedral in which he held the office of organist.

A specially interesting appurtenance of Hereford Cathedral is The College of Vicars-Choral, a very ancient foundation. There seems to be no means of ascertaining the date of the first creation of a body of vicars-choral previous to the charter of Richard II. in 1396: the present charter, under which the vicars hold their lands and other rights and privileges, is dated 1583, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. Before Elizabeth's charter there were twenty-six vicars, now their number is reduced to four, whose office corresponds to that of minor canons in other cathedrals; formerly, however, the vicars sang the whole service, a duty which is now discharged by lay-clerks. To quote further from the Diary of the three visitors to Hereford in the year 1634:

'Next came wee into a braue, and ancient priuilegd'd Place, through the Lady Arbour Cloyster, close by the Chapter House, called the Vicars Chorall, or Colledge Cloyster, where 12 of the Singing Men all in Orders, most of them Masters in Arts, of a gentile Garbe, haue there, their conuenient seuerall dwellings, and a fayre Hall, with richly painted windowes Colledge-like, wherein they constantly dyet togeather; and haue their Cooke, Butler, and other Officers, with a fayre Library to themselves, consisting of all of English Bookes, wherein (after wee had freeilie tasted of their Chorall cordiall Liquor) wee spent our time till the Bell toll'd vs away to Cathedrall Prayers.'

'Chorall cordiall Liquor' is now merely a tradition, but nothing could be more cordial than the manner in which the venerable Custos of the College of Vicars, the Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe, M.A., ciceroned the present writer through the ancient buildings of which he (the Custos) has been an inhabitant for forty years. The college is connected with the cathedral by a cloister, the roof of which consists of beautifully carved beams of chestnut wood, late 15th century work. Quadrangular in design, the buildings date from circa 1462 to 1472, but the hall was rebuilt in the 18th century. At the present time only two of the vicars live in the college, which was originally adapted for the use of celibates who dined at a common table. 'One of the statutes (unrepealed to this day) allowed no female to live in the college, except a near relative of a vicar, and that only in case of illness. This was revived in its stringency against one of the vicars early in the 19th century, and his wife was compelled to turn out, though to do so the vicars dismissed a female cook before the Dean and Chapter would enforce her withdrawal.*' The Common Room—now the books preserved in this room include a Caxton. The best known of former vicars is the Rev. William Felton, composer of the funeral chant, while in later years we find the name of the Rev. John Goss, a son of the St. Paul's organist, Hereford has every reason to be proud of its Cathedral Library. Either the Rev. Dr. Thomas Frognall Dibdin did not visit it, or else the Dean and Chapter of his day were too wide awake to allow Lord Spencer's librarian to carry off Caxtons in exchange for encyclopædias, &c., as being 'more useful as books of reference'! To spend an hour in the library at Hereford in company with the erudite Dean is a most pleasant experience. Here we look upon a greater number of chained volumes than is to be found in any other collection of the kind. Moreover, these ancient tomes repose in the original bookcases, with chains attached. (See the photograph on the opposite page). One of them—bound in oak, written on vellum, with iron clasps and chain—contains a very curious, circular, carved book-marker of the 12th century.

The aroma of antiquity pervades a copy of the Anglo-Saxon Gospels, written in the 8th or 9th century; the coloured titles in three of these remain, viz., the Gospels of St. Matthew, St. Mark, and St. John. This thousand-year-old volume, said to have been bequeathed by the last Saxon bishop of Hereford, has coloured initial letters with the runic knot, and interlaced animals interwoven with wondrous intricacy and perfection of execution, similar to the remarkable MSS. found in the Durham Gospels and the Book of Kells. A 'Book of the Gospels' of the 13th century has some fine illuminated initials, and at the end of the second gospel is a symbolical representation of St. Mark. A precious treasure is the 13th century MS. of the Hereford Use, the only known copy containing the music. In 1834 this tome was bought at a bookstall in Drury Lane by William Hawes, Almoner of St. Paul's Cathedral, who, upon discovering its contents, sold the volume to the Dean and Chapter of Hereford for twelve guineas. The chief interest in this, the earliest and most important example of the Hereford Use, lies in the first two pages, the Kalendar, and the instructions in music, beginning at the ninth page from the end: it has sometimes been called an antiphoner, by reason of the musical notation of the anthems contained therein, but as it contains the lessons and all parts of the choir services it may properly be described as a noted breviary.

Scarcely less interesting is a copy of the Bangor Use (c. 1400). In the middle of the volume is a curious charm for the toothache! But a less painful feature of this venerable tome is the Marriage Service in English, containing the ancient form of the betrothal, the placing of the ring successively on each finger of the hand. It reads thus:

Wyth this gold ryng y ye wedde . gold a~ siluer ich ye zeve [give] . a~ with my bodi ich ye worschep . a~ with al my worldelych catel I ye hounoure (Ad primum digitum) In nofe patris . (ad secundum digitum) et filii (ad trinum digitum) et spt~ sancti . (ad quartum digitum) Amen.

One of the largest and finest volumes in the library is the celebrated 'Decretum Gratiani' (12th century) with numerous initials executed with great skill, several pages being entirely covered with very rich colouring, and containing the donor's inscription, written on a slip of parchment covered with a piece of horn and attached by nails to the boards. An equally fine copy is that of Wycliffe's Bible, written in 1420, which contains a local reference to a Hereford speciality in these words: 'he shal not drinke wyn nor Sider.' (St. Luke i, 15.)

The library is strong in the early Incunabula of the 15th century—e.g. 'Nonius Marcellus' (1476), printed at Venice by the unrivalled Nicolas Jensen; the 'Nuremberg Chronicle' (1493), with 2,000 woodcuts, of which there are two copies. But perhaps the most precious treasure in the whole collection is the first edition of 'The Golden Legend,' printed by Caxton in 1483. The volume is in splendid condition; original binding, metal work and chain, letters H.R., roses and portcullis stamped on the sides; moreover, it is one of the most perfect copies known, only fifteen leaves are missing, and these relate to the martyrdom of Thomas à Beckett, which Henry VIII. ordered to be taken out. The very rare edition of Ralph Higden's 'Polycronicon,' printed, in 1527, by Peter Treveris, of Southwark, finds a place on these shelves; the title-page of the volume contains a fine woodcut of St. George and the Dragon. A Latin Bible, with commentary interlinings on every page, five volumes folio, by Nicholas de Lyra (1485) is cased in an old cover of oak, with richly stamped leather and brass studs and old clasps. This Bible is said to have been the means of Martin Luther's conversion, or in the words of the old saying: 'Si Lyra non lyrasset, Luther non saltasset.' Coming to later times we find the works of King James, which contain that monarch's 'Counterblast to Tobacco,' and a sealed Prayer Book of Charles II. (1652).

during the reign of Canute, 1017-1035. This legal document concludes thus (translated):

Then Thurkill the White stood up in the moot and requested all the Thanes to deliver free to his wife all the lands that her kinswomen had given to her, and this they so did. And after this Thurkill rode to St. Ethelbert's Minster, and by leave and witness of all the folk caused the transaction to be set in a Christ's book.

Considerations of space will only permit the mere mention of a few things of special interest which the Dean points out. In one of the cases is an ancient chasse or reliquary, representing the

CHAINED BOOKS IN THE CATHEDRAL LIBRARY.

(Photograph by Mr. W. H. Bustin, Hereford.)

The oldest record in the library is the original Charter of Cuthwulf, the Saxon Bishop of Hereford and the congregation of the church (at Hereford), with the consent of Berthwulf, King of the Mercians, to Aelfstan, Duke, conveying certain lands for three lives, and afterwards to the monastery of Bromyard. At the end of the Book of Gospels of the 8th or 9th century is an ancient instrument recording a suit in the County Court, martyrdom of St. Thomas of Canterbury: on the lower part the murder, on the upper part the entombment of the saint. This relic, of oak, is richly overlaid with Limoges enamel, the colours used being blue, light blue, green, yellow, red, chocolate, and white. Those familiar dates in English history—1066 to 1087—are recalled when we look upon a seal of William the Conqueror. Here is a perfect specimen of a pre-Reformation chalice and paten taken from the coffin of Richard de Swinfield, who died in the year 1316. A noteworthy fragment in the library is to be found pasted to the end cover of a copy of 'Zabarella super Clementinis' (1494). It consists of a remarkable ink drawing of the Crucifixion, full of mediæval character and deep feeling, and, in the Dean's opinion, evidently a work of the 13th century. But we must hasten on.

No account of Hereford Cathedral would be complete without reference to the wonderful map

'founded on the cosmographical treatises of the time (circa 1282-1300), which generally commence by stating that Augustus Cæsar sent out three philosophers, Nichodoxus, Theodotus, and Policitus, to measure and survey the world, and that all geographical knowledge was the result. The world is here represented as round, surrounded by the ocean. At the top of the map (the east) is represented Paradise, with its rivers and tree; also the eating of the forbidden fruit and the expulsion of our first parents. Above is a remarkable which is exhibited in the south aisle of the choir. This quaint 'Mappa Mundi,' drawn on a single sheet of vellum, and probably at one time used as an altar-piece, is the work of an ecclesiastic who is supposed to be represented in the right-hand corner on horseback, attended by his page and greyhounds. He has commemorated himself under the name of Richard de Haldingham and Lafford, in Lincolnshire, but his real patronymic is Richard de la Battayle, or de Bello, who held a Prebendal stall in Hereford Cathedral in 1305. This map is representation of the Day of Judgment, with the Virgin Mary interceding for the faithful, who are seen rising from their graves and being led within the walls of heaven. The map is chiefly filled with ideas taken from Herodotus, Solinus, Isodore, Pliny, and other ancient historians. There are numerous figures of towns, animals, birds, and fishes, with grotesque creatures, such as mediæval geographers believed to exist in distant parts of the world. The four great cities are made very prominent—Jerusalem as the centre of the world;

Babylon, with its famous tower; Rome, the capital of the world; and Troy as civitas bellicosissima. It is interesting to find that in Great Britain (located at the left-hand corner of the map, near the bottom) most of the cathedrals are mentioned. The numerous points of interest in this map may be sampled by the following pictorial representations:

The Columns of Hercules—the Labyrinth of Crete—the Pyramids of Egypt—the House of Bondage—the Journeys of the Children of Israel—Mount Sinai, with a figure of Moses and his supposed place of burial—the Phoenix—Jews worshipping the molten image—Lot's wife—Noah's ark—Pelican and nest—Warriors in combat with a griffin—Scythian cannibals, &c.

THE ORGAN AND STALLS.

(Photograph by Mr. W. H. Bustin, Hereford.)

At the bottom of the map is the following, in Norman-French:

All who have, or shall have, or shall read, or shall see this history, pray to Jesus in Deity, (that) he may have mercy on Richard of Haldingham and of Lafford, who has made and contrived it, that joy may be given to him in Heaven.

The musical associations of Hereford Cathedral are as important as they are interesting. Nothing at present seems to be known about the early organ or organs, as the Act Books of the Dean and Chapter are unindexed; but as Canon Capes is now going through the records he may bring to light some information on this point. In 1686 Renatus Harris erected an organ, said to have been the gift of Charles II., but there is nothing in the Act Books to confirm this statement: moreover, that the cost of this organ was £515, and that in the same year (1686) George Dallam was paid £5 for a 'chaire' organ, as stated in Hopkins and Rimbault's book on the organ—all this lacks confirmation in the cathedral records, though it may be perfectly true. It is certain, however, that Harris contracted to amend his organ for £50 in 1707, and a trumpet stop (the gift of Lord Scudamore) was added soon afterwards. Various builders—Snetzler, Green, Avery, Lincoln, Byfield, and Bishop—made many alterations in Harris's instrument, which till the year 1841 was located on the screen placed under the tower. In 1864 Gray & Davison rebuilt and enlarged the organ, when it was erected in its present position above the stalls on the south side of the choir. For the re-opening of the organ Goss composed his fine anthem 'Stand up, and bless the Lord your God.' In 1879 Henry Willis came upon the scene and amplified the instrument, and again, in 1892, the same artist built the present noble organ, of which the following is the specification:

There are eighteen pneumatic combination pistons and nine composition pedals. The combinations to be worked by these pistons and pedals can be fixed in a moment by means of interchangeable pneumatic combination knobs, of which there are nearly 300.

The whole of the action is pneumatic, and the bellows are blown by five hydraulic engines. The organ contains 3,629 speaking pipes.

Very early in the 'compotus rolls' the 'custos organorum' appears as receiving a stipend of 5 marks, or £3 6s. 8d. In the 17th century he had £12 + 8 marks from Chapter and College. He was required to tune as well as play the instrument. In olden times one of the vicars-choral discharged the duties of organist, but the office was sometimes held by a layman. The first of the lay performers, and one of the most in olden times; for instance, in the 16th century one John Farrant resigned his appointment at Hereford after being 'admonished for alleged insolence.' The Rev. Hugh Davies (or Davis) was informed 'that he be spared from the choir so that he be ready in ye organ loft to play before ye reading of ye first Lesson.' Mr. Miles Coyle, a lay organist (1789-1805), evidently considered the Dean and Chapter to be very easy-going, judging distinguished of the Hereford organists, was Dr. John Bull, the reputed composer of the National Anthem, who held the office from 1582 to (?) 1591. The portrait of Dr. Bull, who was the first Gresham Professor of Music, given above, represents him in the year 1589, during his organistship at Hereford; round the four sides of the frame is this couplet:

The bull by force in field doth raigne,
But Bull by skill good will doth gayne.

The vicar-choral organists, notwithstanding their clerical vocation, were not always above reproach from the following 'request' which appears in the Act Books:

The organist in consideration of his time being much occupied with Pupils, requests the Dean and Chapter to dispense with his playing a voluntary before the Communion Service on Holidays, except on Christmas Day, the State Holidays, and when the Bishop visits or confirms.

MILES COYLE.

In surveying the organists within the last hundred years, honourable mention should be made of Aaron Upjohn Hayter, who subsequently went to America and rendered valuable service to the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston. To him succeeded John Clarke, afterwards Dr. John Clarke-Whitfield (not Whitfield, as his name is so often wrongly spelled), who became Professor of Music in the University of Cambridge, and who is so widely known as the composer of the anthem

George Townsend Smith, who faithfully discharged the duties for thirty-four years (1843-77), to whom succeeded Langdon Colborne, who died in 1889.* For many years the office of Precentor was held by the Rev. Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, at whose

'I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills.' Great distinction was bestowed upon the music at Hereford when Samuel Sebastian Wesley, as a young man of twenty-two, became organist and master of the choristers. It was his first cathedral appointment, and he commenced his duties, in November, 1832, by composing for the re-opening of the organ his far-famed anthem 'The Wilderness.' Hereford also gave birth to 'Blessed be the God and Father,' composed to be sung on an Easter Sunday when only boys and one bass voice were available! 'How could such conditions prevail?' is a question that might seriously be asked. The explanation of, but not the justification for this lamentable state of affairs, is that all the vicars-choral (there being no lay-clerks) held livings, or had other clerical duties to perform; and that, as they had sung at an early morning service on Sundays, they considered that their cathedral duties had been discharged. Tradition says that the solitary bass on the occasion of the first rendering of 'Blessed be the God and Father' was the Dean's butler! The temptation to dwell on Dr. Wesley's cathedral career must be resisted: and has not the life-story of this genius-musician already been told in these columns? To that biographical sketch the reader is referred (THE MUSICAL TIMES, May, June, and July, 1900).

On the removal of Wesley to Exeter Cathedral—after his marriage with Dean Mereweather's sister—John Hunt held the office from 1835 to 1843. In the latter year he met his death by falling over a pile of plates that had been left on a narrow staircase in the Vicars' College after an audit dinner. His adopted nephew, a chorister in the cathedral, was so distressed at his uncle's untimely end, that he died three days after from the effects of the shock, and both bodies were buried in the same grave. To Hunt succeeded death the Rev. John Hampton, M.A., Warden of St. Michael's College, was appointed.

Before referring to the present organist, something may be said about various other musical associations of the cathedral. And the first place must be accorded to the Festival of the Three Choirs, Hereford forming one of the trio in this ancient and still flourishing organization. The actual year in which these Festivals commenced is not known, but their founder and great promoter, the celebrated Rev. Dr. Thomas Bisse, Chancellor of Hereford, preached a sermon on the Anniversary Meeting as far back as 1720. In its published form the distinguished divine's discourse is thus described:

A RATIONALE ON CATHEDRAL WORSHIP OR CHOIR SERVICE.

A Sermon preach'd in the Cathedral Church of Hereford, at the Anniversary Meeting of the Choirs of Worcester, Gloucester, and Hereford, Sept. 7, 1720. By THO. BISSE, D.D., and Chancellor of the said Church. Publish'd at the Request of the Audience.

There is very little doubt that these annual meetings (now the Festivals) germinated in the musical clubs held in the three cities. That at Hereford met weekly in the common-room of the College of Vicars. The performances were all gratis, except that Mr. Woodcock—an excellent performer on the violin, and who kept a coffee-house in Hereford—received 'the nightly pay of five shillings.' The members of the club, both performers and non-performers, were regaled with ale, cider, and tobacco. Hereford can claim the honour of being the first cathedral in which the 'Messiah' was performed entire; this was at the Festival of 1759, the year of Handel's death. The Rev. Richard Clack, one of the vicars and organist, conducted the performance, at which 'none were to be admitted without tickets, which would introduce the bearers gratis to the ball in the evening'! In 1834, when Dr. S. S. Wesley, as organist, conducted his first Festival, the locale of the performers was transferred from the choir to the nave, the band and chorus occupying a specially erected orchestra at the eastern end in front of the organ, which then stood on the screen at the intersection of nave and transepts. In order to make this Festival (of 1834) specially attractive, the Stewards in their address to the public waxed eloquent in these words:

In furtherance of this view, as well as in compliance with scruples to which they willingly defer, they have concurred with the Dean and Chapter in a determination to transfer the scene of the musical performances from the choir to the nave of the Cathedral, where the more ample accommodation for the auditory, the impressive character of the architecture, and the improved sphere for the undulation of harmonious sounds, will combine to augment that unspeakable fascination which is the never failing effect of the grand compositions selected for the occasion.

'Wilderness' and 'Blessed be the God and Father'—the actual copies from which he played while he held the organistship, from 1832 to 1835. During his recent visit to Hereford, the present writer had the pleasure of bringing to light a companion volume of Services (MS.) in which he found a transcript of Purcell's Te Deum in C (transposed from D) in Wesley's own hand. To the title Wesley has added the following caustic ascription:

Being an alteration and Digestion of Mr. Stafford Smith, as that gentleman [word, or words illegible] of a 'Grand Te Deum' by Purcell.

Immediately following this 'Digestion' version of Purcell's 'Te Deum' is another transcript, also in Wesley's hand, headed 'Morning and Evening Service, S. Wesley Senior': the transcript of this well-known service in F is an interesting tribute of filial affection, and it is quite probable that 'young Sam' also copied out the parts in his own bold and legible hand. In all, Wesley has filled thirty-six pages of this oblong folio book: at the end of page 54, we find the inscription 'S. S. W. 1835.' This volume will now be carefully bound and placed under lock and key.

THE CATHEDRAL CHORISTERS AND OTHERS.

(Photograph by Mr. Gus Edwards, Hereford.)

The choir library contains eight out of the ten parts of Barnard's Cathedral Music, the remaining two parts being manuscript copies. Of special interest is an oblong folio organ-book, which contains the autograph MSS. of S. S. Wesley's

A commendable feature of the music at Hereford is the attention which is given to the compositions of the old church writers—Purcell especially—that glorious company of creative musicians of whom we may justly be proud, and whose works are unique in the history of the art. Special attention is given to unaccompanied music—services and anthems: on the occasion of our visit Ouseley's Communion Service in A was sung without the organ, and with deep feeling and absolutely in tune. In the accompanied services and anthems Dr. Sinclair uses his splendid instrument with rare restraint—one's ears are not tortured with a constant boom of the pedals, nor wearied by the blare of reeds. Evensong on Sunday at 6.30 (there is no afternoon service) is attended by a large congregation, seated in the nave. At the evening service the old and pleasing custom of the middle voluntary is falling between the Psalms and the reading of the First Lesson, greatly added to the beauty and reverence of a truly devotional service. And when it is added that Wesley's 'Ascribe unto the Lord' formed the anthem, what more need be said?

Dr. Sinclair takes a special and personal interest in his choristers, fourteen in number, some of whom reside together and some are town boys who live at home. In training his young gentlemen he inculcates a natural sense of expression, rhythm and phrasing—this is especially noticeable in the old contrapuntal music, which is not allowed to be rendered as if it were a portion of the multiplication table, set to music and called 'Somebody in Q.' Except the very smallest boys, all the choristers sing solos and verses, the chief being Master Carrodus, son of Mr. Bernhard Carrodus, the well-known violinist, and grandson of the former leader of the Philharmonic orchestra. All the boys are inspired with a keen interest in music beyond their cathedral duties. They take an active part in the various musical societies of the city, as violinists, big drummer, cymbalist and, of course, vocalists. An ex-chorister, H. A. Smith, has obtained an Open Scholarship at the Royal College of Music, and he also gained the Stainer Exhibition at the Royal Academy of Music, which he had to relinquish on beginning his studies at Kensington; his future career, therefore, will be watched with interest. Of organists that have been trained by the present 'chief musician' of Hereford, it is only necessary to name Mr. Ivor Atkins (Worcester Cathedral); Mr. Edgar C. Broadhurst (St. Michael's College, Tenbury); Mr. Fuller (Hong Kong Cathedral); and Mr. Fritz Jones, who holds an important church-appointment in America; and last, but not least, Mr. Percy C. Hull, the able assistant-organist of Hereford Cathedral.

Dr. George Robertson Sinclair, the present organist and master of the choristers, although born at Croydon, on October 28, 1863, has both Scotch and Irish blood in his veins, as his ancestors, though of Scotch descent, have for several generations been settled in the Emerald Isle, and he is proud to proclaim himself an Irishman. His father, an LL.D. of Trinity College, Dublin, held the appointment of Director of Public Education in Bombay. At the early age of eight, Master Sinclair became a student at the Royal Irish Academy of Music, where he studied under Sir Robert Stewart. In 1873, aged ten, he gained a choral scholarship at St. Michael's College, Tenbury. There he remained for six years, singing in the daily services, deputising at the organ, gaining much valuable experience—and profiting by his intercourse with Ouseley, as Stainer had done years before. The death of his father changed the course of Dr. Sinclair's life: his parents had intended him to become a clergyman, but at the age of sixteen he was thrown upon his own resources. In May, 1879, he became a pupil of Dr. Harford Lloyd, then retained. Concerning this 'Voluntary after the Psalms' the learned Rev. Dr. Jebb—who, by-the-way, was a Canon of Hereford—says in his 'Choral Service of the United Church of England and Ireland':

If used at all, due regard should be had to the time and place in the selection of them, and all shewy gavots, and noisy trumpet pieces, carefully avoided. It should be a slow movement, chiefly upon the diapasons and unisons. This was Dr. Boyce's practice, as appears in his Life, prefixed to his Cathedral Music.

On the Sunday evening of our visit, Dr. Sinclair carried out Dr. Jebb's injunction by playing a soft movement which lasted four minutes; the tranquillity and restfulness of these strains, gently organist of Gloucester Cathedral, acting as deputy there and at the same time holding the organistship of St. Mary-de-Crypt in the city.

Ouseley had kept his eye on the boy during his choristership at Tenbury, and when Bishop (afterwards Archbishop) Benson, of Truro, asked Ouseley to recommend him a young man for the organistship of the proposed Cornish Cathedral, he at once nominated Sinclair. Thus at the early age of seventeen the youth became organist and choirmaster of Truro Cathedral. The young organist went to Bishop (afterwards Archbishop) Benson to receive his instructions and to seek his advice—'in fact,' he says, 'I was a sort of prefect, with the Bishop as head-master.' The late Canon Donaldson, in his book 'The Bishopric of Truro,' referring to Sinclair and the limited resources then at his disposal, says (p. 284):

Coming as a youth to Truro, he attracted Dr. Benson by his ardent love for his art and his untiring energy. Step by step he led on the choir, until he succeeded in making them fit to render the best cathedral music.

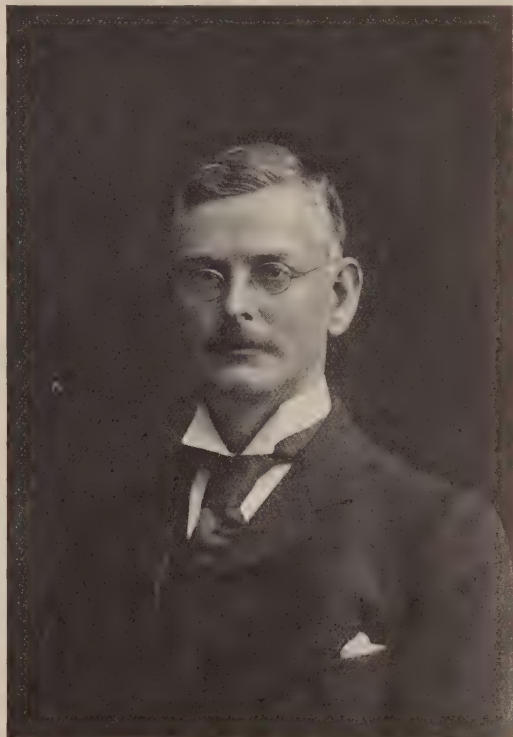

At the important ceremony of the consecration of the new Cathedral of Truro (November 3, 1887), this exceedingly youthful cathedral organist greatly distinguished himself; and he designed the fine four-manual organ. 'I quite thought that I should never leave Truro,' he says. 'I was very happy there; I had my little yawl, and seemed to be a fixture. But, almost against my inclination, I was urged to apply for this post, here at Hereford, then vacant by the death of my predecessor, Dr. Langdon Colborne. I believe I was run very close by another man, but I got it, and here I have been ever since.' That was in the year 1889.

In addition to conducting, with marked success, the Three Choirs Festivals at Hereford of 1891, 1894, 1897, 1900, and 1903, Dr. Sinclair personally raised the sum of £2,300 for the rebuilding of the cathedral organ. The Ouseley memorial window is chiefly the result of his fund-raising achievements, while the money for electrically lighting the choir and for some of the statuary in the new west front, has been provided by the offertories at his organ recitals. His pedal-playing technique is recorded in the opening of the 'G. R. S.' movement in Sir Edward Elgar's 'Variations on an original theme.' But his influence on music reaches beyond the confines of the cathedral organ loft. He is conductor of the Hereford Choral Society (an organisation which is sixty-eight years old); the Herefordshire Orchestral Society (80 members); the Herefordshire Choral Union (church choirs); and the Ross Musical Society. To these outlets for his boundless energy must be added the conductorship (since 1900) of the Birmingham Festival Choral Society (chorus of 400 voices, band of 80 performers), an important post, the offer of which came to him quite spontaneously from the Birmingham people.

In 1899 he received the Canterbury degree of Doctor of Music: he is an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music and an Honorary Fellow of the Royal College of Organists. As a keen Freemason he has made his mark: e.g. Past Grand Organist of England, Past Grand Organist of the Grand Lodge of Mark Masons; and he has held high rank in Provincial Grand Lodge and is a Past Master of the Palladian Lodge, No. 120: and on February 17 he was installed, by Sir Edward Letchworth, the Grand Secretary, as the first Worshipful Master of the new 'Vaga' Lodge, No. 3146.

In conclusion, a few words must be said in regard to Hereford as a city. In marked contrast to the time of Domesday Book, when there were only '103 men within the walls and without,' Hereford now has a population of about 22,000 persons. A quiet, old-world place—not unlike The Hague in this respect—it is, on the authority of Sir Edward Elgar, who is one of its most distinguished residents, a desirable city wherein to dwell. Easy of access, tramless, and sans manufactories, the place has a restfulness which is delightful to one whose lot is cast in the bustle and turmoil of London or other centres of restless activity. One thing Hereford lacks, an adequate hall for concert-giving. Proposals have been made and plans prepared for the enlargement of the present Shire Hall. Will not some wealthy lover—be he English or American—of our beautiful cathedral cities come forward with the necessary funds for this purpose?

It might form a permanent memorial to some Herefordshire worthy.

For valued help in the preparation of this article, thanks are tendered to the Dean of Hereford (the Hon. and Very Rev. J. W. Leigh, D.D., F.S.A.); to the Rev. W. D. V. Duncombe, M.A., Custos of the College of Vicars; to Dr. G. R. Sinclair, organist and master of the choristers; and to Mr. Alban Moore, Dean's Verger: also to the various Hereford photographers whose names appear under the excellent views and portraits taken by them.

A FAMOUS MUSIC-PRINTER.

JOHN DAY.

Arise, for it is Day!

John Day, Daye, or Daie, was born in St. Peter's Parish, Dunwich, on the Suffolk coast, a few miles south of Southwold. Formerly the capital of East Anglia, it was a place of considerable importance, in fact from 673 to 870 it was the head of a bishop's see; but that Dunwich is now at the bottom of the sea. Its fifty-two churches and chapels and 400 houses stood on ground that the ocean has claimed, and its two Members of Parliament, its Mayor and Corporation have become things of the past, with the result that Dunwich of to-day is only a village.

The Suffolk youth made his way to London, and he is believed to have learned his art—for true artist he became—from Thomas Gibson, whose punning device 'Arise, for it is Day' he adopted as an aid to business. Moreover, he extended the pun in the name of his first house, which was 'in Sepulchres parishe, at the signe of the Resurrection, a little above Holburne Conduit.' His earliest books he mostly printed with William Seres. The first of these is entitled: 'The Tragical death of David Beaton, bishop of St. Andrewes' (1546). Some of the titles of the first-fruits of his printing-press are quaint, e.g.:

An Heavenly acte of parliament, concerning how men shall liue: made by our soueraigne Lord God, the father, the sonne, and the holy Ghost, and the whole clergie in heauen consenting to the same. (1547.)

In the year 1549 Mr. Day removed to one of the old city gates, Aldersgate, and, as Stow says, he 'dwelled in this Gate, and builded much upon the Wall of the Citie, towards the parish church of St. Anne.' The first publication bearing the imprint: 'dwellinge at Aldersgate' seems to be 'The fyrste Sermon of Mayster Hughe Latimer' (1549), followed in the same year by 'The Byble,' 'Imprinted by Jhon Day dwellynge ouer Aldersgate,' subsequently changed to 'ouer Aldersgate beneth Saint Martins.' The Bible printed by him in 1551 contains Day's rebus at the bottom, viz., 'Cupid waking a person asleep, and pointing to the rising sun, with these words on the sides, Arise, for it is Day.' That the famous printer had a shop at this time is proved by the following, forming part of the colophon of 'Commentarye upon Mycha' (1551): '¶ These bokes are to bee sould at his shop in Schepesyde, by the Litle Countuit at the sygne of the Resurrection,' thus showing that he retained his Holborn sign. In September, 1552, Edward VI. granted Day a licence to print the English version of 'A Short Catechisme . . . for all Scholemaisters to teache,' this book, compiled 'for to roote out the discord of opinions, and stablish the agrement of trew religion,' was ordered to be printed in Latin and English by Wolf and Day respectively—'they bothe may joyne in prynting the said Catechisme.'

As John Day was a zealous reformer, the accession of Mary was not favourable to his typographical output; indeed, he is said to have suffered imprisonment with John Rogers. Yet he was made of sterner stuff than to sacrifice his principles in consequence, or to allow persecution to interfere with his life-work. In the original charter of the Stationers' Company, granted in 1556, the name of John Day appears among the freemen. A year later he printed his first music-book, the Sarum Missal, folio. There is a fine copy of this work in the British Museum: the notes are printed black, the stave red. Below the title ('Missale ad vsum insignis ecclesie Sarisburiensis,' &c.) are the arms of England in a garter, and crowned 'Vivat Re,' on a riband at the top, and M.R. at the bottom. On the sides are two pillars, with J. D. (John Day) on their bases.

A marked increase in typographical excellence is shown in the 'Cosmographical Glasse, conteining the pleasant Principals of Cosmographie, Geographie, Hydrographie, or Nauigation, compiled by William Cunningham, Doctor in Physicke' (1559). This, one of the most magnificent productions of the press of John Day, is a folio volume printed throughout in a large, flowing italic type, well leaded, and embellished with a variety of woodcuts, chiefly connected with mathematical subjects. There is no need to give the full title of this splendidly printed book, its purport may be judged from the following lines on the title-page:

In this Glasse if you will beholde
The Sterry Skye, and Yearth so wide,
The Seas also, with windes so colde,
Yea and thy selfe all these to guide:
What this Type meane first learne a right,
So shall the gayne thy trauaill quight.

At the end of this book is the device, frequently used by Day, representing a venerable gentleman teaching a nobleman, in the prime of life, this lesson of mortality, Etsi mors, indies accelerat. He is pointing to a skeleton, which reposes on a monument, from which issues a flourishing tree, bearing this motto: Post funera virtus vivet tamen. The device (of which a facsimile is given on p. 173) is doubtless, an allusion to Day's sign of the resurrection; moreover, in the drawing the sun is seen to be rising in the distance—'Arise, for it is Day.'

In the year in which he printed the 'Cosmographical Glasse' (1559) it would seem that he was engaged upon an edition of the Metrical

Psalms, as the following entry in the Stationers' Registers records :

Receuyed of John Daye for a fyne for printinge of serten copies without lysense and contrary to the orders of this house . a quartron of psalmes with notes the ij. de of octobre . . . . . xijs.

An extraordinarily rare book is Day's 'Certaine notes' (folio, 1560), entitled :

Certaine notes set forth in foure and three parts to be song at the morning Communion, and euening praier, very necessarie for the Church of Christe to be frequented and used : and unto them added diuers godly praiers & Psalmes in the like forme to the honor & praise of God.

Of this work there appears to be the title-page only, prefixed to the bass part of the 1565 edition (Bodleian, Douce collection. B. 348).

We now come to a most interesting feature of John Day's career, his printing of the metrical Psalms as versified by Sternhold and Hopkins. In his invaluable monograph, 'The Earliest English Music Printing' (Bibliographical Society's Illustrated Monographs, No. XI., 1903), Mr. Robert Steele assigned the 1560 edition of the Psalms (copy at Christ Church, Oxford) to Day, but in a private letter to the present writer Mr. Steele modifies his opinion by stating that the book is, 'almost certainly, not English, but printed in Geneva.' There is no doubt, however, about the 1561 edition having been issued from the Aldersgate press : here is its title, from the copy in the possession of the Society of Antiquaries :

Psalmes of Daud in Englishe Metre, by Thomas Sterneholde and others : conferred with the Ebrue, & in certain places corrected (as the sense of the Prophet required) and the Note ioyned withall.

¶ Veri mete to be vsed of all sortes of people priuatly for their godly solace and confort : laiying aparte all vngodlye Songes & Balledes, which tende only to the nourishing of vice, and corrupting of youth.

Newly set fourth and allowed, accordyng to the order appointed in the Quenes Maiesties Iniunctions, 1560.

Imprinted at London, by Ihon Day, dwelling over Aldersgate. Cum gratia & priuilegio Regiæ Maiestatis.

Colophon : Imprinted at London by Iohn Day, dwelling over Aldersgate, beneath Saint Martin's. These bokes are to be sold at his Shop under the gate. 1561. [Quarto.]

No less interesting is the title of 'The whole Psalmes,' issued in 1563, which reads :

THE WHOLE PSALMES in foure partes, whiche may be song to al musically instrumentes, set forth for the encrease of vertue : and abolishyng of other vayne and triflyng ballades. [Small Oblong.]

This book was issued in four separate parts—Tenor, Contra Tenor, Medius, and Bassus. Three of the four parts are enriched by an illustration which is reproduced below from Mr. Alfred Littleton's fine copy of this rare Psalter. The picture represents a man instructing his wife and children in the art of music.

An equally interesting Psalter, which appears to have escaped the notice of some bibliographers, is the Utenhove Psalter, which came from Mr. Day's printing-press, in the Dutch language. The title reads :

Hondert Psalmen Dauids. Mitsgaders het ghesangk Marie, t'ghesangk Zacharie, t'ghesangk Simeons, de thien Gheboden, de artikels des Gheloofs, t'ghebed des Heeren, &c. Ouerghesett in Nederlandschen dichte, door Ian Wtenhove.

AN OLD-WORLD IMPRINT.

Jan Utenhove, the compiler of this selection of 100 Psalms, was a Dutch refugee and reformer who came to London in 1548. During Mary's reign he absented himself from England, but returned on the accession of Elizabeth and died, in London, in the year 1565. Utenhove was evidently an important man, for in 1560 he was the chief elder of the well-known Dutch Church in Austinfriars, in the City of London, and we read of him as 'a man of noble rank and quality, and formerly assistant to a "Lasco," a minister of the church.' A man of culture, Elder Utenhove set to work to prepare a metrical Psalter for the use of his fellow refugees and fellow worshippers at the Dutch Church, and with practical wisdom translated 100 Psalms for the congregation's 'godly solace and comfort.' The preface to this Psalter—in Dutch, of course—is a most interesting one. It appears that an earlier translation made by him had been 'mutilated and altered' without his consent, but that his present book 'will give you [Christian reader] a better understanding as regards the purity and sincerity of the eternal and saving truth of God.' After a modest request that those who use the book will 'overlook any shortcomings in the translation which may not sufficiently impress you' (i.e., the worshipper), he begs, 'in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, that no one will lightly take upon himself to alter these my translations in any way or under any pretext.' A certain author once said that if he were to translate the Bible he would render a familiar verse thus: 'Printers have persecuted me without a cause.' Utenhove appears to have suffered in a similar manner, because towards the end of his Preface he refers to 'the unsatiable cupidity of many book-printers, who daily cause an unspeakable amount of harm to the well-being of the community.' He then goes on to say that he has chosen Master Jan Day to be his printer, 'whose piety is sufficiently known.' The illustration on the opposite page is a facsimile of the last page of Mr. Littleton's copy of this interesting and little-known book. Another Dutch Psalter by Utenhove, 'in Nederlandischer songs-ryme,' published in 1566, after his death, was printed by Day (16<sup>mo</sup>): on the title-page the compiler is described as 'Ian Wtenhoue van Ghent.'

The edition of the English psalter which John Day issued in 1572 contains the following interesting note, and cast in a distinctly educational vein. Was it from the distinguished printer's own pen? :

TO THE READER.

Thou shalt vnderstand (gentle Reader) that I haue (for the helpe of those that are desyrous to learne to syng) caused a new Print of Note to be made with letters to be ioyned to euerie Note. Whereby thou mayst know how to call euerie Note by his right name, so that with a very little diligence (as thou art taught in the Introduction printed heertofore in the Psalmes) thou mayst the more easilie by the vewing of these letters, come to the knowledge of perfect Solfyng: wherby easely thou mayst sing the Psalmes the more spedely and easier: The letters be these V for Vt, R for Re, M for My, F for Fa, S for Sol, L for La. Thus where you seest any letter ioyned by the note, you may easilie call him by his right name, as by these two examples you may the better perceiue.

Thus I committe thee vnto him that liueth for euer, who graunt that we sing wyth our hartes and mindes vnto the glorie of hys holy name. Amen.

The first Psalter printed by Day was probably that known to have been compiled by Archbishop Parker (1560)—'The whole Psalter translated into English Metre, which containeth an hundreth and fifty Psalmes.' As an account of this interesting book,—in which Tallis's famous evening hymn-tune first appeared—was given in THE MUSICAL TIMES of November, 1903 (p. 722), there is no need to repeat the details here. This was the first attempt made by one person to metricise the entire Psalter.

We may for the moment leave 'The hole psalter translated into englishe myter,' as his printing license describes this important publication, and refer to some other works printed by Day. And here it may be mentioned that although he began to print in 1546 he was not admitted to the Livery of the Stationers' Company until 1561; between 1564 and 1575 he was chosen warden on four separate occasions, and became master in 1580. 'A work of prodigious bulk, expense, and labour'—to quote Dibdin—was the first edition of what is known as Foxe's Book of Martyrs, printed by Day in 1563 (folio) with the title 'Acts and monuments of these latter and perillous dayes . . . by John Foxe.' Concerning this far-famed publication Dibdin (in his 'Typographical Antiquities,' 1819), says: 'The department of art alone must have been very important. The cuts are numerous; and the subjects are generally drawn, composed, and engraved with very considerable skill. They have a freedom and force worthy of some of the more celebrated foreign artists; by whom, in all probability, they were executed. . . . The first letter, C, of the dedication [to Queen Elizabeth] is decorated in a most elaborate manner, by the portraits of her Majesty and her three counsellors of state . . . there is not, perhaps, throughout the volume a more finished specimen of the art of engraving than that which is exhibited in this magnificent letter. . . . Such was the popularity of the work, and the rapidity of the sale or such fondness for it by the printer, that not fewer than three subsequent editions of it issued from the press of Day: namely, the second in the year 1570, the third in 1576, and the fourth in 1583.'

Wood says that 'on the accession of Elizabeth Foxe returned to the mansion of his old patron, the Duke of Norfolk, at Christ Church, in London: from whence he travelled weekly every Monday to the house of John Day, the printer, to consummate his Acts and Monuments of the Church.' Among the many squibs that the Book of Martyrs brought into existence, this, written in a blank leaf at the end of a MS. of the 'Pricke of Conscience,' at the Bodleian Library, may be quoted:

The grave counsell of Gravesend barge
Gevethe Jhon Daye a pryvilege large
To put this in prynt for his gaynes
Because in the Legend of Iyes he takethe paynes
Commandinge other upon pyne of slavery That none prynt this but Jhon Daye, the prynter of Foxe his Knavery.

A less hostile reference to John Day took this form:

He set a Fox to write how martyrs runne
By death to type.

A quaint dedication of Day's may be quoted from: it appears in the 'Commentaries of Peter Martir' (1564) and reads thus: 'To the ryght honourable, my most singular good Lord and Maister the Lord Robert Duddley, Earle of Leicester, K.G., and Maister of her Maiesties horse . . . Hauing had nothing meeter wherby to expresse my faithfull hart, good mynde, & duty to your honourable Lordshyp, then thys the simple labour of my plowe: the fruite whereof cannot be but yours, that are ouner of me.—Your Lordships humble, faithfull & redy seruant John Daye.'

Reference has been made to a Dutch Psalter printed by Day: from his press came, in 1568, a French book, entitled 'Le Theatre, &c., par le Seigneur Jean Vander Nort.' In the following year (1569) he issued 'A Booke of Christian Prayers,' known as Queen Elizabeth's prayer-book, of which every page is ornamented with 'fine cuts, done from the greatest masters,' in addition to a portrait of Good Queen Bess on her knees.

JOHN DAY'S DEVICE FROM UTENHOVE'S
'HONDERT PSALMEN DAUIDS.'

A year later he printed the first English translation of Euclid thus entitled:

The Elements of Geometrie of the most auncient Philosopher EVCLIDE of Megara. Faithfully (now first) translated into the Englishe tongue, by H. Billingsley, Citizen of London. Whereunto are annexed certaine Scholies, Annotations, and Inuentions of the best mathematicians, both of time past and of our age. [Folio, 1570.]

Another educational publication bore the following title:

The Scholemaster Or plaine and perfite way of teachyng children, to vnderstand, write, and speake, the Latin tong, but specially purposed for the priuate brynging vp of youth in Ientlemen and Noble mens houses, and commodious also for all such, as haue forgot the Latin tonge, and would, by themselves, without a Scholemaster, in short tyme, and with small paynes, recouer à sufficient habilitie (sic), to vnderstand, write, and speake Latin. ¶ By ROGER ASCHAM. An. 1570.

A secular music book, Whythorne's 'Songes,' came from Day's press in 1571; it is entitled:

Songes of three, fower, and fīue voyces, composed and made by Thomas Whythorne, gent. the which Songes be of sundry sortes, that is to say, some long, some short, some hard, some easie to be songe, and some betwene both, also some solemne, and some pleasant or merry, so that according to the skill of the singers (not being musitians) and disposition or delite of the hearers, they may here find Songes for their contentation and liking. Now newly published. An. 1571.

At London. Printed by Iohn Daye, dwelling ouer Aldersgate. [Tenor. Contratenor. Medius. Triplex. Bassus.]

At the end of the Tenor Title (in the Britwell copy) is the following notational information:

At ye end of this Book ye shall finde an aduertisement concerning the use of ye flats and sharps yt are set with this musicke also of ye most needful faults to be amended yt are escaped in ye printing of these fine Books.

In the year 1572 John Day had a large stock of books valued at from £2,000 to £3,000, a very large sum in those days, and 'living under Aldersgate, an obscure corner of the city, he wanted a good vent for them,' so Strype, in his 'Life' of Archbishop Parker tells us. To further quote from this source of information:

Whereupon his [Day's] friends, who were the learned, procured from the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's a lease of a little shop to be set up in St. Paul's church-yard. Whereupon he got framed a neat handsome shop. It was but little and low, and flat roofed and leaded like a terrace, railed and posted, fit for men to stand upon in any triumph or shew; but could not in any wise hurt and deface the same. This cost him forty or fifty pounds. But φθονεὶ δὲ τέκλον, his brethren the booksellers envied him, and by their interest got the Mayor and Aldermen to forbid the setting it up, though they had nothing to do there, but by power. Upon this the Archbishop [Parker, of Canterbury] brought his business before the Treasurer [Lord Burghley] and interceded for him, that he would move the Queen to set her hand to certain letters that he had drawn up in the Queen's name to the city, in effect that Day might be permitted to go forward with his building. Whereby, he said, his honour would deserve well of Christ's church, and of the prince and state.

Curiously enough, however, the new shop in St. Paul's Churchyard is only mentioned in the imprints of the year 1578, thus: 'At London, Printed by John Daye, dwelling ouer Aldersgate. And are to be solde at his long shop, at the West doore of Paules.' The reference in the above quotation from Strype to the terraced-roof plan of the 'neat handsome shop' in St. Paul's Churchyard and its fitness 'for men to stand upon in any triumph or shew' is interesting, and recalls the scene of Queen Victoria's Diamond Jubilee in 1897.

In the year of this fresh acquisition to his business premises, Day was entrusted with the typography of the first privately printed book. It was written by Archbishop Parker and is entitled 'De Antiquitate Britannicæ Ecclesiæ & Priuilegiis Ecclesiæ Cantuariensis, cum Archiepiscopis eiusdem 70. An. Dom. 1572.'

This rare book is printed throughout, except the Latin preface, 'in a full-sized, close, but flowing italic letter.' And here it may be mentioned that John Day was the first to cut Roman and italic type uniformly; before his time these two founts were not mixed, and were not cut to range. In a letter addressed to Lord Burghley, Queen Elizabeth's right-hand man, Archbishop Parker says: 'I have spoken to Daie, the printer, to caste a new Italian letter, which he is doinge, and it will cost him xl. marks.' This is doubtless the 'flowing italic letter' which in the Archbishop's book usurped the black-letter type then in use.

Occasional Notes.

Where gripyng grefes the hart would wounde,
And dolefull dumps the mynde oppresse,
There music with her silver sound
With spede is wont to send redresse.
Of troubled mynds, in every sore
Swete musicke hath a salve in store.

In joy it makes our mirth abound;
In woe it cheers our heavy sprights;
Bestraught heads relief hath found,
By Musics pleasant, swete delights:
Our senses all, what shall I say more?
Are subject unto Musics lore.

The gods by Music have their praise;
The life, the soul, therein doth joy:—
For as the Romayn poet says:
In seas, whom pirates would destroy,
A dolphin saved from death most sharp,—
Arion playing on his harp.

O heavenly gift! that rules the mind,
Ev'n as the stern doth rule the ship!
O Music! whom the gods assigned
To comfort man, whom cares would nip!
Since then both man and beast doth move,
What beast is he, will thee disprove?

RICHARD EDWARDS (1523-1566).

To the long list of incidental music to plays, must be added the strains specially composed by Mr. Coleridge-Taylor for Mr. Stephen Phillips's 'Nero,' magnificently produced by Mr. Tree at His Majesty's Theatre on January 25. The composer keeps himself in the background, so much so indeed that he might very well have more strongly asserted himself in the Processional March accompanying Nero's entry into Rome, in his chariot drawn by three milk-white steeds abreast. Some exceedingly happy touches characterise the music, especially a charming 'Eastern Dance' in Act II. Considering that so many people improvise a conversational accompaniment to theatre music, we are glad to hear that portions of Mr. Coleridge-Taylor's 'Nero' music have been cast in Suite form, and will shortly be published. This will render them available for concert-room performance, where they can be listened to with undivided attention.

The 'Napoleon of conductors'—we need scarcely say he is Dr. Hans Richter—has more than sustained his great reputation by his masterful conductorship of two recent London Symphony Orchestra concerts at Queen's Hall. As the years go on, Dr. Richter's hand loses none of its cunning, and the same all-conquering generalship, unflinching resourcefulness, dignified fervour, and broad-minded versatility are as much in evidence as ever. His thoroughness, too, merits the highest praise. An instance of this fine trait has come to our knowledge in connection with the preparation of a young Englishman's new work, at the rehearsal of which he took infinite pains and spared himself in time and trouble not a whit in order to secure the best results. Conscientious work such as this deserves full acknowledgment and again proves that Dr. Richter has full claim to Napoleonic distinction in wielding the bâton.

Mr. Edwin York Bowen, the young English composer above referred to, was born in London on February 22, 1884. He received his earliest instruction in music from his mother, a gifted pianist, who laid a good foundation for her son's technique of the instrument. After studying under Mr. Alfred Izard, young Bowen, then aged fourteen and 'in knickerbockers,' became a student at the Royal Academy of Music, through gaining, in 1898, the Erard Scholarship (pianoforte) tenable for three years. His professors at Tenterden Street were, for harmony and composition, Mr. Battison Haynes (a short time only, until Haynes's premature death) and Mr. Frederick Corder. The pianoforte he studied throughout the whole of his Academy course—seven years—under Mr. Tobias Matthay, of whom and of whose remarkable method he speaks in terms of the highest praise. He also took up the clarinet and horn, and he is able to take his place in the orchestra, or accompany a church service on the organ. He appears to have had a voracious appetite for prizes at the Academy. In addition to the Scholarship above mentioned, he gained in competition the following awards: Hine prize (composition) in 1899; Heathcote Long prize (pianoforte) in 1900; Sterndale Bennett prize (pianoforte) and the Charles Lucas medal (composition) in 1902; the Walter Macfarren prize (pianoforte) and the Dove prize (general excellence, &c.) in 1903; besides some smaller prizes and all the medals and certificates of the Academy; also the Musicians' Company's medal in 1905. He is an Associate and was a sub-professor of his alma mater.

Mr. York Bowen concentrates his musical energies on the pianoforte—to which he devotes five hours a day—and to composition. He has played at the Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts (Tchaikovsky's B flat minor pianoforte concerto), and he is announced to perform, for the first time, his new Pianoforte concerto (in one movement) at an approaching Philharmonic concert. His other important compositions include a Concert overture (played at one of the Patron's Fund concerts); a Symphonic poem, 'Tasso'; a Concertstück for seven instruments—pianoforte, string quartet, clarinet, and horn (Broadwood concerts); and two sonatas for pianoforte and viola. The production of his 'Symphonic Fantasia,' under Dr. Richter (who, by-the-way, has promised to play it at Manchester) is referred to on p. 189. 'This work has absolutely no programme,' the young composer definitely asserts. 'I am very strong on absolute music,' he says; and adds, 'while I have been very lucky so far in getting my things performed, I only wish that conductors and others would give new works a second hearing, so as to give them a better chance of life.' Mr. York Bowen's future career will be watched with interest and expectation. May all success attend his artistic aims and earnest endeavours.

The letters which we frequently receive from various parts of the world in appreciation of THE MUSICAL TIMES are exceedingly gratifying. It is not our custom to publish these pleasant communications, but an exception may be made to a letter recently received from a bank manager in Western Australia, dated January 4, 1906, which concludes thus: 'I wish to tender you a 119° appreciation—our temperature to-day, and this is more than fff—of the excellent value I find THE MUSICAL TIMES. I receive magazines dealing with the occult sciences, banking, philately, business, &c.; but I am glad to acknowledge that the one devoted to Music is that most eagerly anticipated and most eagerly devoured—aye, even down to the advertisements. Yours &c., HOMELAND.' Although the temperature in the Old country is lower than in Western Australia, we very warmly thank our 119° friend for his generous words of appreciation.

Among the papers of the late J. O. Grimm, hundreds of letters from Madame Schumann, Brahms and Dr. Joachim have been found, as well as the original autograph of Brahms's Op. 1 (the pianoforte Sonata in C) and the lovely song 'O versenk' (from Op. 3). There are also several compositions by the master which were copied out for Grimm's use by Brahms's faithful friend, Clara Schumann. The 'Missa canonica,' for four female voices, the discovery of which we have already announced, exists in two copies. The work consists of four movements, Kyrie, Sanctus, Benedictus ('a wonderful piece' according to Grimm's dictum in a letter to the composer) and Agnus Dei.

'L'entente cordiale' which so happily exists between France and Great Britain has recently been further cemented by the interchange of municipal and musical courtesies. What can be more natural than that the chords of goodwill should be strengthened by the harmony of sweet sounds? This question finds an answer in the visit to England last month of the famous band of the Garde Républicaine from Paris, who delighted English audiences by their refined and admirable performances. This is not the first time that a French military band has been welcomed to our shores, though the greeting was never so warm-hearted as at the present time. In October, 1854, during the Crimean war, the celebrated band of the Imperial regiment 'Les Guides' played at the Crystal Palace in combination with twelve of our chief military bands. The French band—of fifty-six performers and using the then newly-invented instruments of the famous Adolphe Sax—gave a concert at Exeter Hall amid a perfect furore of enthusiasm, evinced especially in the brilliant interpretations they gave of the 'William Tell' and 'Zampa' overtures. Before their departure, the 'Guides' were entertained by the Royal Artillery Band at Woolwich. Then in 1862, the band of the Zouaves and of the Gendarmerie of the Imperial Guard, delighted English folk by the performances given at the Royal Horticultural Gardens at Kensington, during the Exhibition. To return to the visit of the band of the Garde Républicaine, which made its first appearance in a series of promenade concerts at Covent Garden Theatre on February 17. Under the conductorship of M. Gabriel Parès, the band of eighty players performed a varied and interesting programme in excellent style. The music, almost entirely French, selected for the first concert, included the following works:

Bizet	-	-	-	-	L'Arlésienne (suite).
Lalo	-	-	-	-	Le Roi d'Ys (overture).
Massenet	-	-	-	-	Manon (selection).
Massenet	-	-	-	-	Les deux pigeons (suite).
Saint-Saëns	-	-	-	-	Coronation March.
Saint-Saëns	-	-	-	-	Le Rouet d'Omphale.

To the foregoing must be added a bright and effective overture entitled 'Richilde,' composed by the conductor, M. Parès; an effective arrangement of Handel's variations known as 'The harmonious blacksmith'; a fantasia on Hérold's 'Pré aux Clercs' for clarinet, which served to display the exceptional skill of M. Paradis, a most gifted player on that instrument and, of course, the National Anthem of France and our own 'God save the King.'

After the first concert given by the Band of the Garde Républicaine, the members were entertained at supper at the Trocadero Restaurant by the Band of the Coldstream Guards in a warm stream of true English hospitality meted out to their genial French confrères. Lieutenant J. Mackenzie Rogan, Bandmaster of the Coldstreams, presided, and among the guests were Colonel A. E. Codrington (Commanding Officer of the Regiment), M. de Fleurian (Second Secretary of the French Embassy), Commandant Huguet (French Military Attaché), Baron Mercier de l'Ostende (French Naval Attaché), Sir Alexander Mackenzie, and others. After Colonel Codrington had proposed 'The French Nation,' and Commandant Huguet had replied thereto, the Chairman gave in generous terms the toast of the evening—'Health and prosperity to the Band of La Garde Républicaine.' This was supported by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, who, in the course of his remarks, said:

He was assuming a privilege, which he knew would be readily granted to him by his own colleagues, in speaking on behalf of a still larger number of musicians than those present, who represented an even wider field and many varied branches of their art. They would, he knew, deeply regret it were they not permitted to join in and strengthen the public chorus of warm appreciation and cordial esteem which must be still ringing in the ears of M. Parès and his excellent instrumentalists even at that late hour. Whatever qualities our native musicians might or might not possess, there was one virtue he fancied which we could claim without much danger of contradiction, and that was our eclecticism, our all-round knowledge and appreciation of all that was distinguished and estimable in the art of the nations. Indeed, it was questionable whether another city existed in which art, irrespective of its national sources, or from where it came, was cultivated in so wide and cosmopolitan a spirit, and to so much purpose, as just this London of ours. They might perhaps consider that as a somewhat doubtful or negative species of merit, seeing that, strictly speaking, no other condition, no other attitude towards universal art ought to prevail anywhere. However, M. Parès would soon realize that he and the music he brought with him were at home here, since for many years we had had constant opportunity of knowing and admiring the creations of the great French masters of the past—as well as the works of the most prominent composers of the present. And there could be but very few, if any, of the distinguished artists and executants of France with whose powers we were not perfectly familiar. The advantage was ours. To catch some of that graceful elegance and wonderful brilliance which had ever been distinguishing features in all departments of French art must surely be an object for which every student—young or old—should strive, a goal he should endeavour to reach. These native and rare qualities were once more strikingly exemplified in the performances of the Garde, and were both quickly recognized and enthusiastically applauded by the audience that night. It was to be expected, and speaking for English musicians generally, he thought he might say that, no matter to what regiment they might individually belong, they were neither slow to perceive nor to acknowledge the advent of a good thing in any branch of the service of music. With the enthusiastic reception which the city of Paris ungrudgingly accorded only a few weeks ago to the London Symphony Orchestra fresh in our memory,—and the gratification which that event gave them all was lasting—we could not but view this visit of M. Parès and his band as another weighty link in the rapidly strengthening chain of good intent between French and English artists. Significant as it was of a clearer and better understanding of the music of both nations, of a reciprocal desire to know more of each other artistically and personally, we hailed its inevitable consequences and most desirable results with the greatest confidence and satisfaction. And he felt he was only voicing the thought of all his colleagues when he assured M. Parès that we desired nothing better than a long and unbroken continuance of these friendly and encouraging exchanges of amity between the musicians of France and England.

M. Parès, who was warmly cheered on rising to respond, replied in French:

He expressed his sincere thanks to Colonel Codrington and Lieutenant Rogan, as well as to the band of the Coldstream guards representing as it did the bands of the British army, for the tokens of deep sympathy which they were giving them at the present time. He and his colleagues were very proud of the honour that had been done them, but they were modest enough to attribute most of what had been said to the esteem in which the French army was held—that army of which they were proud to be an integral part. He would wish all his colleagues to recognize that the honour done them was really done to the French army. They would be wrong not to be proud of the sympathy which had been shown them since their arrival. With regard to their appearance at Covent Garden, he wished they could have shown their knowledge of foreign works, and especially of those of the British musicians, to a greater extent, but they had not had time to learn much of the work of British composers. He proposed, however, to put some of their compositions in his programmes when he returned to Paris. There was a technical difficulty in regard to performing foreign music to which he would venture to refer on that occasion. It was that the orchestration for military bands was not the same in all countries. If it were it would be better for everyone, and it would be of great assistance to the conductors of military bands. He hoped that they would be able to reach some middle way which would enable them to make known to each other the military music of all countries. That would be a most cordial and harmonious entente. He thanked the Press for the goodwill which it had shown to the Garde Républicaine. The Press had shown itself desirous of promoting the entente cordiale from the time of its inception and the visit of King Edward VII. to Paris until now. Finally he thanked Sir Alexander Mackenzie for the kind words he had spoken, which were appreciated all the more on account of the very high position which he occupied in the musical world. He wished he could say all that was in his heart, but that was impossible, and he could only conclude by asking them to drink to the success of military bands, to the health of the British Army, and to the health of the British people.

The function was in every way thoroughly successful and the evening—or rather the early morning—proved to be a very enjoyable one, the members of the two Bands fraternising in the most friendly manner. As showing that Scotland found a place at this entente cordiale supper, the proceedings ended with the singing of ‘Auld lang syne,’ to which followed the ‘Marseillaise’ and ‘God save the King.’

The following letter, from the veteran king of baritones, on the subject of pitch, will be read with interest :

TO THE EDITOR OF ‘THE MUSICAL TIMES.’

DEAR SIR,—I beg leave to call your attention to an error in THE MUSICAL TIMES for the present month. In ‘Answers to Correspondents’ you say ‘the high pitch was due to Costa, &c.,’ which is not correct.

I was paying him a visit about the time there was much talk about pitch, and I told him I understood he was responsible for the high pitch. He took out two tuning-forks from a drawer in his writing-table—one the pitch used before he conducted the Philharmonic Society and one of the pitch used during his conductorship—the latter was a shade, but a perceptible shade lower than the former.—I remain, dear Sir, yours faithfully, 67, Carlton Hill, N.W.

C. SANTLEY.

February 1, 1906.

While not in the least degree wishing to cross swords with Mr. Santley, it may not be without interest if we briefly state the facts of the case, basing our remarks on the information furnished by so acknowledged an authority as the late Alexander J. Ellis in his ‘History of musical pitch’ (1880). Under the head of ‘London concerts’ (pp. 329 and 334) he gives the following number of vibrations for the note A formerly adopted by the Philharmonic Society :

1846 to 1854.	Mean of Philharmonic	}	452·5
	under Costa Highest Philharmonic
			454·7

This difference is very trifling. When we turn to the same authority (Ellis) under ‘Opera’ we find which is a shade higher than the Philharmonic, from which Society Costa retired in 1854. Therefore, it is evident that Costa favoured the high pitch, or else, autocrat as he was, he would have taken steps to have it lowered, just as he introduced equal-temperament in the tuning of the Exeter Hall organ in 1848, and in the same year the employment of ladies to sing the alto part in the choruses at the Sacred Harmonic Society. Ellis says (p. 329) that, in 1874, Broadwood’s pitch was sharpened ‘at the suggestion of Mr. Charles Hallé’ to 454·7, as given above. He also records that when conducting the Wagner Festival concerts at the Royal Albert Hall in 1877, Wagner ‘complained bitterly of the inconvenience his singers had been put to, on account of the fact that the pitch they were obliged to sing to here was so much higher than that which they were accustomed to.’ The pitch of the Albert Hall organ is given by Ellis as 455·1. Is it not time that it was lowered to the French pitch, that which is now generally adopted?

The following letter appeared in the Athenæum of February 24 :

MOZART: A CORRECTION.

My attention has been drawn by Mr. J. S. Shedlock to a strange mistake in the new edition of Köchel’s ‘Thematic Catalogue of Mozart’s Works,’ which has recently been brought out by Count Paul von Waldersee. On p. 19 it is stated that the autograph anthem (which Köchel calls a madrigal!) presented by Leopold Mozart to the British Museum in 1765 bears in the margin (‘Auf dem Rande’) the following remarks: ‘This extremely curious and interesting Composition is not in Mozart’s handwriting (sic!),’ &c. In this description there are three mistakes: (1) the note—which is in the handwriting of Vincent Novello—is not in the margin of the autograph, but bound up with it, and mounted separately; (2) Novello spells the word ‘interesting’ correctly, and not with an additional s; (3) the word ‘not’ does not occur in the original.

As my name is mentioned in the preface to the new edition of Köchel as having supplied information with regard to the Mozart autographs in this country, I wrote to the publishers to inquire what was the origin of these strange mis-statements. In reply Count von Waldersee informs me that he is unable now to say where he derived his authority for inserting the word ‘not,’ and that he drew attention to the matter by adding ‘(sic!)’ to the copy. Count von Waldersee adds that he will take the opportunity of publishing this correction in a musical paper.

WM. BARCLAY SQUIRE.

The above communication refers to Mozart’s anthem ‘God is our refuge and strength,’ of which we gave a facsimile of the MS. in our February issue. It seems extraordinary that such a mistake could be made in so important a book of reference as a new edition of Köchel’s Mozart Catalogue. Even if any satisfactory explanation is forthcoming, the erroneous information is much to be regretted, especially as it more or less implicates Mr. W. Barclay Squire in a mis-statement for which he was in no way responsible.

Country concert criticisms continue to afford amusement. We read, in the report of a music-making in Yorkshire (the journal from which we quote is not the Yorkshire Post) that, in a violin sonata, ‘the octave passages were especially brought out and in perfect unison’; that a ‘talented artist fully realized the importance of the interlaced harmonies so profusely used by this composer’; and, lastly, there is a reference to ‘the able manner in which she (a lady violinist) held her corner in the quintet.’ We were always under the impression that the ‘corner’ performer was the special privilege of Christy Minstrels.

On February 17 a meeting of school teachers, conductors and others concerned with the Metropolitan Evening School Singing Classes, and the Choral Unions formed from the Classes, was held in the Marlborough Road (Blackfriars) School, for the purpose of conferring as to ways and means of expanding and improving the work, and to discuss the advisability of forming an Association of instructors. Mr. H. Way, Secretary of the West London Choral Union, presided. Dr. McNaught delivered an address on the work of the Classes and the Unions, and what they might do for London. Mr. Allen Gill spoke very highly of the results achieved. After an animated discussion it was agreed to form an Association, and a committee was elected to prepare a scheme.

The Evening School Classes and district Choral Unions bid fair to be important factors in the musical development of London. Not many people, even amongst those interested in musical education, are aware of the extent to which these State and rate-aided musical societies are quietly growing up. Evening Schools are supported by a Board of Education grant, and they meet in very comfortable quarters provided by the local rates, and the teachers are paid by the local education authority. The singing and other classes are open to adults of any age. As isolated classes were rarely able to gather a balanced choir, the idea of combining all the units in a district into a Choral Union was formed. There are now six of these Unions, all working at various programmes, which will be performed in large halls in April and May. Each Union has an orchestral class formed mainly for the purpose of providing the accompaniments. Amongst the music down for performance we note the following works: 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' (Coleridge-Taylor), 'The May Queen' (Bennett), 'May Day' (Macfarren), 'The First Walpurgis Night' (Mendelssohn). The size of the choirs is limited only by the accommodation available. The N.E. London Union having the Alexandra Palace as an arena commands the services of a choir of 1,200 voices. There are undoubtedly great possibilities of the expansion of such work in this vast city. Meantime the movement deserves encouragement and sympathy.

The 'English sheet' of the Journal of the International Music Society (February issue) furnishes some curious topographical information in regard to London—E. G. (capital letters, please, Mr. Printer):

Fleet Street, London, E.G.
Charing Cross Road, London, W.G.

Such gross errors might be avoided were the 'English sheet' to be printed 'not in Germany,' as then the careful 'readers' in English printing-offices, to whom writers are so greatly indebted, would E.C.-ly discover such misprints.

Overheard at Queen's Hall, after the recent performance of Richard Strauss's symphonic-poem, 'Don Quixote':

He. What did you think of the sheep music?

She. Not at all bad: but how many bleats are there in a baa? (Shades of Charles Lamb!)

A concert undertone. Blanche (to her fiancé, and pointing to the analytical programme): 'It can't be a nigger melody, dear, because the tune contains some white notes.'

Church and Organ Music.

THE NOMENCLATURE OF ORGAN STOPS.

Any book which throws light on this polyglottic subject deserves a welcome, therefore we greet with much satisfaction 'A Comprehensive Dictionary of Organ Stops' (The Vincent Music Co., Ltd.), which Mr. James Ingall Wedgwood has carefully compiled. Anyone who, judging from the mere title, might assume that this 'Dictionary' is a dry, technical book would soon realize that its pages are as readable as they are informing. That the work has been thoroughly done may be instanced by the space devoted to main subjects: e.g., Diapason, 12 pages; Mixture, 8 pages; Reed, 6 pages; Tuba and Vox humana each 4 pages; and Swell-box 2 pages. Research, too, is evident in such information as that a bearded dulciana by Snetzler is to be found at All Saints' Church, Pavement, York, thus giving an earlier instance of the introduction into England of beards to pipes than is usually supposed. The word 'helper,' associated with the organ at Leeds Parish Church during Wesley's organistship, is thus explained:

HELPER.—A stop, the function of which was to assist the speech, or improve the tone, of some other stop or stops. A helper was introduced by Bridge at Christ Church, Spitalfields (1730).

Mr. Wedgwood's erudition and investigations are productive of not a little humour. It is quite surprising to find how aviary-like organs have been, for instance, the stop named Adlerzug. How many Fellows of the Royal College of Organists, not to say the examiners of such, could give the use of that particular stop? It is

A mechanical movement setting in motion the wings of a huge eagle suspended over the organ and flying towards an artificial sun.

Mr. Wedgwood gives two instances (in Germany) of this eagleistic stop as being still in existence. Avicinum is also of the aviary type—'a few odd pipes bent down into water and so caused to emit a sputtering noise or twitter in imitation of birds.' The Cuckoo stop is 'an arrangement whereby the cuckoo was imitated by pipes speaking an interval between a major and a minor third apart,' while we are told that Hahn (cock) is a stop, found in some Continental organs, imitative of the crowing of the cock to announce the dawn of day (particularly Christmas-day), or reminiscent of St. Peter's denial. Magdeburg Cathedral (1604).

Beasts share with birds in the nomenclature of organ stops, though not in the sense of 'a beast of a stop,' as some organists are disposed to designate obnoxious registers. The Bärpfefe is a reed stop of smothered growling tone, introduced into the organ in the 16th century, in imitation of the growling of the bear.

Dangerous, no less than sly, is a stop associated with the fox, called Fuchsschwank, of which we read in these interesting pages:

One of the strange accessories sometimes found in old German organs. A stop-knob bearing the inscription 'Noli me tangere' (Do not touch) was attached to the console. As a reward for their curiosity, persons who, regardless of this injunction, touched the knob, thereby set free the catch of a spring, causing a huge fox-tail to fly out into their faces. Sometimes the fox-tail was simply attached to the stop knob. Having once drawn the tail out of the jamb, it was a matter of some difficulty to replace it.

No less humorous is the Hummel stop :

A device for causing two of the largest pipes in the organ to speak simultaneously, originally with the intent of summarily arousing such poor mortals as succumbed to the frailties of the flesh and snored in the sermon.

Mr. Wedgwood rather cruelly adds : 'Were some enterprising builder to revive this stop in our own time, no doubt his services would be much in request.'

But we must pass on to notice some 'elements' stops, of which one is called Syringa, in the Exhibition, York. 'Why it received such an extraordinary title is unknown ; it has even been suggested that the stop was provided in case of fire !' In that case there would be no need for the engines to play upon it. A Grêle (hail) stop formerly existed in the organ at St. Sulpice, Paris, while the Storm pedal—which draws down successively six or seven notes from the bottom of the pedal-board upwards—is, according to our author, to be found at Manchester Town Hall, Sheffield Albert Hall, and, we may add, at Doncaster Parish Church. What more natural than sunshine after a storm? Thus we find that Sonnenzug is 'a stop setting into motion an imitation sun suspended over the organ,' of which an instance may be found in the Garrison Church, Berlin (Joachim Wagner). An equally silent, if less brilliant stop is the Vox ineffabilis, which is thus described :

A facetious pleasantry indulged in by some mediæval organ builders. The stops so named extended no further than dummy stop handles ! Sycophantic organ builders take note !

We must, however, stop quoting from a book which is sure to interest many readers. It only remains to be added that this 'Dictionary' contains many illustrations of organ pipes, in addition to a useful bibliography. In a future edition an index of names and places would be a valuable adjunct to a book which is excellent in every way.

CATHEDRAL SERVICES FOR THE PEOPLE.

The example set by Gloucester nearly a full score of years ago, and recently followed by Chichester, of providing an evening of sacred music for the people in those stately fanes is one to be commended and still further emulated. In this connection it may not be without interest to reprint the letter written to the Editor of the Gloucester Journal by the then Dean of Gloucester (now Master of Trinity), setting forth the object and scope of these services, which owe their origin to his thoughtfulness. Dr. Butler's letter speaks for itself, and it is hardly necessary to say that his trusted lieutenant in the inauguration and initial carrying out of so excellent a proposal was Mr. C. Lee Williams, organist of Gloucester Cathedral from 1882 to 1897.

MUSIC FOR THE MASSES.

To the Editor of the Gloucester Journal.

SIR,—May I be permitted to invite attention through your columns to an arrangement which may, we trust, be acceptable to all classes of our fellow-citizens, and not least to the poorest and those who have least leisure?

During the next six months a performance of sacred music, conducted by Mr. C. L. Williams, will be given in the Nave of the Cathedral on the evenings of the second and fourth Thursdays of each month. The music will consist partly of singing and partly of playing on the organ.

Our object is not so much to advance the cultivation of this great and noble art—for which important end other means are elsewhere provided—as to bring under the notice of those who are least instructed in music the simplest, most pathetic, and most majestic passages from oratorios, anthems, chorales, and hymns.

It is believed that such passages, as they become familiar, will prove to many hundreds of our citizens a delight at all times, a comfort in sorrow, and a real help to religious devotion.

Offers of assistance from competent singers will be gratefully welcomed, and may be sent at once to C. L. Williams, Esq., Palace Yard. In all cases the assistance will be given gratuitously. Those who offer it will, it is hoped, recognise and value the Christian privilege of enabling others to share those treasures of refined enjoyment and spiritual refreshment which have become precious to themselves.

The success of our plan will depend largely on ministers of religion, employers of labour, and masters and mistresses of families. It is in their power to notify and recommend to those whom we chiefly have in view the opportunity which is now offered to them. I venture respectfully to ask for their kind sympathy and co-operation in what they will feel, I think, to be a Christian work.

I cannot end this letter without expressing my very grateful acknowledgments to Mr. Williams for the hearty zeal with which he has entered into our proposal. Without him we could have done nothing. On him must necessarily lie by far the chief part of the burthen.

The Cathedral doors will be opened on each of the Thursdays in question at 7.45 p.m. The performance will begin punctually at 8.0 p.m., and last for about an hour. Printed copies of the words sung will be found in the seats. Admission will, of course, be free.

I am, Sir, faithfully yours,

H. MONTAGU BUTLER.

The Deanery, Sept. 23rd, 1886.

A cathedral organist says that when he officiates at a wedding he always plays a certain chorus from Handel's 'Samson,' because of its unrivalled appropriateness. The chorus thus honoured is a setting of these words :

To man God's universal law
Gave power to keep his wife in awe ;
Thus shall his life be ne'er dismay'd,
By female usurpation sway'd.

Up to the present, however, this particular cathedral organist—who, by-the-way, is a bachelor—has not had the courage to cause the above chorus to be sung at any nuptial ceremony for the music of which he has been responsible.

Mr. Frederick Hammond Burstall, organist and choir-master of St. Peter's Church (the Cathedral), Liverpool, has been the recipient of a gratifying testimonial in appreciation of his twenty-five years' work in connection with the cathedral services which he established a quarter of a century ago. The presentation—made at the Church House (Liverpool), on February 15—took the form of an address, a gold watch and chain, and a bracelet for Mrs. Burstall. In handing these tangible tokens of esteem to Mr. Burstall, the Bishop of Liverpool spoke of his strong admiration for him as a musician and a very warm personal regard for him as a man. Dr. A. L. Peace, speaking on behalf of the Liverpool organists, said that they all held Mr. Burstall in the highest esteem, adding that it would be difficult to name any cathedral choir of higher efficiency than that of St. Peter's; and Sir Edward Russell voiced the feelings of the citizens in paying a tribute of honour to whom honour was due. In returning thanks for the gifts Mr. Burstall, who is a native of the great city on the Mersey, said that it was always his ambition to become a cathedral organist, and, after referring to the initial difficulties attendant on forming the first choir for the cathedral service, stated that they had now a repertoire of 500 anthems and 92 services. The address contained photographs of the two Bishops of Liverpool, Rectors Stewart and Kempthorne, and the recipient, together with a water-colour sketch of St. Peter's Church.

At a special musical service held in St. John's College Chapel, Cambridge, on Sunday evening, February 4, the following music was performed: 'As pants the hart,' for solo voices, chorus, strings, hautboy and organ (Handel); Concerto da Chiesa for strings and organ (Dall'Abaco); 'The surrender of the soul to the Everlasting Love,' motet for double chorus (Cornelius); and Bach's organ prelude and fugue in G minor, played by Mr. W. L. Raynes. Mr. Cyril B. Rootham conducted.

The Requiem of Brahms was sung for the first time in King's Lynn on January 29, the performance taking place in St. Margaret's Parish Church, of which Dr. Burney was at one time organist. A chorus of sixty-five voices was accompanied by organ (Dr. A. H. Mann), pianoforte (Mrs. Arthur Shirley), two flutes, clarinet, two cornets, two trombones and tympani. The soloists were Miss Margaret Alvis and Mr. Freeman E. Wright. Mr. Arthur Shirley, organist and choirmaster of the church, conducted.

The London Sunday School Choir gave its usual Spring concert at the Royal Albert Hall on February 7, when the choir and orchestra of 1,200 performers had the valuable co-operation of Miss Ada Crossley and Mr. Ben Davies. Miss Margaret Layton also sang, and Mr. Horace G. Holmes was at the organ. Mr. W. Whiteman conducted various choruses, which—as indeed all the programme—gave great satisfaction to a large audience.

Dr. Arthur W. Pollitt, organist and director of the choir at St. Mary's Church for the Blind, Liverpool, has been presented by the congregation of the church with a set of full-dress Mus. Doc. robes, as a mark of their appreciation of his work.

Mr. Fred Jones, for twelve years a lay-clerk of St. David's Cathedral, died on February 16, aged thirty-two years.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Reviews.

Musical Criticisms. By Arthur Johnstone. With a Memoir of the author by Henry Reece and Oliver Elton.

[Sherratt & Hughes, Manchester and London.]

Few journalistic musical critics would care to republish the recorded opinions of past years, formed as they must too often have been under stress and before novel developments in the art could be sufficiently assimilated to justify positive judgment. Yet, whether such criticisms are found ultimately to be bad or good, blind or far-seeing, at least they often form interesting illustrations of the evolution of trained opinion and, incidentally, their resurrection may serve to chasten the critic of to-day who may be inclined to dogmatise too freely. It is hardly likely that the modesty and habit of self-effacement of the late Mr. Arthur Johnstone would have permitted him to reprint the criticisms on musical matters he contributed to the Manchester Guardian. No doubt had he lived he would have preferred to write a better proportioned contribution to the historical and critical literature of the art. Nevertheless, his friends are, we think, fully justified in rescuing from oblivion selections from the exceedingly able, highly educational, and deeply interesting articles by which Mr. Johnstone made a reputation not excelled in his day by any other newspaper critic in the country.

The volume includes a memoir of Mr. Johnstone, from which we learn that he was born in 1861, and after going to Radley College and elsewhere he entered Keble College in 1880, and after a few years, not very happily spent, he left Oxford without taking a degree and entered the Cologne Conservatoire of Music, where he stayed just long enough to convince himself that lack of early training made it impossible for him to excel as an executant. He determined to become a modern language teacher, and in 1888 returned to England and now took his degree at Oxford. He then went to Russia as a tutor and acquired the language. On returning home he accepted a mastership at the Edinburgh Academy. Whilst there he contributed articles on various matters to The Manchester Guardian, and in 1896 he accepted the post of musical critic to that journal. Practically all his life had been an unconscious but fit preparation for the task to which he now untiringly and enthusiastically devoted himself. His intimate acquaintance with foreign languages and modern literature, his broad artistic training and literary skill, combined with a fine, if somewhat austere taste, enabled him to write luminous criticisms on music, plays, and art matters generally that were eagerly read, enjoyed and sometimes feared by a constantly widening public. Even if we are unable to agree with opinions expressed in these criticisms, we could not but admire their force and lucidity, or fail to derive educational stimulus from their constant and apt allusiveness. It is impossible to estimate the influence Mr. Johnstone must have exerted in creating critical standards in the minds of Northern amateurs.

The book quotes criticisms on most of the great musicians. We are told that the 'St. Matthew' Passion is the greatest work of sacred musical art in existence; Berlioz is described as the Columbus of music, for he discovered the new world; the lack of appreciation of Liszt as a composer is deplored; the first three sections of 'The Ring' are declared to be satisfactory, but 'Götterdämmerung' is said to be a monster of a disordered imagination. It is suggested that Strauss has a deliberate intention to abolish rhythm, or, at least, that he systematically subordinates the rhythmic interest, whereas with Tchaikovsky this interest enormously predominates. Dvořák it is impossible to class, but his music is full of racy and full-blooded melody. Mr. Johnstone was one of the first to recognise the genius of Elgar. 'Caractacus,' 'Gerontius,' the 'Enigma' Variations, the 'Cockaigne' overture, 'The Apostles,' are all discussed. He misses in 'The Apostles' the crowning artistic unity he finds in 'Gerontius.' Strauss is dealt with in twenty-three interesting pages, and his genius is recognised with some qualifications. Thus it is said that the battle scene in 'Heldenleben' is an atrocity, an unparalleled extravagance, a monstrous excrescence, a product of musical insanity bearing no trace whatever of that genius which produced the lovely and perfect 'Tod und Verklärung.' One of the most valuable sections of the book is a criticism of the philosophy of Nietzsche and its influence on music. We have said enough to show that the book with all its inevitable limitations of due proportion can be read with interest and profit by all earnest students of the art.

Mr. Johnstone was married in June, 1904, and died on December 16 of that year. He had just completed his forty-third year, and, in the plenitude of his powers, was apparently entering upon the happiest and most useful period of his life.

The Oriana collection of early Madrigals, British and Foreign.

[Novello & Co., Limited.]

This splendid collection and exemplification of the skill in polyphonic writing for voices exhibited by our forefathers, will no doubt be welcomed by choral societies large and small. It is not to our credit as a nation that, with our proud reputation for choral performance, the fine madrigals included in the famous collection known as 'The Triumphs of Oriana,' published in 1601, in praise of Queen Elizabeth, are so little known by British choralists. It may be that this neglect has arisen from the fact that the music was not published in a popularly available form. If so, the new, cheap octavo edition now issued under the aptly chosen title given above, and edited by Mr. Lionel Benson, who is one of the most distinguished authorities upon music of this class, effectually removes this obstacle. Although only twenty-five madrigals were included in the first edition of 'The Triumphs,' four others were apparently composed for the series, and these are therefore included in the present edition. But, as indicated in the title, the 'Oriana' series will also contain many other madrigals by both foreign and British composers, and of these fourteen are at present issued. They include some already well-known specimens, such as 'Lady, your eye' (Weelkes); 'Phyllida' (Vecchi); 'Adieu, sweet Amarillis' (Wilbye). But there are also, amongst others, some extremely fine and little known compositions of Wilbye, 'Sweet love, 'When shall my wretched life,' and 'Why dost thou shoot,' all in six parts, which should afford infinite pleasure to choralists and audiences. It is probable that the taste for unaccompanied and choral music written with loving care for the human voice divine may greatly expand. Big choral works associated with the full orchestra have their necessary place in the development of the art, but it must be acknowledged that such works often use voices quite remorselessly and as though they were indestructible. No other music than that under notice is likely to be found to be a better corrective to the strenuous and aggressively and, we had almost said, contemptuously unvoiced music too often written by modern composers of the storm and stress school. We commend the new series to the sympathetic attention of all lovers of pure choral music, and especially to competition festival committees who are often able to direct the taste of their supporters. Is it too much to hope that the Welsh, with their choral genius, will take to madrigal singing? We do not remember seeing a madrigal in the programme of a Welsh Eisteddfod.

The Cathedrals of England and Wales. Second series. By T. Francis Bumpus.

[T. Werner Laurie.]

The same note of commendation sounded when we noticed the first series of this excellent compilation must be resounded after perusing the second volume. Mr. Bumpus has gathered together much information on the Cathedrals of Exeter, Canterbury, York, St. Paul's, Winchester, Norwich, Peterborough, Exeter and Wells, and he has such a pleasant way of imparting his knowledge that even his technical descriptions are by no means dry reading. Of special value in the present book is the account of our Metropolitan Cathedral. The story as told by Mr. Bumpus is of thrilling interest, and he has managed to compress within some fifty pages a mass of information concerning that wonderful creation of Sir Christopher Wren. He records the fact that St. Paul's was totally devoid of stained glass until the year 1867, and he prints a curious and practically unknown petition of one Joshua Price, 'glass painter,' presented, early in the 18th century, 'To the Honourable the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament assembled,' wherein he asked 'to admit him to the Honour of shewing his Talent, in the upper Window towards the East, by painting the Figure of St. Paul, which Ornament Proportioned thereto, for the further Beautifying that Pompous and admired Structure, the Charge whereof will be justly worth One Hundred and Fifty Pounds.' This interesting quotation serves to sample a book that is full of good things and one that is sure to find acceptance.

Te Deum, Benedictus, Kyrie Eleison and Nicene Creed, in G minor. By Richard Farrant. Edited by John E. West. [Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Good churchmen well know the merits of Richard Farrant's service music, and many doubtless will welcome an octavo edition of the above settings edited by Mr. John E. West. The influence of the old mode is very perceptible in these compositions, and imparts an archaic atmosphere and rugged strength to the music. In the Te Deum the voice parts are occasionally divided, and the section beginning 'When Thou tookest upon Thee' is set in 'verse.' An impressive effect is secured at the close by the sentence 'O Lord, let Thy mercy,' &c., being sung by altos and basses only, the full choir entering with the words 'O Lord, in Thee have I trusted.' Several of the inflections met with in the Te Deum recur in the Benedictus, and generally the continuity between the settings is marked. In one or two places the choristers will have to be alert to take up crisply their several entrances, but no unusual difficulties are presented in the music. The Kyries are essentially devotional in spirit, and the part-writing in the Nicene Creed will be found very singable. Mr. West's editing merits high praise.

REVIEWS—(Continued from page 181.)

Save me, O God. The Lord hear thee. Composed by John Blow.

O pray for the peace of Jerusalem. If the Lord Himself. Composed by Dr. William Child. Novello's Octavo Anthems. Edited by John E. West.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

There is no better practice for promoting precision, steadiness and dignity in church choral singing than the works of the old masters, who laid the foundations of the unrivalled school of English service music. The above anthems by John Blow are excellent examples of this sturdy musician's style, and moreover they possess a stately dignity reflective of the sanctity of age. Dr. Child's music will be found somewhat more difficult, but any extra time bestowed upon its preparation will be fully compensated. The opening of 'O pray for the peace of Jerusalem' is beautiful music, and the deep sincerity pervading this little work is most impressive. Several carefully marked details attest to thoughtful editing.

LEONARDO LEO.

Mr. Edward J. Dent read an interesting paper on the above composer at the meeting of the Musical Association on February 19. In the course of his remarks the lecturer said that Leo's compositions fall into three principal classes: serious opera, comic opera, and sacred music. In his serious operas he began by imitating Scarlatti, but since his first opera, 'Pisistrato' came out in 1714 it was of course not the best period of Scarlatti's style that he took as a model. To trace the development of Leo's own style in serious opera is difficult, owing to the disappearance of many of his scores. His best operas are 'Demofonte,' 'Ciro Riconosciuto,' and 'L'Olimpiade.' His airs suffer from the inevitable conventionality of form and style, but they are notable for a dignity and purity that remind us of Cherubini.

As a writer of comic opera Leo is most important. His work in this department has been curiously neglected by the two official historians of the Neapolitan school, Florimo and N. D'Arienzo: the latter in his recently published history of Italian comic opera does not mention his name. Justice has been done to Leo's comic genius only by the patient researches of a collateral descendant, Cavaliere Giacomo Leo, to whose published books and to whose personal kindness the lecturer expressed his deep indebtedness. Leo's most famous comic opera is 'Amor vuol sofferenze,' also known as 'La finta Frascatana,' or 'Il Cioè.' It was produced in 1739, and Des Brosses gives an enthusiastic account of it in his letters. Leo improved upon the concerted *Finale*s of Scarlatti, though he did not infuse them with the wonderful humour of Logroscino, and it was left to Galuppi to hit upon the device of linking several movements. Leo's *Finale*s are almost all in one movement, rarely in two. Like his contemporaries, he employs folk-song in his Neapolitan comic operas, and examples are to be found that strikingly resemble the modern Piedigrotta type. He also has a keen sense of musical parody, and the caricature of grand opera became a recognized feature of the opera buffa.

Mr. Dent went on to say that Leo, as a composer of sacred music, to which he devoted himself mainly during the last ten years of his life, was less popular than Durante, since he consistently avoided the sentimentality which disfigured the work of Durante and his school. His eight-part Miserere and Dixit Dominus in C (edited by Sir Charles Stanford and published by Messrs. Novello), are well-known. The Fitzwilliam Museum also possesses a Dixit Dominus in D for ten voices and orchestra, which is as fine as that in C. A good fugue is printed in Professor Prout's 'Fugal Analysis.' Leo is at his best in massive contrapuntal movements, and was one of the first to establish the modern style of fugue, especially double and triple fugue, with subjects well contrasted in rhythm. His aria movements are formal and florid, but none the less beautiful and dignified.

Finally, Leo is a composer for his own period, not for all time, like Alessandro Scarlatti and Mozart. His name sounds much more old-fashioned to us than Scarlatti's. He stands to Alessandro Scarlatti very much as Cherubini stands to Mozart. But he advanced his art in several technical details, notably in the treatment of form; and his airs are much more akin to Mozart's in their general style than those of his contemporaries Bach and Handel. His worst fault is dryness; but he deserves our hearty admiration for having always upheld the loftiest ideals of beauty, dignity and scientific composition in an age generally regarded as one of the most decadent periods through which the art of music has passed.

The following illustrations were sung by Mr. F. C. S. Carey:

'Amaie na mpsa'—folk-song in Neapolitan dialect.

'Io non so dove mi sto'—scena from the opera 'Amor vuol sofferenze.'

Fragment of the Lamentations for Holy Week.

London Concerts.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

The 'Requiem' of Brahms and the 'Hymn of Praise' by Mendelssohn—two compositions of strong contrast—formed the programme at the Albert Hall on January 25. Owing to the death of Lady Bridge, the performance was conducted by Mr. H. L. Balfour, organist of the Society, who discharged this duty with commendable resourcefulness and skill. Brahms's impressive work was rendered with great refinement, and the choruses, 'How lovely is Thy dwelling-place,' and 'Blessed are the dead,' in particular, were beautifully sung. In Mendelssohn's work the choristers were thoroughly at home, and sang with splendid volume of tone and verve. The soloists were Madame Sobrino, Miss Edith Patching, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Francis Harford. Dr. W. G. Alcock ably presided at the organ.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

A remarkably varied and attractive programme served to draw a great audience to the concert on February 5. Mozart's 'Haffner' Symphony and Brahms's double Concerto for violin and violoncello, provided food for the classicists, and the symphonic poem 'Don Quixote,' by Richard Strauss—Richard the Second, as he is sometimes called—amply satiated the desires of the extremists. 'Don Quixote' displays Strauss's marvellous talent in exuberance. It is said to be his most characteristic work, and certainly we can conceive of no one else writing anything so perplexing, astonishing and, we are bound to add, at least occasionally fascinating. How far imitative effects such as the bleating of sheep and the sound of the wind,—a good many composers have regaled us with orchestral storms—and how far extraordinarily persistent discords are legitimate means of art expression will never be finally settled, but it would seem to many, even of those who endeavour to suppress bias and who strive to appreciate novelty, that as to this Strauss does not leave much scope for posterity. A feature of this work is the personification of the hero in the form of the violoncello. This difficult part was ably played by Professor Hugo Becker, who also, with Mr. Maurice Sons, played in the Brahms Concerto. Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted, and, as might be expected, secured fine performances.

If no novelty was presented on February 17, the revival of Haydn's early Symphony in C, 'Le Midi,' is much to be commended. It was written in 1761, when Haydn was second conductor of Prince Esterhazy's orchestra, the prince having suggested the subject of noontide for symphonic illustration. The work is distinguished by having two solo violin parts and two Adagio movements, the second Adagio beginning with a solo for violin and violoncello, for which elaborate cadenzas are written. Madame Carreño gave a magnificent performance of the pianoforte part of Tchaikovsky's B flat minor pianoforte Concerto, and the concert concluded with a vivid interpretation of Richard Strauss's 'Heldenleben.' Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted.

LONDON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERT AT QUEEN'S HALL, FEBRUARY 12.

Programme.
Overture .. ..	'In the South' .. ..	.. ..	Elgar.
Tone-poem .. ..	'Tod und Verklärung' .. ..	.. ..	Strauss.
Brandenburger Concerto in A (No. 4) .. ..	.. ..	.. ..	Bach.
New Symphonie Fantasia .. ..	.. ..	.. ..	York Bowen.
Symphony No. 7, in A .. ..	.. ..	.. ..	Beethoven.

Again this famous orchestra was handled by the masterful Richter. Although the performance of the Overture, the Concerto and the Symphony were deeply appreciated, interest centered on Strauss's truly magnificent tone-poem, the glowing peroration in which is simply overpowering, and especially in the first performance of Mr. York Bowen's Symphonie Fantasia. Mr. Bowen—to whose career reference is made on p. 175—is one of the most prominent and promising of the nation's young composers. He affects no story in his new work. One is, therefore, never driven to extract the meaning of this and that theme or passage. The work is laid out on a large scale, in six sections, which are connected without pause. Many of the themes have much grace, and they are treated and orchestrated with amazing skill. The fourth section, Allegretto grazioso, a Scherzo movement, has considerable charm, and there are several fine climaxes in the fifth movement, and especially in the sixth movement. It is highly probable that the work would gain by compression. It is fair, however, to add that this feeling may have arisen from the fact that the Fantasia, which undoubtedly demands and deserves close attention, came immediately after three masterpieces splendidly executed. Although, as we have indicated, the work was not well placed in the programme, it created a highly favourable impression, which no doubt will be intensified when further performances are given. Mr. York Bowen in now a marked man in the best sense.

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

This enterprising organization gave its fourth performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' at Queen's Hall on February 19. Increased familiarity with the potentialities of this beautiful work of art enabled the choir to interpret the choral music very successfully, the Chorus of Demons in particular realizing the dramatic effect admirably, the only weak point during the evening being a little unsteadiness in the final chorus. The work of the orchestra also left nothing to be desired. Miss Alice Lakin sang the music of the Angel with much sympathy, Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies once more displayed his high artistic qualities as the Priest and the Angel of the Agony, and to Mr. Gervase Elwes must be accorded the warmest praise for his inspired and devotional rendering of the title part. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted unobtrusively but with a complete control of the forces under his command, and as one thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the work.

THE GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

A pleasing operetta entitled 'The Gardeners' was produced on February 12 by Miss Eugenie Joachim's pupils at the Guildhall School of Music in the theatre of the Institution. The work, written by Mr. Frederick Fenn and Miss Jetta Vogel, and composed by Mr. Richard H. Walthew, described as a 'Song-play in two acts,' is unpretentious in character, but the music is melodious and bright, and the orchestral writing very tasteful. The two principal characters were cleverly impersonated by Miss E. Barwell-Holbrook and Miss Frances Langton, some 'bird music' was neatly sung by Miss Gladys Scott, and a dance of flowers executed with great spirit. Mr. Walthew, who conducted, has been appointed director of the operatic class at the Guildhall School of Music.

THE LONDON ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

This Academy is a recent amalgamation of five well-established music schools, viz., the London Academy, founded by the late Dr. Wylde, the London Organ School, the Forest Gate School, the Metropolitan College of Music (Finsbury), and the Hampstead Conservatoire. All the above branches, and others at Ealing, Kensington, Ilford, Leytonstone, and Southend, are still maintained, and it is only the general management that is centralised. The prospectus gives the names of over three hundred professors, many of whom are of the highest eminence. Mr. W. Harding Bonner, who is great at organizing, is the managing director, and Dr. Yorke Trotter and Mr. Rene Ortmans are amongst the other directors on the Board. A journal issued monthly records the magnitude and vitality of the work and affords evidence of the sterling character of the teaching. There are no signs of shoddy, no hoods, gowns or other millinery are distributed, the fees are low and the aims are high. In a word, there can be no doubt that the institution well deserves the confidence and support of the community. On February 6 the Academy gave a concert at the Queen's Hall. The most satisfactory feature was the remarkably excellent performance of the full orchestra of about ninety performers, the great majority of whom were students of the Academy. Mr. Rene Ortmans conducted with conspicuous ability, but this fact alone would have meant very little with amateurs. It was evident from the decision of the attack, the fluency and purity of execution, and the expression secured that Mr. Ortmans had drilled his resources with uncommon skill. The pieces performed by the orchestra were the overture 'Euryanthe' (Weber), the two movements of Schubert's B minor Symphony and the 'Leonora' No. 3 overture. Beside these the orchestra played the accompaniments to Miss Maude Dixon's effective performance of the first movement of Schumann's A minor pianoforte Concerto, and Miss Gertrude Gregory's no less talented rendering of the first movement of Max Bruch's D minor violin Concerto. The vocal items were contributed by Madame Blanche Newcombe, Miss Nina Johnson and Miss Grace Butt, all of whom displayed highly trained voices. There was an overwhelming attendance and a very appreciative audience.

MR. THEODORE HOLLAND'S CONCERT.

A promising young composer was favourably introduced to London musical circles at Bechstein Hall on February 16. Mr. Theodore Holland was born at Wimbledon, educated at Westminster School, began his serious study of music at the Royal Academy of Music, and afterwards gained admittance as a violinist to Joachim's class at the Hochschule, Berlin. An operetta for children, 'King Goldemar,' composed before he left London, has had considerable vogue. The concert under notice was given in order to introduce music composed during his sojourn at Berlin. The most important item was a violin and pianoforte Sonata, which proved to be a work that displayed far more than ordinary talent. Mr. Holland does not pose as an ultra-modern; there is nothing difficult to understand in his music. He commands a flow of refined and melodious ideas, which he develops with artistic skill. Another piece, this time for the pianoforte alone, 'Variations on a Swedish air,' was very effective and exhibited occasional glimpses of real power. Eight songs, which were carefully interpreted by Miss Esther Palliser, served to show that Mr. Holland can write expressively in many moods, from melancholy to piquant sprightliness. Mr. Holland did not perform himself. For the violin he employed the beautiful playing of Professor Halir of Berlin, and for the pianoforte the equally artistic and painstaking skill of Miss Evelyn Suart. It is certain that by his concert Mr. Holland has created an exceedingly favourable impression. A performance (the first given in England) of Max Reger's violin and Pianoforte sonata in F sharp minor (Op. 84) concluded the concert. This highly elaborate composition deserves more notice than can possibly be given on this occasion. The first movement is difficult to follow both as regards harmony and form, but the power of the last movement was unmistakable. The executants were as named above, and the performance was a fine one. Professor Halir, who played the violin part in Berlin when the work was first performed, especially distinguished himself. He is a player of the first rank.

MISS MAUD MACCARTHY'S VIOLIN RECITALS.

This highly-talented young violinist gave two concerts or recitals at the Queen's Hall on February 1 and 13, and a third was announced to be given on February 27. At the first concert Miss MacCarthy played the 'Kreutzer' Sonata with Mr. Percy Grainger and displayed once again the clear beauty and refinement of execution and rather over-restrained individuality that characterized her performances last season. Technically her playing was almost faultless, and this may be said also of her rendering of the Prelude in E, Largo in F, and Allegro in C, by Bach. In the sonata Mr. Grainger played very well, but not sympathetically, with his companion. Mr. Frederic Austin strove with a warmth of feeling worthy of a better cause, to give effect to a collection of eight—to us at least—uninteresting songs by I. Hearne. At the second recital Miss MacCarthy was again associated with Mr. Grainger, and played Beethoven's Romance in F, Mendelssohn's violin Concerto, and notably Brahms's D minor violin Sonata. In these, as in other pieces, the refinement and delicacy of Miss MacCarthy's style were again displayed to the greatest advantage.

The Stock Exchange Orchestral and Choral Society is to be commended for reviving, on February 8, at Queen's Hall, Haydn's Symphony in D, commonly known as the 'Clock,' from the suggestive 'ticking' figure prevailing in the slow movement. The work is the fifth of the second set written for the Salomon concerts, and is dated 1794, and as Haydn arrived in London on February 4 of that year, it may be presumed that this fine symphony was written in London. Mr. Arthur Payne secured an excellent rendering of the genial symphony, and also of the other orchestral works. The parts-ongs selected for the male-voice choir were Hatton's 'Tar's Song,' Abt's 'At Andernach in Rhineland,' Elgar's 'After many a dusty mile,' all of which, with the madrigal 'What ho!' by Beale, were effectively rendered under the direction of Mr. Munro Davison.

At his annual benefit concert—Queen's Hall, February 14—Mr. Robert Newman showed his astuteness as a manager by presenting a programme consisting entirely of popular overtures and preludes. Commencing with the overture to Mozart's 'Magic Flute' and concluding with Tchaikovsky's '1812,' there were included examples by Beethoven, Weber, Rossini, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Ambroise Thomas and Wagner; and as the works were chronologically arranged, the concert was no less instructive than interesting. The variety of styles was thoroughly realized by Mr. Henry J. Wood, who, at the head of the Queen's Hall Orchestra, secured vivid and finished interpretations.

The orchestral concert given by Miss Irene Scharer on January 30 at Æolian Hall brought into prominence this young pianist's gifts. Her touch was delightfully sympathetic and delicate, and florid passages were rippled off with fascinating clearness and lightness. Two concertos were included in the programme, by Saint-Saëns in G minor and by Liszt in E flat, and in both these works the young artist played with marked intelligence. She was supported by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, directed by Mr. Henry J. Wood. A novelty was provided in an overture entitled 'In May,' by Mr. Tobias Matthay, by whom it was conducted. This proved to be a well designed work of sufficiently amorous character to justify its title.

The 'Barns-Phillips' chamber concerts would seem to be firmly established, and a crowded audience attended on February 7, at the third performance of the present season at Bechstein Hall. Miss Barns—who was very warmly greeted on her first public appearance since her illness—was heard in her clever Sonata No. 3, for violin and pianoforte, and Mr. Phillips sang, for the first time in London, Mr. Joseph Holbrooke's scena 'Marino Faliero,' originally produced at the Bristol Festival of October last. Record should also be made of the début here of Miss Elizabeth Fenn, an American soprano, who sang with great charm of voice and style. Three new graceful pianoforte solos by Miss Barns were tastefully played by Mr. Kesteven.

The re-appearance of Miss Mary Münchhoff, the American soprano, was very welcome, for the lady is a vocalist in the first rank of concert singers, and she had not been heard in London since she sang with marked success at a Philharmonic Concert in 1902. The programme at her recital—Bechstein Hall, February 1—presented attractive diversity, and scenes of serious design, and songs grave and gay, were alike interpreted with rare beauty of voice and perfection of style. Miss Münchhoff was assisted by Mr. Wladimir Cernicoff, a pianist new to London, who made a favourable impression in several solos.

M. Léon Delafosse engaged the London Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Landon Ronald as conductor, for his re-appearance in London at Queen's Hall on February 19. The programme contained his Fantasia in E for pianoforte and orchestra, written in 1900. If the work is loosely constructed, its themes are melodious and the solo part bristles with showy and difficult passages in which virtuosi delight. M. Delafosse, who played with great verve and brilliancy, was effectively supported by the orchestra. Subsequently he was heard in Weber's Concertstück and in solos by Chopin, Schumann and Scarlatti.

Miss Katie Parker, a pupil of Professor Wilhelmj, made a successful début at Queen's Hall on February 20, at an orchestral concert conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood. Miss Parker, who is a native of London, played expressively and fluently in Wieniawski's Concerto in D minor, and in smaller pieces proved herself a talented and promising young artist. A feature of the concert was the first performance in England of Grieg's 'Lyrische Suite' (Op. 54), which proved to be tasteful orchestral arrangements of four numbers from the fifth book of the well-known 'Lyrische Stücke' for pianoforte solo.

Among the several young vocalists who promise to enchant many audiences is Miss Dorothy Court, the possessor of a charmingly fresh and sympathetic soprano voice, which has been admirably trained at the Royal College of Music. On February 7, at her recital given in Æolian Hall, she presented an artistic and unhackneyed selection of songs which she interpreted with unflinching intelligence and notable clearness of articulation. Songs were also contributed by Mr. Herbert Simmons and several violin solos were neatly played by Mr. Haydn Wood.

The first of a series of six chamber concerts by the Nora Clench Quartet took place, on February 5, at Bechstein Hall. A distinctive work on the programme was M. Debussy's Quartet in G minor, music that in atmosphere may be compared to Turner's most characteristic pictures. The selection also included Brahms's Clarinet quintet in B minor, in which the wind instrument was beautifully played by Mr. Charles Draper.

Distinction was imparted to the third concert this season of the Wessely Quartet at Bechstein Hall, on February 7, by the inclusion in the programme of Mr. Frederick Corder's new 'Fantasy' in G. The title is fully justified by the music, which, by tersely developed themes of well-contrasted significance, presents in turn with masterly resource various phases of emotion. This work should become popular with amateurs.

Miss Kathleen Chabôt, a gifted pupil of Miss Fanny Davies, played with delightful vivacity at her pianoforte recital on February 19 at Æolian Hall. Her interpretation of Schumann's 'Papillons' was remarkable for realisation of the different sentiment of the various movements, and her command of tone-colour and variety of touch bore witness to exceptional talent.

Mr. Herman Sandby, a Danish violoncellist, made a very favourable impression on the listeners at his recital at Bechstein Hall on February 16. He produced a rich tone from his instrument, and rendered cantabile passages with refined feeling. Two new pieces, severally entitled, 'Andante funèbre,' and 'Ritornelle,' by Christian Sinding, proved to be respectively expressive and gay.

Miss Lucia Fyde, assisted by Mr. Atherton Smith and the British Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Mr. W. Sewell, gave, on February 16, at Æolian Hall, an operatic recital consisting chiefly of excerpts from Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah.' Miss Fyde has a powerful voice and dramatic perception, but she would be heard to greater advantage on the stage than in the concert-room.

M. Rivarde, at his concert on February 15 at Queen's Hall, played in Saint-Saëns's Concertstück for violin and orchestra, and Brahms's Violin concerto with refinement and brilliancy. Supported by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Señor Arbos, the clever violinist's performances were most enjoyable.

Mr. Percy Walker, who hails from Luton, played with a verve and brilliancy at his pianoforte recital on February 14, at Bechstein Hall, that quickly won the goodwill of his audience. He was somewhat lacking in passages of deep sentiment, but greater command of expression will doubtless come with further experience.

Mr. Lamond devoted his pianoforte recital on February 17 at Bechstein Hall to Chopin, whose music he interpreted with keen intellectual insight, dramatic point, and consummate command of the keyboard. His readings of this master were not, however, so completely satisfying as those of Beethoven at his previous recital.

Miss Grace Angus, a young soprano who gave a vocal recital at Steinway Hall on February 15, merits a few words of encouragement. Her voice is fresh and musical, and she sang in an unaffected and earnest manner that was very pleasing.

Miss Grace Thynne, yet another young violinist, made a very favourable impression at her first recital, on February 20, at Bechstein Hall. The talented young lady produced a good tone from her instrument, and played with an intelligence and musical feeling full of promise for her future achievements.

Miss Frances Jude, a young violinist from Birmingham, gave a recital on January 31 at Bechstein Hall, at which she gave signs of musical aptitude but the need of further study.

Madame Henriette Schmidt, a pupil of M. Ysaye, gave proof of judiciously cultivated talent at her recital, on February 3, at Æolian Hall. Songs were contributed in pleasing fashion by Mr. Gervase Elwes.

M. Victor Maurel gave the first of four vocal recitals at Bechstein Hall on February 20, when he sang two songs in English, interestingly, but not so enchantingly as those he rendered in his own tongue.

Suburban Concerts.

The Upper Norwood Glee and Madrigal Society gave the first concert of their third season in the School of Art at the Crystal Palace on January 30. It was in every way an artistic success, and a distinct advance upon previous efforts. Particularly noteworthy was the rendering of some interesting old madrigals, of which the following deserve special mention: 'Where droop the willows' (Waelrent, 1580); 'Come again, sweet days' (Dowland, 1597); and 'Since first I saw your face' (Ford, 1607). The soloists were Miss Gwladys Roberts, the Misses Eyre, and Mr. F. L. Robertson. Mr. E. Victor Williams conducted.

The programme of the Dulwich Philharmonic Society's concert at the Crystal Palace on February 3 included Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' and the 'Death of Minnehaha,' and Sir Charles Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea.' The solo vocalists were Madame Conly, Mr. Walter Kirby and Mr. Reginald Davidson, and the performance, under the able direction of Mr. Arthur Fagge, was altogether satisfactory.

The second concert of the combined Ealing Choral and Orchestral Societies took place, on February 13, in the Victoria Hall. The programme included Schumann's B flat Symphony, Tchaikovsky's Marche Solennelle, Dvorák's 'Carneval' and Mendelssohn's 'Ruy Blas' overtures. The choral selection included three madrigals from the Oriana series and one by Orlando Lasso. Miss Edith Evans was the solo vocalist. Mr. J. Cliffe Forrester conducted.

The St. Peter's Choral Society, Brockley, gave its second concert this season on February 13 at St. Peter's Hall, when Elgar's 'King Olaf' was very efficiently performed. The choir sang with much spirit and were well supported by a good orchestra. Miss Teresa Blamy, Mr. Gwilym Richards and Mr. Arthur Walenn were the solo vocalists, the lady being especially excellent, and Dr. C. J. Frost conducted.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

THE MOZART CELEBRATIONS.

February 15, 1906.

In Vienna, and indeed throughout Austria more than in any other part of the world, has the 150th anniversary of the birth of Mozart given opportunity for observing how great, how intense, and universal is the popularity of the works of this wonderful master. Even to-day there is not a single branch of music in which he did not reveal the highest, the superhuman, the divine. That in all cities of Austria in which there is musical life, performances of Mozart's works were given,—in many places, in fact, great musical festivals were instituted—all this was natural enough; but in quite small, even the smallest villages, there were also signs of hearty and genuine enthusiasm. It was clear that the composer more than any other great master was the common possession of all musical mankind, however different men may be in religion, nationality, customs, age, or way of thinking. Before all other cities, Vienna, Salzburg, and Prague honoured Mozart most worthily, for they are cities with which he was personally connected. Salzburg held a solemn religious service with a Mozart mass, various concert performances and, as something quite out of the common, a performance was given of the youthful opera, 'Il Rè pastore,' composed by Mozart for Salzburg in 1775, i.e., when he was nineteen years old. This original idea was carried out by the Orchestral Union of Munich.

In Prague—where one remembers with pride Mozart's saying, 'Meine Prager verstehen mich'—Czechs and Germans, though politically bitter enemies, tried to outvie each other in paying homage to the Master. Concerts of the Philharmonic Society, the Conservatorium, the various chamber music institutions and choral societies performed known and unknown works. In the German and Czech theatres, 'Don Giovanni' was to be seen and heard, and this in remembrance of the fact that, for Prague, Mozart wrote his greatest dramatic achievement. As to Vienna, the number of Mozart performances was innumerable. I have already referred to the one given by the Conservatorium. The Concert Society held a three days' festival. At a Symphony concert, among other compositions, were given the 'Jupiter' symphony, under the direction of Löwe, and the pianoforte Concerto, beautifully played by Busoni. At a chamber concert given on the following day, the Halir Quartet from Berlin, appearing here for the first time, performed the C major Quartet. The programme included the pianoforte (Löwe) Quartet in G minor, and the Serenade in B flat for wind instruments. On the third day, Löwe conducted the G minor Symphony and the 'Requiem.' In addition, the Concert Society gave a popular music festival at a Sunday concert, and a special Mozart concert for the working classes. The Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde and the Philharmonic Society united for a Mozart performance, under the direction of Capellmeister Schalk, for the benefit of the 'Nicolai' Society for sick musicians. Mozart's 'Coronation' Mass and Te Deum were given by an amateur orchestral society. And then the Opera distinguished itself by a noble performance of 'Il Seraglio,' under the able direction of Herr Gustav Mahler.

But Mozart festivals were not confined to musical circles. On January 27 the City of Vienna gave a stately concert in the Rathaus. In connection with this, Burgomaster Dr. Lueger, with many official representatives of the community, went to the Mozart monument and, with words of high homage, placed wreaths on it. This example was followed by other bodies. By order of the school authorities official Mozart festivals, with speeches and descriptions of the composer's life, were held in the primary, town, polytechnic, and middle schools. Further, memorial sheets were distributed containing Mozart's portrait, a short biography, and a popular account of his art-work and of its import. There was also a solemn Mozart festival at the University, at which an address was delivered by Prof. Adler, while musical performances were given by the students.

The Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde has given an interesting concert at which only a capella choruses were sung, viz., the Kyrie from Palestrina's 'Missa Assumpta est Maria'; the 'Et incarnatus' and 'Crucifixus' from Cherubini's great 'Credo' for double choir; Mozart's Offertorium, 'Venite populi'; a new, highly-complicated chorus in sixteen parts, 'Der Abend,' by Richard Strauss; a six-part chorus 'Schweigen,' by Max Reger, and the five-part motet of Brahms, 'Schaffe in mir, Gott, ein reines Herz.' The chorus, of about 300 voices, was under the direction of Franz Schalk.

Among virtuosos Marteau deserves special mention, for he excited the enthusiasm of his audience by his highly artistic and intelligent rendering of the Phantasie for violin with orchestra which Robert Schumann in his later years wrote for the then young Joseph Joachim, a work which most violinists avoid as ungrateful and ineffective.

The Jubilee Theatre, in which are given dramas, comedies, &c., also operas and operettas, has been very successful; but for the future it will confine itself to operas and operettas. Thus we shall have a second opera house, and though the performances will not equal those at the Hofoper, they will be very good considering the modest forces available.

MANDYCZEWSKI.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Two excellent chamber concerts were given in the Queen's College Hall on January 26 and 27, the artists being the Brodsky Quartet, with Dr. Walker as pianist and Madame Gertrude Drinkwater as vocalist on one occasion, and Miss M. Kisack on the other. The music performed was well selected and admirably rendered.

The third of the Philharmonic Society's concerts took place on February 2, when the first half of the programme consisted of the closing scene of Wagner's 'Valkyrie,' in which the parts of Brunnhilde and Wotan were taken by Madame Blanche Marchesi and Mr. Arthur Winckworth. The orchestra acquitted themselves creditably in the difficult music, and showed how much can be done by a long course of such training as Dr. Koeller devotes to willing learners. The second part of the concert gave the choir their only opportunity, and they made good use of it in the beautiful unaccompanied work, 'The surrender of the soul,' by Peter Cornelius. The remainder of the concert was devoted to a selection of songs and orchestral pieces in almost bewildering variety.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the sixth of the Halford Society's concerts, held in the Town Hall on January 30, Hamilton Harty's 'Irish' Symphony was the principal novelty. The work, which proved to be thoroughly interesting and displayed skilful workmanship, was finely played and created a great impression. The Serenade for wind instruments by Richard Strauss, and the 'Spring Song' by Jean Sibelius, were also new at these concerts. Mr. Fritz Kreisler gave a grand rendering of the solo part in Viotti's violin Concerto in A minor (No. 22).—The seventh concert, on February 13, brought to a first hearing here Mozart's Serenade for strings, 'Eine kleine Nachtmusik,' composed in 1787; it was quite refreshing to listen to its melodies and limpid harmonies. Other pieces were Humperdinck's prelude to 'Hänsel und Gretel,' Dvorák's 'New World' Symphony and the tone-poem 'Finlandia,' by Sibelius. Mr. Howard Hadley, a Birmingham pianist, was excellent as the soloist in Schumann's Concerto, while Mr. Halford conducted in his usual able manner.

Miss Kathleen Arnold gave a concert in the Temperance Hall on January 31. Among the less hackneyed pieces were Purcell's 'Ground,' and an attractive Scherzo (Op. 16, No. 2) by Eugen d'Albert. Mr. Dalton Baker contributed a number of songs, but the anniversary of Schubert's birth was unnoticed.—The Broadwood concerts were resumed in the same Hall on February 3. This was Mendelssohn's natal day, but the framers of the programme overlooked the fact, and none of his music was included. The quartets were Haydn's in D (Op. 64, No. 5) and Dvorák's in F (Op. 96), the executants being Messrs. Max Mossel, D. Reggel, H. Sück, and J. C. Hock. The last-named played some violoncello solos, and Mrs. Helen Trust contributed a number of songs, the most welcome being a series of old English lyrics, ranging from Lawes to Dibdin.—At the last concert, on February 17, Mr. Archy Rosenthal created a very favourable impression in Chopin's Sonata in B flat minor (Op. 35), and pieces ranging from Leonardo Leo to Paderewski and Sjögren. Mr. Gervase Elwes made something like a sensation by his rendering of three Shakespeare songs composed by Roger Quilter; he also gave with taste and refinement songs by Brahms and other composers.

The annual concert of the Police Band took place in the Town Hall on February 14. An excellent miscellaneous programme was interpreted by Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale, and Messrs. Webster Millar and Charles Tree (vocalists), Mr. William Henley (violinist), Mr. Perkins (organist), and the band, under the conductorship of Inspector Kelly. Dr. Rowland Winn acted as accompanist. There was a crowded and enthusiastic audience.—At Mr. Max Mossel's third drawing-room concert, held at the Grand Hotel the following evening, the concert-giver was associated with Madame Carreño and Mr. Boris Hambourg in a magnificent rendering of Tchaikovsky's great Trio in A minor (Op. 50). Dr. Theo Lierhammer was the vocalist and Mr. G. H. Manton accompanied.—Miss Fanny Davies, who had not been heard in Birmingham for some time, gave a recital in the Masonic Hall on February 20. Her programme included some interesting old Netherlandish music by Fiocco, of Antwerp, Baustetter, and Matthias van den Gheyn, whose 'Cuckoo' prelude was played on the celesta. Pieces by Chopin, Brahms, Schumann and others were included, also a manuscript Concert Allegro by Edward Elgar, a brilliant rhapsody. Miss Davies, who was in brilliant form, had a great reception, and quite entranced her crowded audience.

On February 3, Mr. F. W. Beard gave a Wagner-Tchaikovsky concert with a band of nearly eighty performers, at prices of admission from sixpence to eighteenpence. A performance of the 5th Symphony—the principal work in the programme—was good. Miss Agnes Craig and Mr. R. L. Brown were the vocalists. Mr. Beard conducted with care and skill.—The chief features of the Choral and Orchestral Association's concert of February 10 were Gade's 'Spring Message,' Gaul's glee 'The Shipwreck,' and the phenomenal vocalisation of the Australian soprano Miss Bertha Bird. Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducted.

The 'Handel' concert of the Festival Choral Society takes place too late for notice in my present letter.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The third concert given this season by the Clifton Quintet on February 1, at the Victoria Rooms, attracted a large audience, when Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola), and Percy Lewis (violoncello) were the executants. Excellent interpretations were given of César Franck's string Quartet in D major and E. Schütt's pianoforte Trio in E minor. Mr. Parsons played with skill a Melodie in E major and Valse in A by Rachmaninoff, and an Etude in G flat by Moszkowski, and Mr. Hunt gave two movements from J. M. Leclair's violin Sonata in E flat major. Miss Gleeson-White was the vocalist.

There was a crowded attendance at the Bristol Post Office concert on February 2 at the Victoria Rooms. The vocalists were Miss Florence Bulleid, Miss Esmé Atherden, Mr. Walker Hyde, Mr. Randell Jackson, and Mr. Harrison Hill. Miss Ida Home played violin solos acceptably, and Miss Evelyn Pullen afforded pleasure with her performance on the violoncello. Mr. W. E. Fowler was the accompanist.

At the well-attended chamber concert on February 6, at Shirehampton Hall, the performers were Mr. P. Napier Miles (pianoforte), the Rev. E. H. Fellowes, Mr. E. D. Cheetham-Strode, Mr. A. E. Burgess, and Mr. E. S. Kemp (strings). As the concert was held shortly after the 150th anniversary of Mozart's birth, two of his compositions were included in the scheme, viz., the string Quartet in D minor (second of the set of six dedicated to Haydn) and the Fantasia in C minor for pianoforte. Other instrumental features in the programme were Haydn's Quartet in C ('The Emperor'), and Purcell's Sonata in G minor, carefully rendered by the Rev. E. H. Fellowes. Mr. Claud Powell (brother of the Vicar of Shirehampton) was the vocalist.

At a concert in aid of the National Lifeboat Fund, on February 13, in Shirehampton Hall, the choir of St. Mary's Church sang glees, under the direction of Mr. G. Collins, and songs were contributed by Miss Sydney Keith and Captain St. L. Moore. Mr. P. Napier Miles played pianoforte solos by Chopin and Schubert.

The twenty-fifth annual concert of the Bristol Temperance Choral Society was held on February 14 at the hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, under the direction of Mr. F. Stone. The Society was assisted by Miss Winifred Marwood, Miss Maud England and Mr. A. Manby (vocalists), Mr. Sidney Jones (flute), and Miss Adrienne Andean (recitations). Mr. C. A. Inman accompanied.

The Bristol Choral Society on February 17 gave a performance—the first in the city—of Gounod's opera 'Irene,' at Colston Hall, band and chorus numbering 600. The soloists were as follow:—Madame Emily Squire (Irene), Miss Eveline Gerrish (Pascal), Miss Katherine Gerrish (Lolage), Mr. Wilson Pembroke (Muriel), Mr. Watkin Mills (Suliman), Mr. G. W. Brierley (Zoroast), Mr. F. H. Baber (Raffael), and Mr. W. Thomas (Phanoah). Mr. H. Lewis was leader, and Mr. George Riseley directed the performance, which was excellent.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On January 22 Miss Annie Lord gave a pianoforte recital at the Royal Dublin Society in place of Herr Dohnányi, who was prevented fulfilling his engagement. Miss Lord, whose first appearance it was at these recitals, made a good impression, and established herself as a thoroughly reliable pianist.

On February 1 the Dublin Glee Singers gave their first concert for the season at the Antient Concert Rooms, and under Mr. Joseph Seymour's able direction, most expressive renderings were given of a choice selection of ancient and modern madrigals and part-songs, and some choral arrangements of Irish airs by Dr. Jozé and himself. Special mention must be made of the spirited rendering of Benedict's 'Hunting song.' Mr. Melfort D'Alton was the solo vocalist and Miss Marie Douse the solo violinist.

The Orpheus Choir gave the second concert for the season also at the Antient Concert Rooms on February 6. Dr. J. C. Culwick conducted his admirable choir, who sang, in addition to other interesting items, Orlando Gibbons' 'Ah! dere heart,' and Thomas Bateson's 'Sister, awake.' Miss Lizzie Gorman and Mr. Montague Borwell were the solo vocalists, and Mr. Albert Fransella created quite a sensation with his magnificent flute playing.

On February 8, Herr Adolf Wilhelmj and Mr. Alfred Johnson co-operated in a violin and song recital at the Molesworth Hall. The violinist played with Miss Madeleine Moore Grieg's Sonata in G for violin and pianoforte, and besides some smaller pieces, Max Bruch's violin Concerto in G minor. Mr. Alfred Johnson—his first appearance on the concert platform since his return from the Stockhausen Gesangschule in Frankfurt-on-Main—displayed an agreeable tenor voice of good quality, which he uses with good taste and skill. He sang a number of German songs, and some Irish airs charmingly arranged by Dr. Esposito.

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave its first concert for the season on February 15. Beethoven's C minor Symphony was the chief item in the programme. Mozart's 'Magic Flute' overture, Sibelius's 'The swan of Tuonela,' and Tchaikovsky's 'Caprice Italien' were also performed. The solo violoncellist, Mr. Clyde Twelvetees, played Max Bruch's 'Kol Nidrei,' and Dr. Esposito conducted.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

For the second of the University Historical Concerts (on January 24) Professor Niecks chose a most interesting programme of unaccompanied music of the 16th century, and accompanied choral and solo vocal music of the early 18th century. Of the 16th century creations, the works selected were 'Missa Brevis' (Palestrina), and the mass 'Puisque j'ay perdu' (Orlando Lasso); while of the 18th century the Professor set before us Astorga's 'Stabat Mater' and Leonardo Leo's 'Dixit Dominus.' All these old-world compositions were finely rendered by Mr. Moonie's choir. The third Historical Concert (on February 14) was devoted to Arie di Bravura from Alessandro Scarlatti to Verdi and Gounod, and violin music, Geminiani to Wieniawski. Miss Mary Münchhoff and Miss Margaret Horne charmed and delighted the listeners by their brilliant and artistic exposition of the various pieces.

Only brief notice of the orchestral concerts is necessary, with the addition that the standard of performance is being rigidly maintained at its high level. The ninth concert (January 29) brought forward Tchaikovsky's 'Romeo and Juliet' overture, Dr. Cowen's new Suite of 'Old English Dances,'—which made such a success on its production at Glasgow two days previously—and Beethoven's 8th Symphony. Mlle. Camilla Landi was the vocalist and Dr. Cowen conducted. On February 5 the concert was choral and orchestral, Mr. Kirkhope's choir combining with the orchestra in a fine performance of the 'Flying Dutchman.' The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, and Messrs. Lloyd Chandos, Lewys James and Arthur Winckworth. At the eleventh concert (February 12) Herr Carl Halir played Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto, and other notable items were Schumann's 'Rhenish' symphony and the symphonic variations, 'Istar,' of Vincent d'Indy, performed for the first time here.

At his second chamber concert, on January 25, Mr. Chollet was again happily associated with Mr. A. W. Dace and Miss J. Scott. The interpretation of the A minor Sonata of Rubinstein, the most exacting item in the programme, showed consummate mastery of every detail by both performers.

The second concert of the Amateur Orchestral Society was notable in that it introduced a young pianist of great promise to public notice, Miss Gordon Mackenzie, the daughter of a well-known local musician. The young lady, who played with remarkable repose and insight in the D minor Concerto of Mendelssohn and other pieces, has been well taught, and should have a brilliant future. The other soloists, Messrs. Stirling Paterson and John Burnett, gave marked evidence of the high level of amateur attainment in this city. The orchestra, under Mr. Collinson's direction, played excellently throughout.

Mr. Denhof's colleagues at his third concert, on January 31, were Herr Kreisler and Miss Minnie Tracy (soprano vocalist). Especially commendable was a Brahms Sonata in G major (Op. 78), for pianoforte and violin, played by Messrs. Denhof and Kreisler. Miss Tracy sang with great refinement, and the accompaniments of Mr. A. S. Jupp were no less charming. The fourth concert, February 13, introduced for the first time here the Brussels String Quartet, who rendered with remarkable delicacy quartets by Grieg and Beethoven, and joined Mr. Denhof in César Franck's Quintet. Miss Mary Münchhoff sang in her own inimitable way, and again Mr. Jupp ably accompanied.

Mr. John E. Borland, in the regrettable absence of the Professor (Sir Frederick Bridge), delivered the Hilary Term Gresham Lectures on February 7, 8 and 9. The subjects of Mr. Borland's four excellent discourses—all musically illustrated—were 'Transposing instruments,' 'Giuseppe Tartini,' 'Folk-song and musical form,' and 'Lully's Operas.'

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The concert of the Choral and Orchestral Union on January 27 was invested with special interest by the production of a new 'Suite of Old English Dances,' composed by Dr. Cowen. The work consists of a 'Maypole Dance,' a 'Peasants' Dance,' a 'Minuet d'amour,' and an 'Old dance with variations.' The audience gave the novelty a very hearty reception and insisted on an encore of the 'Minuet d'amour,' a dainty movement that is likely to become extremely popular. The programme included Tchaikovsky's 4th Symphony and Beethoven's 'Namensfeier' Overture, while the vocalist was Miss M'Allister, and Dr. Cowen conducted. On February 6 'The Flying Dutchman' was performed before an audience whose dimensions testified to the popularity of Wagner's romantic opera even off the stage. With the exception of Act 3, the choral music was splendidly sung, and the solo vocalists—Misses Gleeson-White and T. Grabowsky, Messrs. Lloyd Chandos, Arthur Winckworth and Lewys James—performed their parts excellently. Mr. Joseph Bradley conducted with great skill. At the following concert, on February 13, a first performance here of Vincent d'Indy's Symphonic Variations 'Istar' made little impression, while, on the contrary, Schumann's 3rd Symphony (the Rhenish), a work too seldom heard here, was much enjoyed. In Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte concerto in B flat minor, Madame Teresa Carreño was the soloist in a work which suited her peculiar gifts as a pianist and musician, and a magnificent performance was the result.

On February 1 the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society, under the experienced baton of Mr. John Cullen, gave an enjoyable performance of Parts 1 and 2 of Berlioz's 'The Childhood of Christ,' Massenet's 'Narcissus,' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast.' The two first-named compositions have rarely been given here—Berlioz's delightful work never before with orchestral accompaniment—and Mr. Cullen's forces are to be congratulated on departing from the beaten track in their choral selections. The choruses were sung with praiseworthy accuracy and intelligence, and a band of forty performers from the Scottish Orchestra gave the accompaniments with excellent effect. The solo vocalists were Miss Lily Jeffrey, Messrs. Robert Burnett, Charles Knowles, Thorpe Davie, and J. F. Adams.

On February 15 the Govan Choral Union, ably conducted by Mr. A. Steven, gave a spirited rendering of Handel's 'Judas Maccabæus.' The solo music was sung by the Misses Macanochie and McAlpine, Messrs. Turpenney and Harvey; the accompaniments were played by an orchestra led by Mr. John Daly, and Mr. Thomas Berry presided at the organ. At his second chamber concert, on February 16, Herr Ernst Denhof secured the co-operation of the Brussels String Quartet in a programme which included Grieg's Quartet in G minor, César Franck's Quintet for pianoforte and strings, and Beethoven's 6th Quartet (Op. 18). The members of the Quartet are highly-skilled musicians, and the ensemble was as fine as any we have heard here. Miss Mary Munchhoff sang charmingly some of Schubert's songs, accompanied by Mr. A. Scott Jupp.

The Glasgow Glee and Madrigal Society, under Mr. B. W. Hartley, gave a highly interesting and enjoyable concert on February 19. The programme included a unique selection of motets, madrigals and glees by composers ranging from Arcadelt to Sullivan, and the rendering by the choir was marked by great taste and refinement. Vocal solos by Mrs. Hartley and Mr. Herbert Brown, and organ solos by the conductor, lent variety to the programme.

Mr. Henri Verbrugghen, the accomplished leader of the Scottish Orchestra, appeared as solo violinist at the thirteenth classical concert, on January 30, giving an excellent reading of Max Bruch's second Violin concerto (the first performance of the work at these concerts). Another unfamiliar but very acceptable number on the programme was Mozart's Andantino and Variations for solo oboe, horn, clarinet, bassoon and orchestra.

'The Musical Directory, Annual and Almanack' for the year 1906 is welcomed as an indispensable book of reference. This useful work has now been published for upwards of half-a-century by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co.

MUSIC IN GLOUCESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The annual concert of the Gloucester Orpheus Society, held at the Guildhall on February 5, showed that the Society has made marked progress and has established itself in popular estimation. The programme was one of very great interest, and every item was rendered in a way that practically defies criticism. To Dr. A. Herbert Brewer is, of course, due much of the praise, but he is willing to concede a great deal to the zeal, the intelligence, and the enthusiasm of the fine body of men under his command. Sir Hubert Parry (the President) contributed two new part-songs, 'Love wakes' and 'Hang care'; Mr. C. Lee Williams, ex-organist of Gloucester Cathedral, one entitled 'To Celia'; Dr. Harford Lloyd one, 'Give a man a horse'; and Dr. Brewer one, 'Shoot, false love'; all these compositions were written specially for, and dedicated to, the members of the Society, and in all cases the composer conducted. Other part-songs were 'Bind my brows' (Stainer); 'I wish to tune my quiv'ring lyre' (S. S. Wesley); 'Peace' (C. Lee Williams); 'Hope' (Garrett); 'There be none of beauty's daughters' (Brewer); 'A wet sheet and a flowing sea' (Lloyd); and 'Street music' (Hamilton Clarke). Pleasant variety from the part-singing was afforded by Miss Bessie Cartwright (soprano), and Miss Warwick Evans (violin). In these pieces the accompaniments were excellently played by Mr. A. Porter, a promising pupil of Dr. Brewer.

Mr. Arnold Lanor Mott deserves a word of hearty praise for his work in the parish of Huntley. He has formed there quite a good choral society, which gave a most creditable concert on February 8. Forty children attending the school sang 'Princess Tiny Tot,' conducted by Mr. Mott, in a delightful manner, and the members of the Society gave several part-songs quite acceptably. Mr. Mott is a well-known local musician and organist of the parish church. Commendable mention must be made of the Ross Choral Society, which gave a concert on February 13, when 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' was performed by band and chorus numbering over a hundred, conducted by Mr. Goodacre.

Probably at no time in the long history of the Gloucester Choral Society has so attractive a programme been presented as that at the concert given in the Shire Hall on February 20. No less than four festival works were given. Gloucester had for the first time the pleasure of hearing the work which Dr. Herbert Brewer composed for the last meeting at Worcester of the Three Choirs, entitled 'A song of Eden,' and 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin,' with which Sir Hubert Parry achieved so remarkable a success at the Norwich Festival last autumn. In addition to the foregoing works, Dr. Harford Lloyd's cantata 'The Song of Balder' (written for the Hereford Festival, 1885), was given, under the composer's direction, and Sir C. V. Stanford's famous 'Songs of the Sea' (Leeds, 1904), with Mr. Plunket Greene as soloist. Madame Esmé Atherden and Mr. Seth Hughes also sang, and two movements of Mr. W. H. Reed's 'Suite Venitienne' were played by the orchestra. Sir Hubert Parry conducted 'The Pied Piper,' and Dr. Brewer the remainder of the programme, except Dr. Lloyd's cantata.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The eighth Philharmonic Concert took place on January 23, when the programme included Haydn's Symphony No. 6, in D, Dvorák's overture 'Der Bauer ein Schelm,' Mozart's Andantino and Variations (from Concertante Quartet) for oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn with orchestra, and Moszkowski's Spanish Dance in C. M. Zacharewitsch gave a finished performance of Mozart's violin Concerto No. 6, and Madame Knupfer-Egli, a German singer of high attainments, sang songs by Beethoven, Schubert and Schumann with true charm and vocal discipline.

Elgar's 'King Olaf' was given with particularly good artistic results as the prominent feature at the Philharmonic Society's ninth concert on February 6. The choir again came through their task with flying colours. The King's music was splendidly rendered by Mr. Ben Davies, while Miss Agnes Nicholls's share of the 'Dagger scene' was sung with fine dramatic intensity. Mr. Charles Knowles gave the music of Ironbeard with real power and wise discretion.

The overture 'Finlandia,' by Sibelius, was given for the first time at these concerts.

The Philharmonic Society's tenth concert on February 20 was entirely devoted to orchestral music. The scheme comprised Beethoven's C minor Symphony; Cherubini's overture, 'Les Abencérages'; the love-scene from Berlioz's 'Roméo et Juliette' symphony; Saint-Saëns's prelude 'Le Déluge' (first time at these concerts); Mozart's minuet from the Divertimento in D; and the march from 'Tannhäuser.' Miss Amy Castles was the vocalist.

The Liverpool Symphony Orchestra's concert took place on January 29, and had as its chief interest Liszt's 'Hungarian' Symphony, admirably played by Mr. Vasco Akeroyd's forces. Schubert's Symphony in C was also given. Mr. Roy Collier was the vocalist.

The programme of the Societa Armonica concert on January 31 included Brahms's 2nd Symphony, Liszt's Hungarian Fantasia, and Thuille's 'Romantic' overture, the last-named work being given for the first time in Liverpool. Miss Pearl McCrossin was the vocalist.

Mr. Ernest Schiever's third concert, on February 3, at the College of Music, included Mozart's Divertimento Trio and string Quintet in G minor; Richard Strauss's pianoforte Quartet (Op. 13), whilst Mr. Frank Bertrand gave an effective performance of the same composer's pianoforte solo from Opus 3.

The Liverpool Orchestral Society's concert given on February 17 was concerned with a scheme of particular interest: Schumann's 'Manfred' overture, Dvorák's 'New World' symphony, Schubert's two entr'actes from 'Rosamunde,' the prelude to Act I. of 'Lohengrin,' and 'The Ride of the Valkyries.' The vocalist was Mr. Walter Hyde, and Mr. Vasco Akeroyd directed the orchestra in the much-regretted absence through illness of Mr. Granville Bantock.

It is pleasant to record the success of the newly-inaugurated Saturday Popular Concerts at the Central Hall. THE MUSICAL TIMES has always held out the hand of encouragement to enterprise, and 'good music at cheap rates' is a battle-cry worthy of emulation.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

During the month the work of the Hallé Society has been more than usually strenuous. We have had a Berlioz evening (February 1), with the 'Roméo et Juliette' symphony as well as the 'King Lear' overture; Strauss's 'Domestic' Symphony has come to its first hearing in Manchester (February 8), and a repetition is promised before the season closes; and we have had another valiant assault upon Beethoven's Mass in D—the fifth in the nearly half-century's history of the concerts. The symphony did not make the deepest of impressions; and the performance of the Mass was rather courageous than brilliant. The annual performance of 'Elijah' (January 25) was specially successful. The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Santley; the local principals for the Berlioz Symphony were Miss Bertha Guthrie, Mr. William Wild and Mr. Fowler Burton. The principals for the Beethoven Mass were Miss Fillunger, Miss Florence Oliver, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Frederic Austin. At the concert of February 8, Dr. Brodsky played a Bach Violin concerto in A minor, and the Adagio from Spohr's ninth concerto, with great finish and manly grace of expression. Dr. Richter conducted all these performances.

At the afternoon recital of the Gentlemen's Concerts (February 7), Lady Hallé and Mr. Leonard Borwick gave a most convincing rendering of the 'Kreutzer' Sonata. Lady Hallé's solos were the familiar 'Grave ed Allegro' by Corelli, and 'Sarabande and Tambourin' by Leclair. Mr. Borwick's solos were all from Brahms—Ballade (Op. 10, No. 2); Intermezzo (Op. 10, No. 3); and Scherzo in E flat minor (Op. 4). Miss Meta Büring was the vocalist.

The programme of the Brodsky Quartet Concert on January 31 contained the Quartet No. 4 in A, of the Russian composer, Tanéeff; Beethoven's Quartet in F (Op. 18, No. 1); and Bach's Concerto in D minor, for two violins. Remarkable enthusiasm was evoked by the playing of the last-named by Lady Hallé and Dr. Brodsky. The Tanéeff quartet disappointed us. In a lengthy attempt to break original ground the composer succeeds in becoming eccentric, to the verge, once or twice, of downright cacophony. In the Bach concerto, Miss Olga Neruda, Lady Hallé's sister, was at the pianoforte.

Mr. Max Mayer, at his Chamber Concert on January 29, was assisted by Mr. John Kruse (violin) and Mr. Herbert Withers (violincello), of the Kruse Quartet. With the former he played Beethoven's Sonata in G for pianoforte and violin (Op. 96); with the latter Saint-Saëns's Sonata in C minor (Op. 32). The artists co-operated in playing Schumann's Trio in D minor (Op. 63). Prof. Carl Halir, a member of the Joachim Quartet, appeared at Mr. Max Mayer's second concert on February 19. The two artists played sonatas for pianoforte and violin by Beethoven (Op. 30, No. 2, in C minor), Mozart (in E flat), and Richard Strauss (in E flat, Op. 18). Mrs. Max Mayer was, as usual, the vocalist.

At Mr. Brand Lane's concert, on February 10, the band and chorus—the former constituted of a draft of sixty from the Hallé Orchestra—engaged in a performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' and of Dr. Cowen's 'John Gilpin.' The principals were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Emily Foxcroft, Mr. Whitworth Mitton, Mr. Cuthbert Allan and Mr. Charles Tree. This was the first occasion upon which, in Manchester, dear old Cheapside John has had full instrumental honours done him in running his historic race; and the realistic humours of the orchestra greatly entertained a very large audience.

The Gentlemen's Glee Club, under the direction of Dr. Henry Watson, on February 6, successfully repeated last year's experiment of an evening devoted to old English music, with, as the programme quaintly put it, 'Ye Chest of viols, and eke ye virginals.' The harpsichord used on this occasion was one by Shudi & Broadwood, having the Venetian swell. At the Promenade Concert of February 3 the practice was continued of introducing less frequently-heard instrumental solos. Two such were played—a flute solo, written and orchestrated by Mr. M. G. Speelman, a member of the band; and a bassoon solo—Weber's 'Hungarian' Concerto. At the fourth Schiller-Anstalt concert on February 17, the Brussels String Quartet—MM. Franz Schörg, Hans Daucher, Paul Miry, and J. Gaillard—played in remarkable sympathy, and with studied incisiveness, Glazounow's Quartet in A (Op. 64), and the second of Beethoven's 'Rasoumovsky' Quartets. Fräulein Juliette Wihl, of Brussels, was solo pianist. The Vocal Society, under Dr. Henry Watson, gave the third concert of its thirty-ninth season on February 7. Mr. Edward Isaacs, in an interesting pianoforte recital on February 5, indicated a great advance in insight as well as in breadth of style, in his rendering of Beethoven's 'Sonata Appassionata.' His performance of the Liszt Rhapsody, No. 9 ('Carneval de Pesh'), was a most brilliant performance.

Some form of memorial of the late Dr. Henry Hiles is being publicly advocated here. The one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of Mozart's birth was, unnoticed in Manchester so far as performances were concerned, but a Manchester paper informed us it was being bravely commemorated in Vienna.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the concert of the Newcastle Musical Society on January 31 Mr. Alfred Wall, assisted by five local amateurs, gave a very creditable performance of Brahms's noble Sextet for strings in G. In the remaining part of the programme Mr. W. J. Dodds, also a local amateur, sang well, and Mr. Ernest Brentnall contributed pianoforte solos, besides joining Mr. Wall in Grieg's second Violin sonata.

On February 14 the Middlesbrough Musical Union performed Dvorák's Te Deum and Handel's 6th Chandos Anthem, these two works forming an interesting contrast. Tchaikovsky's pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor was played by Herr Wilhelm Backhaus, and the solo vocalists were Miss Jennie Taggart and Mr. H. Lane Wilson. Mr. N. Kilburn conducted.

A programme chosen by plébiscite from a list supplied to subscribers was played by the Scottish Orchestra on February 16, under the conductorship of Dr. Cowen. The result of the voting was as follows: Tchaikovsky, 4th Symphony; Wagner, 'Meistersinger' Overture and the Good Friday music from 'Parsifal'; Mendelssohn, 'Hebrides' Overture; Liszt, 'Hungarian' Rhapsody No. 1; Saint-Saëns, Serenade for violin and cor anglais; and Cowen, 'Two English Dances.' The audience was enthusiastic, and, strangely, least so with the Wagner items. Possibly the proximity of Tchaikovsky's strenuous music lessened the effect of the purely orchestral features of Wagner's works. An interesting light upon present musical taste is shown by the fact that in the symphonic list, Beethoven's 4th and Brahms's 1st Symphony came next the Tchaikovsky, while the remaining votes were apportioned in the following order: Schubert, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Mozart, Haydn, Raff and Dvorák. The concert formed one of the musical feasts provided by the Newcastle and Choral Union which are so much enjoyed and appreciated.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The most interesting recent event in local musical circles was the first visit to Norwich of Michael Zacharewitsch, the eminent violinist, on the occasion of an orchestral concert given by Mr. Ernest Harcourt, on January 25, to celebrate the opening of the new Victoria Rooms recently erected by him. M. Zacharewitsch played the first movement from Tchaikovsky's violin Concerto, and, in conjunction with Mrs. Walter Gemmer, the 'Kreutzer' Sonata and Tartini's 'Il trillo del diavolo,' and two violin solos by Cowen and Wieniawski. All these compositions were performed with great brilliancy and technical skill, and received with vociferous applause by a crowded audience. Much credit is due to Mrs. Gemmer for having undertaken the pianoforte part in the 'Kreutzer' Sonata at very short notice. Among other items of the programme were portions of Mendelssohn's oratorio 'Christus,' Handel's overture 'Ottone,' and Molique's March from 'Abraham.'

The choral society at Cromer, under the baton of Mr. A. Heath, late assistant-organist at Norwich Cathedral, gave a very successful concert on February 15, at which Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' was given. The chorus consisted of over a hundred voices, thirty being drawn from the adjoining town of Sheringham. Miss Mildred Rix, Mrs. J. Danaher, and Messrs. S. Hemmings and J. H. Brockbank were the vocalists.

A successful concert was also given, on February 14, by the Great Yarmouth Orchestral Society, under the direction of Mr. C. W. Moss, which showed a marked advance on the previous efforts of the Society. Miss Edith Patching and Mr. Arthur Walenn were the vocalists, and Miss Amy Flood-Porter contributed some excellent violoncello solos.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

At the Circus Street Hall on January 25, Mr. William Woolley's Choral Society gave a concert, when the programme was selected from works by Elgar, Brahms, Moellendorf, Stanford, Pinsuti, Leslie, Walmisley and Calcott. The performance of these excerpts was executed in a manner reflecting the greatest credit on the careful and musicianly direction of the conductor.

The first performance in Nottingham of Elgar's 'Caractacus' took place on February 8, when it was rendered by the Sacred Harmonic Society. Judging by the enthusiasm of the large audience who were present, the work is one which the Society will do well to repeat at no distant date, and the interpretation on the whole reflected great credit on all who took part. Special praise is due to the soloists, Miss Agnes Nicholls, Mr. Maxwell, Mr. Charles Knowles and Mr. Harry Dearth, of whom Mr. Knowles received quite an ovation for his singing of the part of Caractacus, and Miss Nicholls and Mr. Maxwell thoroughly roused the enthusiasm of the vast audience by their singing. To Mr. Allen Gill, the conductor, all praise must be meted, as well as to those who assisted him, for their painstaking care.

At Melbourne (Derby) 'Elijah' was given by the Glee and Madrigal Society on January 30, when the solos were sung by Madame Aston, Miss Gertrude Pegg, Mr. C. W. Skelton and Mr. James Coleman.

On February 1 at Kirton (Lincolnshire), and February 5 at Swineshead, the village Choral Societies gave a performance of Cowen's 'Rose Maiden,' under the direction of Mr. G. H. Gregory.

Of special interest to lovers of chamber music was the programme of Miss Cantelo's concert on February 16, when an opportunity was given of hearing Beethoven's Sonata for horn and pianoforte (Op. 17), as well as the Brahms Trio for pianoforte, violin and horn (Op. 40). To Herr Ferencz Hegedüs, Mr. A. Borsdorf and Miss Cantelo, these works presented no difficulties, and the result was a very fine performance. Besides the above, Herr Hegedüs was heard in Tartini's Violin concerto in D minor, and Miss Cantelo contributed a dignified and artistic performance of the Waldstein Sonata.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Sheffield Choral Union is experiencing fluctuating fortunes this season. A recent 'benefit' concert, organized to reduce a heavy debt, resulted in a profit of £40 or so. Yet when the excellent Society gave (in the closing days of January) an admirable performance of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny,' the venture was inadequately supported. A commemorative performance of the 'Jupiter' Symphony was also given under Mr. J. Duffell at the same concert. The Choral Union has a long and honoured history; its prosperity and the continuance of a valuable educational work are greatly to be desired.

The Sheffield Male Glee and Madrigal Society is another local choral body possessing strong claims to support. An enjoyable concert on February 10 proved how conscientiously old and new male-voice music is studied by the members. With a few more first-basses the little Society would be perfectly balanced. Fine tone and technique were revealed in an arrangement of 'All hail, thou queen of night,' 'Good-night, beloved' (Pinsuti), 'By Celia's arbour,' and other glees and part-songs. Mr. A. S. Burrows conducted.

An excellent performance of 'St. Paul' must be credited to the Wincobank and Blackburn Harmonic Society which, under Mr. Swaine's capable leadership, is going from strength to strength. The singing of the chorus witnessed both enthusiasm and ability. Among other notable musical events in the district has been a performance of 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast' by the Barnsley St. Cecilia Society, under Dr. Coward. Mr. John Coates was the vocalist. Stanford's motet, 'The Lord of might,' was performed at St. Mary's Church on February 18, and on the following night Smieton's 'King Arthur' was given at South Street Schools.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

The two concerts given by the Leeds Choral Union, on February 14 and 15, formed an event of special interest. Cramming so much music into two successive days may hardly be the most wholesome arrangement, but having secured the help of the Scottish Orchestra it was no doubt economic reasons which dictated the policy. Two choral works of magnitude were given: Beethoven's 9th Symphony and Verdi's Requiem, together with Dr. Cowen's 'John Gilpin' and a Mozart motet, while the orchestral pieces included Tchaikovsky's 4th Symphony and Liszt's 'Tasso,' of which brilliant performances were given. The choral singing was of a high order, and in the Requiem reached the highest level attained by this Society. Trained by Dr. Coward and conducted by Dr. Cowen, the choir's performance of Verdi's emotional music, with its stormy outbursts and vivid colour, was quite admirable. The Choral Symphony was well done, but its depth of feeling was barely realized. The soloists in the Requiem,—Miss Antonia Dolores, Miss Ravogli, Mr. Brearley and Mr. Herbert Parker—were most efficient, and Miss Dolores' fine vocal style was employed to conspicuous advantage in this music.

On January 24 the Leeds Subscription Concert consisted of orchestral music by the Hallé Orchestra under Dr. Richter, who gave us some really great performances of works which ranged from the 'Scotch Symphony' to 'Till Eulenspiegel.'

Mr. John Dunn gave a fine and individual interpretation of Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto, and took part also in Bach's 4th 'Brandenburg' concerto.

At the Leeds Municipal Concert on February 3, Mr. Fricker conducted an Elgar programme, including the early but unduly neglected 'Froissart' Overture, which one has not had many chances of hearing since its first performance at the Worcester Festival in 1890. The 'Cockaigne' Overture, the two little pieces entitled 'Dream Children,' and three of the 'Sea Pictures' (soloist, Miss Pawson) were also given, and Miss Ella Child took the solo part in Saint-Saëns's 'Afrique' fantasia, playing with grace and finish.

On February 17 a concert performance of Gounod's charming operetta 'Philémon et Baucis' took up a portion of the programme, and Mr. Elliott, the leader of the Municipal Orchestra, introduced Arensky's Violin concerto. There was a most interesting novelty in Mr. J. W. Nicholl's symphonic poem 'Alastor,' of which a fine performance was given under the composer's direction. It is a powerful composition, full of energy and vivid in colouring. Another example of contemporary work was Mr. Reginald Steggall's 'Concertstück' for organ and orchestra, a thoughtful work, whose merits it was not easy to appraise, for the Town Hall organ is not a sympathetic instrument at the best, and it appeared to the less advantage since the orchestra was never perfectly in tune with it.

The Leeds Bohemian Quartet, whose programmes maintain a judicious balance between the old and the new, played at their concert on January 31 a highly original string Quartet (in G minor) by Debussy. The work is strange in idiom, but though some passages seem on a first hearing to affect strangeness, the general impression is one of power and of a genuine individuality. The other quartets played at this concert by Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Moxon and Bolton were Beethoven's 3rd 'Rasoumovsky' and Dvorák's in E flat (Op. 51).

The Leeds Musical Union, on January 22, sang a number of part-songs of different ages and types, the interest of the concert centering in two by Cornelius, 'There was an aged monarch' and 'Never can the tear-drops tell thee.' Considering the strangeness of their idiom, they were well sung under Mr. Noel Bell's direction. Mr. Johann Rasch's masterly playing of Bach's Chaconne and other violin solos was a feature of this concert. The Annual Leeds Parish Choir Concert is an event of too domestic a nature to be of great general interest, but that given on February 8 deserves record as being the occasion of the first public appearance of Dr. Bairstow since he assumed the duties of organist of the Leeds Parish Church, in which capacity he has already given abundant evidence of his fitness for the position. The Leeds Musical Evening, on February 20, does not call for extended notice; the violin solos by Mr. Francis Macmillen and the pianoforte playing of Miss Winifred Christie being most deserving of record.

BRADFORD.

The Bradford Permanent Orchestra is adopting the plan of giving a distinctive character to each of its concerts this season. On January 27 we had a Wagner programme, but it was not forgotten that this was the 150th anniversary of Mozart's birth, so the 'Zauberflöte' overture was played, and 'Voï ce sapète' sung very charmingly by Miss Hilda de Angelis, in honour of the occasion. Mr. Edward Davies, a dramatic tenor, was the other vocalist. On February 10 Russian music furnished the programme, Tchaikovsky being much in evidence, and the posthumously published 'Voyevode' overture being included, with the familiar 'Casse Noisette' and '1812.' Mr. Dunn played the first movement of the violin Concerto, and the vocalist was Miss Mildred Jones. Mr. Allen Gill conducted both concerts most ably.

On February 2 the Festival Choral Society gave, under Dr. Cowen's direction, the 'Hymn of Praise,' together with Bach's motet 'Sing ye to the Lord,' which Dr. Cowen has invited this chorus to sing at one of the London Philharmonic concerts this season. It was sung with admirable spirit. The principals were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Nellie Judson, and Mr. Lloyd Chandos. The Subscription Concert on February 9 was miscellaneous, but the fine pianoforte playing of that great artist Madame Carreño gave it distinction. Mr. Herman Sandby played some violoncello solos with great spirit, and the four vocalists, Miss Evangeline Florence, Miss Hilda Wilson, Mr. H. Wilde and Mr. H. Lane-Wilson joined in a most spirited performance of the last-named musician's genial song-cycle, 'Flora's holiday.' At the Harrison Concert on January 30 a young English pianist, Miss Ethel Leginska, made a good impression by her very powerful playing.

OTHER TOWNS.

York has been favoured by a visit from Mr. Hugo Becker, one of the greatest of contemporary violoncellists, who appeared at a concert given by Miss Eisele, a Leeds pianist, and took part with her in sonatas by Beethoven and Strauss, besides playing some solos in masterful style, with splendid force and rhythmical energy. On February 19 the York Symphony Society, of which Mr. T. Tertius Noble is the energetic trainer and conductor, gave an interesting concert. The feature of most general interest was a new Suite by Mr. Noble—a series of five pieces entitled respectively March, Gavotte, Lamentation, Réverie and Carnival. It is all exceedingly clever music, and the interest is well-sustained, though it is a tactical mistake to put the Réverie immediately after the Lament, both being in slow time, and without much relief or contrast. The Carnival is the most original, and picturesque and clever, while the March, which is very broad and stately, is perhaps the happiest section.

Foreign Notes.

AACHEN.

The production of a new choral work by Max Reger, 'Gesang der Verklärten' (Song of the Redeemed), Op. 71, took place at the fourth Municipal Subscription Concert under Prof. Eberhard Schwickerath, on January 18. The piece, for five-part chorus (two sopranos) and orchestra, is described as the most original and daring thing in music, and, moreover, as the most difficult which has ever been placed before a chorus. The long orchestral introduction (52 bars) is highly praised for its majestic beauty, but with the entry of the chorus the music becomes so unprecedentedly complicated and harsh, not to say ugly, that even Richard Strauss's 'Domestic' Symphony, which was played at the same concert, was welcomed as a great relief in the way of beauty and simplicity! Yet there is no denying the astonishing mastery and power displayed in Reger's work.

BARCELONA.

At the Teatro del Liceo a new opera, 'Emporium,' by Señor Enrico Morera has been successfully produced. The work is partly based on Catalan national folk-songs and dances.

BASLE.

A new 'romantic' Symphony (the 5th, in F major), by the foremost Swiss composer, Hans Huber, has been produced by the Allgemeine Musikgesellschaft, under the direction of H. Suter. The work bears the title of 'The fiddler of Gmünd,' and has an important obbligato violin solo part, thus recalling Berlioz's 'Harold' Symphony.

BAYREUTH.

This year's festival performances will take place between July 22 and August 20. 'Tristan und Isolde,' conducted by Generalmusikdirektor Felix Mottl, will be performed on July 22 and 31, and August 5, 12 and 19; 'Parsifal' is announced for July 23, and August 1, 4, 7, 8, 11 and 20. Of the 'Ring of the Nibelung' two cycles only will be given, viz., on July 25-28, and August 14-17. Dr. Hans Richter will conduct the first 'Ring' cycle and Siegfried Wagner the second, while Dr. Muck will be responsible for 'Parsifal.'

BERLIN.

Mr. Charles Williams gave a concert here on January 27, assisted by the Philharmonic orchestra. One novelty in the programme was Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings. The name and also the works of the composer are becoming familiar in Germany, but this was, we believe, the first time any work of his was given here under the direction of a British conductor. The programme included Brahms's 4th Symphony.

Hugo Wolf's opera 'Der Corregidor' was performed for the first time here on January 15 at the New Comic Opera House, and very warmly received.—Rubinstein's best opera, 'The Demon,' is in preparation at the same enterprising institution. First performances are also announced of 'Romeo and Juliet in the Village,' by Fritz Delius (for the first time anywhere); 'Onkel Dazumal' (Uncle Once-upon-a-time), by Jacques Dalcroze; 'Die schwarze Nina,' by Alfred Kaiser; Leoncavallo's 'Zaza,' Filiasi's 'Manuel Menendez,' Dupont's 'The Goatherdess,' and Pizzi's 'Rosalba'—a comprehensive and attractive list if the promises made in the prospectus are only kept.—An early work of Richard Strauss—which, strange to say, is still in MS.—a Suite in B flat for wood-wind, four horns, and bass tuba, was performed at the third orchestra-chamber concert under E. N. von Reznicek, without, however, creating any deep impression.—Mr. Frederick Delius's Symphony with Chorus 'Appalachia,' produced by Professor Julius Butts at the Lower Rhenish Festival of 1905 (at Düsseldorf), was performed on February 5 by the Stern'scher Gesangverein, and made a deep impression. The performance under Herr Oskar Fried was excellent, the glowing orchestration especially causing delight, while the originality and imagination, the daring polyphony and poetic feeling displayed in the elaborate work stamped it as a 'novelty' of quite exceptional value. When will this English composer come to his own in the land of his birth?

BREMEN.

At the Ninth Philharmonic concert, on February 13, a new symphonic poem in six parts, entitled 'Frühling, ein Kampf und Lebenslied' (Spring, a Song of strife and life), by Paul Scheinplug, was produced.

BRESLAU.

The programme of the sixteenth Silesian Musical Festival, to be held here on July 17-19, is to include Mozart's 'Requiem,' Schumann's 'Faust,' Liszt's symphonic poem 'Prometheus,' and his chorus from Herder's 'Entfesselter Prometheus' (Prometheus unbound), Bruckner's Te Deum, Richard Strauss's 'Domestic' Symphony, the final scene from Wagner's 'Götterdämmerung,' Beethoven's 8th Symphony, a choral work, 'Sehnsucht,' by Prof. Georg Schumann, a new pianoforte Concerto by Count Hochberg, and the final scene from 'Die Meistersinger.' The chorus will number 850 voices, and the orchestra will be the Berlin Hofkapelle, under Dr. Muck.

COLOGNE.

Felix von Woysch's new choral work 'Totentanz' (Dance of Death), a Mysterium, was produced at the eighth Gürzenich Concert under Fritz Steinbach, and achieved a great success.

DESSAU.

'Hiarne,' the grand opera by Frau Ingeborg von Bronsart, was performed here for the first time on February 4, at the Ducal Court Theatre, with remarkable success. There can be little doubt that of all living lady composers Frau von Bronsart is facile principessa in the difficult field of dramatic music.

DRESDEN.

Fräulein Gertrud Steiner, a pupil of Prof. Florian Zajie, has been appointed 'Konzertmeister' (leader) of the Gewerbehause Orchestra. She is most likely the first lady violinist to be chosen for such a post in a purely professional (and non-student) orchestra.

HALLE-ON-THE-SAALE.

A new opera, 'Cesare Borgia,' was successfully produced on February 6. The libretto is by Henrik Götz, and the music by Kappellmeister B. Dittell, the first conductor of the local theatre.

HANOVER.

At the fifth Subscription Concert, under Herr Doebber, Elgar's 'Enigma' Variations were performed here for the first time with pronounced success.

LEIPZIG.

Madame Maria Gay, the Spanish prima-donna, who appeared on London concert platforms a year or two ago, has sung 'Carmen' several times at the Municipal Theatre (conductor, Mr. Arthur Nikisch), and achieved a great success in spite, or perhaps because of, her very 'naturalistic' interpretation of the delectable heroine.—Two Symphonies by Anton Bruckner were heard here within one week, viz., the 4th (in E flat), at the second 'modern evening' of the Winderstein Orchestra, on January 8, and the 8th (in C minor) at the twelfth Gewandhaus Concert on January 11, conducted by Arthur Nikisch. The latter performance especially, one of the great conductor's finest achievements, made a deep impression, more especially the superb reading of the slow movement, of which Nikisch—no mean judge, surely—is reported to have said that it is absolutely without a rival in the whole realm of music!

NEUCHÂTEL.

The following works have been chosen for performance at the seventh Swiss Tonkünstlerfest, viz., Symphony in F, by Peter Fassbänder; symphonic poem 'Olympischer Frühling' (Olympian spring), by Walter Courvoisier; violin Concerto by Joseph Lauber; violoncello Concerto by Emanuel Moor; 'Mortuus pro nobis,' for soli, chorus and orchestra, by Paul Brenner; a Psalm for chorus and orchestra, by Otto Barblan; 'Moisson,' for solo quartet, chorus and organ, by Ed. Combe; 'Deux Noël's,' for female chorus and orchestra, by Jacques Ehrhart; 'Die Quelle,' for tenor solo, chorus and orchestra, by Ernst Isler; and 'Das letzte Lied' (The last song), for chorus and orchestra, by Karl Vogler.

NEU STRELITZ.

'Die Strandhexe' (the Strand Witch), a new opera by J. B. Zerlett, was produced here on January 21, and met with a favourable reception.

NICE.

'William Ratcliff,' a new opera by Xavier Leroux, produced under the direction of the composer, was warmly received.

PARIS.

Schumann's masterpiece, the splendid setting of Scenes from Goethe's 'Faust,' was revived at the Lamoureux Concert of January 20. The second version of the mystic chorus, 'Das Ewig Weibliche zieht uns hinan,' was on this occasion heard for the first time in France. The performance was repeated at the following concert, on February 4. M. Chevillard conducted with loving care, and Mr. Frölich—who some years ago appeared with great success in London—was admirable in the baritone parts.—Brahms's 'Gesang der Parzen' was performed at the Conservatoire Concert of January 21, under the direction of M. Georges Marty, and on the same day a new Symphony in E minor, by M. G. Enesco, a young Roumanian violinist, was produced with great success. The work, in three movements, displays much talent, and a great deal of youthful freshness and vigour. M. Colonne secured a splendid performance.

STUTTGART.

Eugen d'Albert's musical comedy 'Flauto solo' was enthusiastically received here at its first performance in Germany. The performance, under Hofkapellmeister Pohl, was splendid.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

AMERSHAM.—An excellent performance of Mendelssohn's 95th Psalm, together with part-songs, &c., was given by the newly-formed Amersham Choral Society, in the Town Hall, on February 8. The solo vocalists were the Misses Mathews, Miss Josephine Chapman and Mr. Gervase Cooper. Mrs. Mathews' string orchestra, together with the aid of Miss O. Mathews at the pianoforte, provided the accompaniments. Miss Gwendoline Griffiths played a violoncello solo, and joined the Misses Mathews in a quartet. Mr. Edward G. Croager ably conducted.

BRIGHTON.—The Sacred Harmonic Society gave a performance on February 15 of Sullivan's oratorio 'The Prodigal Son,' and Barnett's cantata 'The building of the ship.' Both choir and orchestra were alike excellent in their rendering of these works, under the firm and judicious direction of Mr. Robert Taylor. The solo vocalists were Miss Evelyn Vernham, Miss Lalla Parry, Mr. Frank Tebbutt, and Mr. Daniel Price, a thoroughly satisfactory quartet, and the performance was altogether successful.—An interesting pianoforte and vocal recital was given at the Pavilion on February 16 by Miss Adele Haas and Signor Parisotti. The former was heard to advantage in pieces by Chopin, Liszt, Scarlatti and Schumann, and in some clever variations on the hymn-tune 'And now, O Father,' by her teacher, Mr. William Coenen. Signor Parisotti displayed a fine voice and cultivated style in a variety of songs, and Madame Parisotti was a sympathetic accompanist.

BROMLEY.—The recently-established Choral Society gave the first concert in the Drill Hall on January 24. The choir, which numbered eighty-five voices, sang with excellent expression 'When flowery meadows' (Palestrina), 'I saw lovely Phyllis' (Pearsall), 'Slumber song' (F. N. Löhr), 'A border raid' (Harvey Löhr), and notably Waddington's choral ballad 'John Gilpin.' There was a small string band, and the solo vocalists were Miss Perceval Allen and Mr. Franklin Clive. Mr. F. Fertel conducted with care and ability.

BURNLEY.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' in the Mechanics' Institution on February 13. The choir sang with excellent spirit and good attack, and were most ably supported by the Hallé Orchestra. Madame Emily Brown, Mr. John Harrison and Mr. Herbert Brown were the solo vocalists, and Mr. Widdop was an able conductor.

CAMBERLEY.—The Yorktown and Camberley Choral Society opened its tenth season on February 7 by a concert to the memory of its late conductor, Mr. Arthur Lake. Mozart's 12th Mass and Mendelssohn's 'Hear my prayer' were the main features of an attractive programme, which included an anthem, 'O how amiable are Thy dwellings,' composed by Mr. Lake not long before his death. The works were very creditably performed, the solo vocalists being Miss Patricia Plowman, Miss Adelaide Twort, Mr. Alexander Webster, Mr. Dan Richards and Mr. Albert Cockell. Miss Annetta Tidbury was the solo violinist. Mr. Percy D. Steele presided at the organ. The choir was supported by an excellent orchestra (ably led by Mr. T. Connor), and Mr. Hubert L. Steele conducted.

CHARD.—The Harmonic Society gave its annual concert on February 15. The chief items of the programme were Part I. of Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul,' and Elgar's 'Banner of St. George.' The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Barnicott, Mrs. Mayne, Mr. Henry Plevy and Mr. S. Bishop. Mr. Frank Bartlett played Beethoven's Romance in G for violin, and Mrs. R. Stephens Dunkler's Reverie for violoncello. The singing of the choir was one of the best features of the evening. At the afternoon rehearsal Mr. J. W. Gifford, president of the Society, made a presentation, on behalf of the choir, to Mrs. MacDonald (accompanist) and Mr. F. G. Risdon (conductor) as tokens of esteem.

CHRISTCHURCH (N.Z.).—The fourth subscription concert of the Musical Union took place in the Canterbury Hall on December 20, when, in addition to the excellent performance of the orchestra in Sullivan's 'Overture di Ballo,' an entr'acte from Massenet's 'Don Cesar de Bazan,' and Mozart's Symphony in E flat, a welcome feature of the programme was the re-introduction of part-songs by the choir. These included Elgar's 'O happy eyes,' Dudley Buck's 'Hymn to music,' 'The river floweth strong' (Rogers) and Cowen's 'Spring.' These were sung with much delicacy of expression. Dr. Bradshaw conducted.

CORSHAM.—The Choral Society gave a most successful performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' (Parts I. and II.) at the Methuen Hall on February 7. Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. George Brierley and Mr. C. E. Poole were a satisfactory trio of solo vocalists. The choir reached a high degree of excellence, and obviously had been carefully trained by the conductor, Mr. Lewin Spackman. A small but efficient orchestra was ably led by Mr. Herbert Spackman.

ELLACOMBE.—A successful concert was given by the Choral Society in the Ellacombe National Schoolroom, Torquay, on February 14. The programme included Schubert's cantata 'The Song of Miriam' and Vincent's Choral Fantasia on National Melodies. The soloists were Madame Adeline Gregory, Mr. Francis H. Fothergill and Mr. H. Tozer (vocalists), Mr. Frank Crocker (violin), and Mrs. Anderson (pianoforte). Miss Gilberthorpe and Miss Lottie Thomas played the accompaniments on the pianoforte and harmonium respectively. Mr. Henry T. Gilberthorpe conducted.

EPHING.—The choir of the parish church gave an excellent performance of two operettas on February 7. 'The Captain of the School' (G. F. Vincent) was given by the choir-boys in the first part of the programme, and the gentlemen of the choir gave 'The Monastery,' a new work by H. J. Taylor, founded on an incident in Scott's novel of that name. The whole performance reflected much credit on the director, Mr. F. C. Thomas.

FAVERSHAM.—The Philharmonic Society gave its eleventh concert on January 23 in the Lecture Hall, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha' complete was performed. The choir sang throughout with admirable spirit and good attack, and the orchestra also was equally satisfactory. The solo vocalists were Miss Fanny Chetham, Mr. Fred Norcup and Mr. Jack Martin. Much credit is due to Mr. W. J. Keech, who conducted, for the successful result of his efforts.

FOLKESTONE.—Cliffe's 'Ode to the North-east wind' was performed by the Philharmonic Society on February 14. The programme included the overture to 'Masaniello' and 'Casse Noisette' Suite played by the orchestra, and the following unaccompanied part-songs: 'My love dwelt in a northern land' (Elgar), 'Drops of rain' (Lemmens), 'A spring song' (Pinsuti), 'Sweet and low' (Barnby), 'Three fishers went sailing' (Rogers); also the march and chorus from Tannhäuser, accompanied by the orchestra. Mr. H. J. Taylor was at the pianoforte, and the performance was conducted by Mr. F. E. Fletcher.

KIDDERMINSTER.—The Choral Society gave the first concert of the season on February 15. The works performed were Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha' and Gade's 'Erl-King's daughter.' The principal vocalists were Miss Estelle Lermitt, Miss Marie Clarson and Mr. William Higley. The choir sang with spirit and expression, and the band did full justice to the orchestration. Mr. J. Irving Glover conducted.

LLANELLY.—The Tabernacle Choir gave a good performance of Barnby's 'Rebekah' on February 6, assisted by Miss Mabel Manson, Mr. James Davies, and Mr. Dan Richards. An efficient orchestra played the accompaniments, and Mr. C. Meudwy Davies conducted.

LOUTH.—The Choral Society gave its annual concert in the Town Hall on February 15, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Sterndale Bennett's 'May Queen' were performed. The chorus sang with accuracy and precision, while the orchestra, ably led by Mr. J. E. Hilton, did full justice to the symphony in the 'Hymn of Praise' and the accompaniments. The solo vocalists were Miss Jennie Ellis, Mrs. Price, Miss Dawson, Mr. Lindsey Squire and Mr. Charles Parker. Mr. Owen M. Price conducted.

OTTERY ST. MARY.—The Choral Society gave a successful concert on February 16, when Cowen's cantata 'St. John's Eve' occupied the first half of the programme. The principal vocalists were Miss Linford Brown, Miss Frodsham, Mr. A. G. Wills and Mr. S. J. Bishop. The accompaniments were played by a small and efficient orchestra, led by Miss R. Lansdown. The choir sang with intelligence and precision, and the performance reflected great credit on the conductor, Mr. R. A. Ebdon.

PERTH.—Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' was performed for the first time here in the City Hall, on February 20, with considerable success. The choir sang with all needful earnestness and intelligence, reflecting much credit on all concerned in the production, and the orchestra (led by Mr. Cole) was thoroughly efficient. The solo vocalists were Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Robert Burnett, all of whom were successful in their interpretations of the composer's music. Mr. F. S. Graves conducted with skill and discretion.

ROSS.—The Choral Society's annual concert took place in the Corn Exchange on February 13, when the chief feature of the programme was 'Hiawatha's wedding-feast,' in which the choir and orchestra acquitted themselves successfully. Miss K. Hart was an excellent accompanist, and Mr. H. M. Goodacre conducted.

SIMON'S TOWN (CAPE COLONY).—The Philharmonic Society gave a concert on December 13 last, when the programme included Gaul's cantata 'The Holy City,' Mr. H. Austen Palmer conducted.

TORONTO.—The National Chorus gave two magnificent concerts in the Massey Hall on January 19 and 20. This splendid Chorus had the assistance of Mr. Walter Damrosch and his New York Symphony Orchestra of eighty-six members. Bridge's 'Flag of England,' in which Miss Helen Davies was the soprano soloist, received a fine rendering. Dr. C. H. Lloyd's 'Allen-a-Dale' was also much appreciated. Selections from 'Lohengrin,' 'Parsifal,' 'Die Walküre,' 'Siegfried,' and 'Die Meistersinger' received a fine interpretation by Mr. Walter Damrosch's Orchestra. At the second concert, which was purely orchestral, Miss Marie Hall received an ovation for her performance of Mendelssohn's Violin concerto. The 'Scotch' Symphony and Elgar's 'Introduction and Allegro' for strings were amongst the items most highly appreciated. Dr. Albert Ham, conductor of the National Chorus, is doing excellent work in the cause of music in Toronto.

WOKING.—The Musical Society gave its first concert of the season, under the conductorship of Mr. Patrick White, in the Public Hall on February 9. Elgar's 'Banner of St. George' and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' were the chief items of the programme, in addition to which the full orchestra of forty-two performers (led by Mr. T. E. Gatehouse) rendered the overture 'Merry wives of Windsor' (Nicolai), 'Sigurd Jorsalfar,' Op. 56 (Grieg), 'Pomp and Circumstance' march (Elgar), and 'Scènes Pittoresques' (Massenet), with good effect. Miss Lucy France was very successful as the solo vocalist.

Answers to Correspondents.

W. G.—The anthem by Greene seems to be wrongly given in the Globe of February 20 last—reprinted from the same journal of February 20, 1806. It should be 'Put me not to rebuke,' not 'Rebuke me not.' The information, which refers to the service at the Chapel Royal on Ash Wednesday, 1806, states that the anthem 'was sung by Messrs. Bartleman, W. Knyvett, and Vaughan,' and that 'the Princess Charlotte of Wales, attended by the Bishop of Exeter, sat in the Royal Pew.'

OBOIST.—So far as can be ascertained, the first performances in England of Beethoven's earliest symphonies were as follows: No. 1, at Cimaros's concert, Great Rooms, King's Theatre, May 18, 1803; No. 2, at a Subscription Concert and Ball held at the Russell Assembly Rooms, Great Coram Street, Russell Square, February 14, 1805; and No. 3 ('Eroica'), at one of the Vocal Concerts, Hanover Square Rooms, February 15, 1806. For further details see THE MUSICAL TIMES of May, 1896, p. 310.

CRAIGPARK.—For anthems with a solo (preferably for soprano, baritone, or bass) or quartet see the following: 'The Lord is my Shepherd' (H. Smart); 'Lord, I have loved the habitation' (G. W. Torrance); 'There is a green hill far away' (Gounod); 'The day is past and over' (J. C. Marks); 'Nearer, my God, to Thee' (T. Adams); 'Sing praises unto the Lord' (Gounod); 'Remember now thy Creator' (Steggall); 'Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem' (J. H. Maunders).

T. V. E.—Specifications of the organs in Westminster Abbey and the Royal Albert Hall will be found in Elliston's 'Organs and tuning' (Weekes & Co.), pp. 206 and 221. The organist of the Alexandra Palace doubtless would furnish you with the specification of the instrument over which he presides, or Messrs. Willis & Sons, the builders, might have a printed copy of the list of stops, &c.

ANDREW.—Dr. MacDowell's published compositions number sixty-two, and they are all characteristic of him. You could not do better than read the critical section of Mr. Lawrence Gilman's biography of the composer, recently published by Mr. John Lane in his 'Living Masters of Music' series; this will furnish you with the desired information.

A. M. W.—It would be advisable to inquire of the Professor of Music in the University, enclosing a stamped addressed envelope. Have you seen Sir Hubert Parry's primer 'Summary of Musical History'?

G. N. M.—Tchaikovsky's 2nd Quartett and 'Caprice Italien' are arranged for pianoforte duet, and the same composer's 'Pathetic' Symphony, Delibes's Ballet 'Sylvia,' and Dvorák's 'New World' symphony are arranged for pianoforte solo. All these may be obtained from Messrs. Novello.

F. S. P.—You will find a list of concert agents in Rudall, Carte & Co.'s 'Musical Directory.' In regard to the violinist question you ask, you might apply to the secretary of the Orchestral Union for information; address, 28, Gerrard Street, Soho, London, W.

OLD PITCH.—The diapason normal is A=435, C=517. This decision was arrived at in the year 1859, the result of the report of a Commission appointed by the French Government.

R. I.—The first syllable of Abraham is usually pronounced 'Aa' in singing, as the broad vowel produces a much better tone, though some vocalists adopt the English speaking pronunciation.

J. P. H.—You will probably find the organ voluntaries arranged by J. W. Elliott and John Hiles suitable for your two pupils.

REHEARSED.—We regret our inability to furnish a list of distinguished musicians who have been cremated, or who had a motor-car funeral. Ask Mr. Algernon Ashton.

J. H.—We are afraid the copies are too recent to be of any pecuniary value.

M. F. E.—The C natural is quite correct: if it were a misprint the following note would be B natural, not flat.

SPHINX.—C natural.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

A SACRED CANTATA

RECALLING SCENES IN THE LAST DAYS OF THE
SAVIOUR'S LIFE ON EARTH

FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BARITONE) AND CHORUS

INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY
THE CONGREGATION.

1. ON THE WAY TO JERUSALEM. 2. BEFORE JERUSALEM.
3. IN THE TEMPLE. 4. THE MOUNT OF OLIVES.
5. A NEW COMMANDMENT. 6. GETHSEMANE.
7. BETRAYED AND FORSAKEN. 8. BEFORE PILATE.
9. THE MARCH TO CALVARY. 10. CALVARY.

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Score, paper cover, One Shilling and Sixpence; Paper boards,
Two Shillings.

Tonic Sol-fa, 9d. Words only, 10s. per 100.
String Parts, 11s. Wind Parts and Full Score MS.

STANDARD (London), August 1, 1904.

Mr. Maunder has long since proved his ability to write melodiously without becoming secular, and to meet the requirements of average choirs and congregations while preserving the dignity and solemnity of English Church Music. His Cantata is a happy example of his talents in these respects, and the work may be warmly recommended to the clergy and choirmasters.

DAILY TELEGRAPH (London), April 2, 1904.

The Cantata is of devotional character. Not a few of the composer's pages are effective, and show a skilful hand.

CHURCH TIMES, March 26, 1904.

The work is decidedly attractive, and should be a welcome addition to the growing stores of Passion Music. The writing is melodious, and there is considerable vigour in the chorus work.

MUSICAL OPINION, June 1, 1904.

The work is remarkably clear and effective. A feature of the Cantata is the choral writing, throughout plain and straightforward yet invariably impressive and beautiful. The solo portions reveal many points of melodic beauty and musicianly interest, and are quite in keeping with the general high tone and character of the Cantata. One does not need to be a prophet to foretell the ultimate popularity of "Olivet to Calvary" in Church singing circles.

MUSICAL NEWS, April 2, 1904.

The music which Mr. Maunder has written is marked by those qualities of appropriate expression, melodiousness, and absence of great difficulty which have made his compositions in the past so acceptable, and we are sure that this Cantata will prove very welcome. We cordially recommend it to the notice of choirmasters.

MUSICAL TIMES, March 1, 1904.

The composer has approached the subject with a full sense of responsibility and in a devotional spirit. The music is charged with that melodious attribute with which Mr. Maunder's name is favourably associated, and is free from interpretative difficulty. The Cantata is one that may be welcomed, not only for its appropriateness to the Lenten Season, but upon its own merits.

BIRMINGHAM POST, April 1, 1904.

The musical treatment is reverent, and the Cantata should be impressive.

SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH, March 28, 1904.

The music is impressive throughout, and the work forms a notable addition to its class.

BIRMINGHAM DAILY MAIL, March 9, 1904.

A glance at the vocal score reveals a style of composition calculated to please, the various sections betraying facile and scholarly workmanship. The soli are lyrical and effective, and the Cantata throughout is written in a popular vein.

THE LADY, April 21, 1904.

Organists and choirmasters will find the Cantata excellent for uniting the choir and congregation in a common interest. . . . "Olivet to Calvary" is an excellent work for a special service of song.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR

SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

COMPOSED BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK.

(Op. 58.)

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY

FRED. J. W. CROWE
(Organist of Chichester Cathedral).

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN BY
H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

NOTE.

This English version of Dvořák's "Stabat Mater" brings the beauties of the work within the reach of those who, for various reasons, prefer not to use the original Latin. The adaptation avoids the use of any passages of a controversial nature, thus making it available for use in any English place of worship; and, whilst preserving as far as possible the original rhythm, no pains have been spared to make this English version both vocal and practical.

Chichester, 1904.

F. J. W. C.

The accompaniment, while not professing to be purely an organ arrangement (which would necessitate the use of three staves), will, it is hoped, be found useful at the organ and at the same time easily playable on the piano at rehearsals.

Very few suggestions as to stops have been made, but the plain indication of the pedal part throughout the work and of the instrumentation (marked in brackets) will be a useful guide to the organist in his interpretation of this complex score.

H. E. B.

If there is one choral work of the past twenty years that can claim to have been universally and thoroughly accepted as a masterpiece by all who have any right to express an opinion, it is this most beautiful composition. Its position among the masterpieces of music is too assured to need any defence, and it may suffice to recall the fact that since it made the composer's reputation in this country, it has been heard at the Cathedral Festivals of Worcester, Hereford, Gloucester, Chester and Lincoln, at the Birmingham, Norwich, Leeds, Sheffield, and Hovingham Festivals, and, of course, in countless churches and concert-rooms, one memorable occasion being in 1891, when the composer conducted it at Cambridge, on the day when he received an honorary degree from the University. . . . The version, which is by the organist of Chichester Cathedral, Dr. Crowe, is at least a translation of the original, and not an irrelevant and absurd concoction like the unsectarian libretto, entitled "Tribulation," which one William Ball provided for Rossini's "Stabat Mater."—Yorkshire Post.

BLESSED ARE THEY THAT MOURN

MOTET

ALFRED H. ALLEN.

"Alfred H. Allen's motet, 'Blessed are they that mourn,' is the work of an excellent musician and deserves to be known."—Morning Post.

"This is an interesting work, sincere in expression and technically well devised. The influence of Brahms is somewhat strong; but Mr. Allen has a good deal to say for himself, and he says it in a manner that is thoroughly musicianly. The motet should be a welcome addition to the repertoire of church choirs with ideas above — and —."

ALFRED R. GAUL'S PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF
LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, grateful part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

Price, paper cover, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s.; scarlet cloth, 4s.
Words only, 7s. 6d. per 100.

The loan of Parts for a limited Orchestra—namely, Strings, 2 Flutes, 2 Clarinets, 2 Cornets, Bass Trombone or Euphonium, and Kettledrums, may be had on application to the COMPOSER, Gillott Lodge, Edgbaston.

THE STORY OF THE PASSION

WITH REFERENCES FOR HOME STUDY

BY THE

REV. JOHN H. MATTHEWS, M.A.

Music and Words, 3d. Words only, 3s. per 100.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON "is much pleased with 'The Story of the Passion.'"
THE BISHOP OF LICHFIELD: "Both the words and the music give good expression to the thoughts which should be uppermost in the mind of Christ's disciples when Passiontide comes round."
THE BISHOP OF CARLISLE: "It seems . . . very suitable for use in Passion Week, and I trust that it may have a large circulation."
THE BISHOP OF MANCHESTER: "It has the great merit of being reverent in phrase, and sound in doctrine."
THE BISHOP OF OXFORD: "The references at the end seem to me a valuable addition, such as I have not seen before."
CHURCH BELLS: "A smoothly-written composition, and devotional in effect. 'The Story of the Passion' will be found useful at Good Friday Services, and the 'References for Home Study' will prove a help in private devotion."
THE CHURCH FAMILY NEWSPAPER: "This Hymn is beautifully set to music, and describes graphically the Story of the Passion. The opening verses are set to a simple but most effective air, which changes for one equally beautiful, but with a deeper note of sadness as the Betrayal is described. We wish this Hymn all the success it certainly merits, and feel confident it will be warmly commended by all who try it."
THE RECORD: "The words are of a deeply devotional character, and are set to music at once solemnizing and impressive. We doubt not that 'The Story of the Passion' will become, as soon as it is known, deservedly popular."
CHURCH TIMES: "A poem . . . of the 'Story of the Cross' type, but superior in quality both as to versification and musical composition."

NOVELLO'S CHORISTER SERIES OF CHURCH MUSIC.

There are many Churches and some Colleges and Schools where a daily or occasional service is sung by boys only. The "Chorister Series" furnishes the necessary music for such occasions. It includes Responses, Services—Matins, Communion and Evensong, also Wedding and Funeral Services—and Anthems, all specially composed for equal voices. It need hardly be said that the "Chorister Series" meets the requirements of Ladies' Colleges and Schools where a choral service is in vogue.

THE COUNCIL SCHOOL HYMN BOOK

A COLLECTION OF HYMNS, WITH PRAYERS,
FOR USE IN COUNCIL SCHOOLS

COMPILED TO MEET THE PARTICULAR NEEDS OF THE NEW EDUCATION
AUTHORITIES ESTABLISHED BY THE ACT OF 1902.

PRICES.

- a.* Words and Tunes with complete Accompaniment, the usual hymnal form, price 2s. 6d.
- b.* The Words with the Melody only (staff and tonic sol-fa notations combined), for the use of the children, price 1s.
- c.* Words only (limp cloth), 6d.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE MUSIC EDITION.

The music of the Council School Hymn Book has been selected for its melodic interest and general suitability to children's voices. These essentials have been kept steadily in view as regards the new tunes composed expressly for the book, wherein many well-established favourites find a place. It will be observed that some of the tunes appear in lower keys than usual in order that young voices may not be unduly strained.

Every care has been taken to make the music of the book acceptable to teachers as well as children, in the hope that daily hymn-singing may become a specially enjoyable feature of school life.

The Hymns (150) chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

PRESS NOTICES.

THE GUARDIAN.

This little book is excellent for the purpose announced by its title. The hymns which it contains are very suitable for a Christian School; and it would not be easy to show that any old favourites have been shut out which ought to have been included, nor that many which are below what a hymn for children should be, have crept in.

CHRISTIAN WORLD.

Outwardly unpretentious, "The Council School Hymn Book" will be eagerly scanned by those who know how important it is to preserve sanity and wholesomeness in hymns that are often sung by children. Put briefly, the aim of the editors has been to avoid sectarianism and doggerel; and they have succeeded so well as to prompt the wish that this book could displace those in use at the average Sunday school.

THE BOOKSELLER.

We do not think that a better hymnal for use in public elementary schools than the present could be wished or hoped for. The editors, it is sufficiently clear, were bound in such a publication to exclude strictly denominational hymns, and to select those only which express the central truths of religion. This they have consistently done throughout, and have at the same time admirably suited the varied collection to the capacities of the young. Such classics as "The spacious firmament on high" (Addison), "Hark! the herald angels sing" (C. Wesley), "Let us with a glad mind" (Milton), and other more modern hymns, of which the inclusion has been permitted by the Rev. S. Baring-Gould, the Rev. J. Page Hopps, and Miss Betham-Edwards, among other writers; and the prayers at the end of the collection (and chosen on the same principle) for the opening and closing of school, and for certain special occasions, will be found well adapted to their object.

THE SCHOOLMISTRESS.

The editors of this beautiful collection of hymns have done their work well, and have thoroughly carried out their aims in including only those hymns which express the central truths of religion, and in making the collection as large and varied as possible, consistently with the maintenance of a high literary standard.

BRISTOL TIMES AND MIRROR.

"The Council School Hymn Book" contains well and widely-chosen hymns, which express the central truths of religion, and are within the comprehension, and suited to the capacities, of children. At the end are prayers for the opening and closing of school, which have been selected on the same principle as the hymns. The collection is an admirable one, and deserves to be generally adopted.

THE SCOTSMAN.

A useful little compilation for elementary schools. It is handy, well edited, and well printed, and has no particular denominational tendency.

WESTERN MORNING NEWS.

Whoever were the compilers of this book, they have discharged their task very well. The 150 hymns selected express the central truths of the Christian Faith, and with one or two exceptions are just suited to the comprehension of the children for whom the selection is intended. As should be, catholicity is the note of the book; cheek by jowl we find John Bunyan and John Keble; Walsham How and J. Montgomery; T. Kelly and F. W. Faber; J. Page Hopps and R. S. Hawker; C. Wesley and J. M. Neale; Bishop Wordsworth and John Milton; Baring-Gould and Isaac Watts. How's Diamond Jubilee Hymn, "O King of kings" appropriately finds its place, and perhaps Kipling's "Recessional" might have been included also. The short prayers at the end of the book are drawn up on the same broad principle as the hymns, and some special ones are added for "Our Country," "before and after holidays," for times of "dangerous sickness," and for those connected with the school who are in "trouble or sorrow." Altogether the compilation is a model of what such a book should be, and it richly deserves the widest use in the Council schools of the land.

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY

EMILY R. DAYMOND,

D.Mus., Oxon.

THIS book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

"Is interesting from beginning to end, and shows considerable accomplishment, as well as a leaning towards the modern influences in the art. . . The ideas are good, the theme is developed with great ingenuity, there is plenty of variety as well as technical difficulty in the variations, and the whole composition is one that calls for high praise."—The Times.

"We find these variations extremely interesting. . . Here is a very original theme upon which is built a series of as really original variations, stone upon stone, so to speak, until at length is completed an admirable, even beautiful, musical structure that should find its way into many a pianist's repertoire."—The Queen.

The Daily Telegraph says:—"Mr. Francesco Berger has made a useful and therefore valuable contribution to Messrs. Novello's 'Music Primers and Educational Series' in the shape of a manual entitled 'First Steps at the Pianoforte.' Every point is conveyed in the simplest fashion, and every step taken with due care and deliberation, so as to be sure of the ground gained before going another pace ahead. Moreover, typographical devices are employed to force essential facts upon the child's attention. I think this is, on the whole, a very admirable book, calculated to help not only the pupil, but the teacher also."

The Sunday Times says:—"It is more practical, more systematic, more simple for the beginner than any I have yet seen. The exercises and pieces specially prepared are excellent, and the explanation which accompanies every example is written in language that the youngest student may comprehend without further assistance from the teacher."

The Musical Times says:—"Mr. Berger's book is distinctly the best introduction to the pianoforte at present extant."

OLD ENGLISH VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Gleees and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of making known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

PIECES.

In completion of the scheme of "A Modern School" a large number of Pieces will be published, in a form designed to fulfil the requirements of Violin Teachers and Students. In each number the Violin part will be furnished with complete Fingerings and Bowings, besides remarks as to the methods of rendering, &c.

MORNING POST, January 2, 1906.

The name of Jean Sibelius is gradually becoming known to concert-goers, and the fifteen songs published by Messrs. Breitkopf and Härtel are likely to bring it yet further to the fore. Jean Sibelius is a Finnish composer, born forty years ago, and the author of an opera, various orchestral works, pianoforte pieces, &c. The songs now before us are in the highest degree remarkable and deserve the attention of all serious-minded vocalists who are on the look out for something above the average. The geographical position of Finland may, to a certain extent, account for the influences—Russian and Scandinavian—which make themselves felt in these songs, influences slightly tempered by those of Germany, doubtless due to the studies pursued by the composer in Berlin and Vienna after laying the foundation of his knowledge at Helsingfors. The predominant characteristics, however, are essentially Northern, and suggestive of climes where gloom supervenes and breeds thoughts of melancholy, relieved by fitful gleams of sunlight. Some of these songs are wholly admirable, such as “The First Kiss,” “The Tryst,” and “Astray,” among others. They are fresh, spontaneous, and unconventional, and as such are welcome. It is long since we have come across so interesting a group of songs. An excellent English version has been provided by Mr. William Wallace.

PLYMOUTH.—"LAY OF THE LAST MINSTREL."—"... acquitted himself with great success in the tenor solos. The second part of the Concert opened with a glorious rendering of Handel's 'Sound an Alarm,' the soloist had ample opportunity of displaying the range and quality of his voice, the higher notes being exceedingly well negotiated. He heartily deserved the encore which was accorded to him."—Western Morning News, Feb. 16, 1906.

Address—38, Yale Court, West Hampstead, N.W.

MR. ARTHUR WALENN

(BARITONE).

Now Booking for Next Season.

DR. WALFORD DAVIES'S "EVERYMAN."

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY, RICHMOND, May 3. Of this Concert—
The Herald says: "Mr. Arthur Walenn's fine baritone voice was heard to much advantage in the exacting solos for Everyman."The Surrey Comet: "Mr. Arthur Walenn gave to the character of Everyman the deepest expression and impressiveness, at the same time avoiding that exaggeration which would tempt a singer of less culture."The Richmond Times: "Of the soloists, the place of honour must certainly be given to Mr. Arthur Walenn, who, as Everyman, had so much to do. It was always difficult, requiring great variety and expression, to ward off a suspicion of dullness that might otherwise have crept in. In Mr. Walenn's hands nothing of the kind happened; he has a bass voice of very pleasing quality, well under control, and was evidently thoroughly acquainted not only with the music itself, but with the spirit of the work."South Wales Daily Telegraph: "HIAWATHA" (conducted by the composer).—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was heard to real advantage. The first part was full of poetry and imagination, and in the 'Vision' (True is all Iago tells us) he sang with a dramatic intensity which was little short of a revelation."Tunbridge Wells Courier: "ELIJAH."—"Mr. Arthur Walenn afforded us an intellectual and musical treat in his embodiment of the idea of the Prophet Elijah. To enact a character of this kind, an arduous duty is imposed on the singer, who not only requires a voice of good power and range, but an artistic insight into the nature of the subject to be dealt with is imperative. That Mr. Walenn fulfilled these attributes is undeniable, and nothing but praise can be accorded him for a really superb delineation of the part."Liverpool Daily Post: The "MESSIAH" at Liverpool.—"Mr. Arthur Walenn was very successful in sustaining the bass solos, both voice and vocalization being excellent."

DUBLIN.—ORPHEUS CHORAL SOCIETY.

"Dr. Culwick was fortunate enough to be able to reinforce his list of artists by a baritone of quite exceptional endowments. . . . Among the songs contributed by Mr. Montague Borwell, a distinguished baritone who has sung in Westminster Abbey and at the Queen's Hall concerts, were 'Zueignung,' 'Allerseelen,' and 'Ich Liebe Dich'
(R. Strauss). It was flattering to our linguistic pride that a visitor to our shores should assume that songs with German words would prove as delectable to our ears as those in English. However, we are all able to appreciate a voice as rich and as artistically used as that of Mr. Borwell. He is a truly splendid artist, and his series of songs, the singing of which was characterised by brilliancy of tone and thoroughly refined art, delighted his audience. The finest effort of the series was Handel's 'O, Raddier than the Cherry,' which was given with brilliancy and consummate ease. He was enthusiastically encored, and his concession to the demand took the form of a dainty Irish number, which proved equally popular. Again he had to respond to a thunderous encore, and this time he illustrated his skill in gentle shading—equally to the delight of his audience."—IRISH TIMES, February 7, 1906.

SOUTHAMPTON.—PHILHARMONIC CONCERT.

"Mr. Montague Borwell, who is gifted with a rich and refined voice, capable of wide musical appreciation, is possessed of the somewhat uncommon power of expressing in the language of song the poetical spirit which sleeps in the soul of the written page, and which can only be called forth by the artist who continuously seeks the correct interpretation of the composer's meaning. The tremendous applause which continuously greeted Mr. Borwell's efforts demonstrated the keen appreciation of true talent. Mr. Borwell's choice of numbers was a representative one. His contributions to the first part of the programme consisted of three of Rubinstein's best known compositions, viz., 'The Dewdrops Shine,' 'The Azra,' and 'The Wood Witch,' the peaceful and suggestive beauty of the first, the pathos and pain of the second, and the dramatic intensity of the last, being all the subject of sympathetic interpretation at the hands of Mr. Borwell. Leoncavallo's Prologue to 'I Pagliacci' was also particularly well received.
Mr. Borwell's effort in the second part of the programme was a brilliant one, entailing considerable vocal strain, consisting as it did of no less than five of Stanford's settings of Henry Newbolt's 'Songs of the Sea,' in succession, viz., 'Drake's Drum,' 'Devon, O Devon,' 'Outward Bound,' 'Homeward Bound,' and 'The Old Superb.' These works constitute a study in contrast, at one moment being identified with wild vigour and dauntless courage and the next wrapped in tender melancholy. 'The Old Superb' was perhaps the most popular number, and vociferous applause followed Mr. Borwell as he retired from the stage, having rendered each song with splendid effect."—Southampton Echo, February 3, 1906.

ARRANGEMENT FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO BY THE COMPOSER.

"They should please popular audiences all over the country. Saturday's audience gave the work a most cordial reception, and insisted on a repetition of the 'Minuet d'Amour.' Some excellent contrast is provided in the variations of the last number."—Glasgow Herald.

"The four numbers of this Suite exhibit Dr. Cowen's talents at their best. The music is charming, the instrumentation exceedingly skilful and effective, the rhythms stimulating, and the composition as a whole admirable in its invention and technical characteristics. 'The Lover's Minuet' was quickly recognised by the audience as an exquisite thing, and imperatively encored."—Glasgow News.

"First place in the set must be given to No. 3, a lovely bit of melody, exquisitely treated by the orchestra. This number, which had to be repeated, exemplifies the triumph of melody over mere rhythmic eccentricity."—Glasgow Evening Times.

"Might be described as exceedingly graceful adaptations of more or less conventional ideas, and worked out with that delicate orchestration in which Dr. Cowen is such an adept. Of the four movements, the 'Minuet d'Amour' is the most consistently original. Based upon a really beautiful melody, it displayed a very happy treatment of solo string instruments, and the employment of a solo string quartet at its conclusion was notably charming in its effect. While all four movements were very well received, the 'Minuet d'Amour' had to be repeated."—The Scotsman.

OSCAR BERINGER NEW PIANOFORTE TUTOR

Complete (English Fingering), 2s. 6d.

This splendid work, so perfect in every detail, and covering practically the whole ground of pianoforte tuition, is now issued in full music size, at a price which should place it within the reach of every teacher in the kingdom; no expense has been spared in its production to make it worthy of the high reputation of its author and the character of its contents. Special features, which will at once attract notice, are the exceptionally fine quality of the paper used, and the beautiful engraving.

Also, with Continental Fingering, complete, 3s.
Or, in Two Parts at 1s. 9d. each.

Mr. STANLEY HAWLEY says: "The very incarnation of the modern spirit in teaching. It is most truly 'Precept upon precept, and line upon line.'"

Mr. MALCOLM LAWSON says: "At once the simplest, most succinct, and complete Pianoforte Primer of all time. It is as original in scheme as it is lucid and masterly in detail and development."

THE MUSICAL TIMES says: "The book is complete in itself, and by the time the student has conscientiously worked through its pages, we agree with Mr. Beringer that he (or she) will be so well equipped that the easier works of classical composers will be an open book."

Hundreds of appreciative letters have been received from teachers and schools in all parts of Great Britain and Colonies, where this work is largely used.

(FOUNDED 1741).

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY offers TWO PRIZES, being the "Molineux Prize" of TEN POUNDS, with the Society's Medal, and the "Society's Prize" of FIVE POUNDS, for the best and second best APPROVED MADRIGALS, in not less than four, nor more than six parts, the upper part or parts to be for one or two Treble Voices.

The character of the Composition to be in accordance with that of Madrigals of the best style and form, with imitative part-writing; not a mere Part-Song or harmonised Melody.

The following conditions must be complied with, viz.:—

1. That the Alto and Tenor parts be written in their respective clefs;
2. That the signature be repeated at the head of each page at least;
3. That the intended "Tempo" be clearly indicated;
4. That the words, to be selected by the Composer, be written out in full on a fly-leaf at the beginning; and
5. That not more than one Composition be submitted by each competitor, which must not be in the Composer's autograph.

The Madrigals to be delivered, addressed to the Secretary of the Madrigal Society, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey, on or before October 1, 1906, each Composition having a device or motto affixed thereto, with the Composer's name in a sealed envelope bearing a corresponding mark. The Award of the Judges will be made known at the meeting of the Society in December, 1906.

JUDAS MACCABÆUS.

Handel's oratorios, in their mountain-range grandeur, may be viewed from various standpoints. Their origin and history, no less than their musical supremacy, are of intense interest. The strength and beauty of the strains which, strata-like, permeate these mighty masterpieces are like unto the everlasting hills which abide for ever. In the spirit of these forewords, let us set before our readers a few notes on one of Handel's first-rank oratorios, 'Judas Maccabæus.'

Consideration must first be given to the libretto. And in this connection the composer, in 'Judas Maccabæus,' began a collaboration with the celebrated Rev. Thomas Morell, D.D. (1703-1784). An Etonian and subsequently a classical scholar and antiquary, this eminent divine also supplied Handel with the word-books of 'Alexander Balus,' 'Joshua,' 'Solomon,' 'Theodora,' 'Jephtha,' and 'The Triumph of Time and Truth.' Apart from his libretto achievements, the Rev. Dr. Morell doubtless proved a man after Handel's own heart. We learn that he was 'a warm friend and a cheerful companion who loved a jest, told a good story and sang a good song.' He had considerable knowledge of music and played the organ with some skill. His pulpit prowess may be sampled from a sermon preached by him in Worcester Cathedral on September 3, 1746, on the occasion of the Festival of the Three Choirs, when he said :

The best of men, I believe in their devotional hours, suffer their minds sometimes to wander and be distracted from the holy work ; at other times to be sluggish, inactive, and scarce awake. Now, what like music, can keep them steady and attentive ? What can raise them to that divine enthusiasm which is natural to devotion, like instruments of praise, I would say of God ? Let the united force of them all, I mean the organ only, strike up an alarm ; how swiftly do the straggling thoughts return to duty ? Or, should one of them lag behind to indulge in nature awhile, though at another time, perhaps, faultless and innocent, with what scorn is it now rejected and expelled, like the tone or semitone, which dares intrude upon a chord that disowns its company ?

Dr. Morell resided chiefly at Turnham Green, where he had for neighbours Thomson, Garrick and Hogarth. In 1762 his portrait was drawn by Hogarth, 'in the character of a cynic philosopher, with an organ near him.' A reproduction of this picture forms our special portrait supplement. There is a good story told in regard to the great composer and his librettist. Early one morning Morell, at Turnham Green, was aroused by a visitor. On looking out of his bedroom window the eminent divine saw Handel, who shouted, 'Vot is de meaning of de vord billow ?' 'A wave,' replied Morell. 'Oh ! de vave of de sea,' replied Handel, who at once started back to London.

It does not appear to be known whether Morell or Handel suggested Judas Maccabæus as the subject of an oratorio. It is said, however, to have been composed at the instigation of Frederick, Prince of Wales, father of George III., to celebrate the victory of his brother, William Duke of Cumberland, over Charles Edward the Pretender, at the battle of Culloden, on April 16, 1746, and the dedication of the word-book of the oratorio to the Duke supports this theory. In any case, it was a happy thought to select a Jewish theme at a time when the privileges enjoyed by the Chosen People in England were so different from their position on the Continent. As Mr. Rockstro, in his 'Life' of Handel, says, referring to the treatment of the Jews in Prussia during the 18th century :

Even as late as 1763, the great Moses Mendelssohn [grandfather of Felix], a scholar of whom all Europe ought to have been proud, was forced, before he could obtain permission to marry, to buy a quantity of china at the Royal Factory in Berlin, selected by the manager of the works, who, having on hand twenty life-sized china apes which were thought quite unsaleable, forced them upon the author of the Litteraturbriefe, well knowing that, unless he consented to pay for them, he would never obtain his marriage licence. That the apes—still preserved in the family—are now worth their weight in silver was a contingency which the manager could not possibly have foreseen, and the fore-knowledge of which would in nowise have mitigated the insult.

Though our behaviour to the Jews in those days was not above reproach, no such indignities were imposed upon them. Living in a free country, under the protection of just laws, the Jews then, as now, were at liberty to occupy or amuse themselves in their own way. Is it any wonder, then, that the new oratorio should have proved to them an irresistible attraction ?

The word-book of Morell's sacred drama is entitled—

JUDAS MACCABÆUS | a | Sacred Drama. | As it is Perform'd at the Theatre-Royal in Covent-Garden.

The Musick by MR. HANDEL.

London : | Printed for John Watts : and Sold by B. Dod at the | Bible and Key in Ave-Mary-Lane near Stationers-Hall. | Price one shilling. | MDCCXLVII.

The dedication reads thus :

To His Royal Highness
Prince William,
Duke of Cumberland
This faint portraiture of a truly Wise, Valiant, and Virtuous Commander,
As to the Possessor of the like Noble Qualities, is,
With most profound Respect and Veneration, inscribed,
By His Royal Highness's
Most obedient, and most devoted Servant,
THE AUTHOR.

There is no need to give a detailed comparison of the original libretto with that in the form which we now know it, especially as some changes will be noticed in treating of the music.* One or two differences in the text may, however, be mentioned. In the chorus, 'O Father, whose Almighty power,' the fugue subject read:

Grant us a leader bold and brave.

Handel doubtless altered the words in order to get a better accent. It is interesting to find that the scholarly and polished Morell used a word in his libretto which is now in common use. In the recitative beginning 'Ye worshippers of God' we find these words:

Our fathers never knew him, or his beastly crew.

The penultimate word has been changed to 'hated.' After the air 'So shall the lute and harp awake,' the following note appears in the original word-book:

Several incidents were introduced here by way of Messenger and chorus, in order to make the story more complete; but it was thought they would make the performance too long, and therefore were not set, and therefore not printed, this being design'd not as a finish'd Poem, but merely as an Oratorio.

We may now turn to the music. 'Judas Maccabæus' was composed by Handel when he was sixty-one years old. The eleventh in order of his English oratorios, it was preceded by:

Esther - - - -	1720	Messiah - - - -	1741
Deborah - - - -	1733	Samson - - - -	1741-2
Athaliah - - - -	1733	Joseph - - - -	1743
Saul - - - -	1738	Belshazzar - - - -	1744
Israel in Egypt - -	1738	Occasional Oratorio	1745

The first performance took place at Covent Garden Theatre on April 1, 1747; the General Advertiser, issued on the previous day, thus announced the event:

COVENT-GARDEN

At the Theatre-Royal in Covent-Garden
To-morrow, will be perform'd a New Oratorio, call'd

JUDAS MACCABÆUS

With a New Concerto

Pit and Boxes to be put together, and no Person to be admitted without Tickets, which will be delivered that Day, at the Office at Covent-Garden Theatre, at Half a Guinea each. First Gallery 5s.; Second Gallery 3s. 6d.

The Galleries to be Open'd at Half an Hour after Four o'Clock.

Pit and Boxes at Five.

To begin at Half an Hour after Six o'Clock.

As the musical critic was non-existent in those days, no notice of the performance appeared in the newspapers. The success of the oratorio, despite the absence of 'press notices,' was instantaneous and complete. It was repeated on April 8, as 'a New Oratorio with additions.' Six times was it given during the season, Handel conducting the oratorio no fewer than thirty-eight times during the remaining twelve years of his life, and on the thirtieth occasion the receipts amounted to £300, a very much larger sum, of course, than that amount represents at the present day.

There is a strange fascination in turning over the pages of Handel's own autograph score of his great Jewish oratorio, preserved in the Royal Music Library at Buckingham Palace. And the kindness of Sir Walter Parratt, Master of the Musick to the King, has to be acknowledged for granting such invaluable facilities in order to add to the completeness of these notes on 'Judas Maccabæus.' The autograph, bound in an oblong folio volume, has every characteristic of having been penned by one who was 'a leader bold and brave,' born to conquer by the greatness of his genius. Here we look upon those strong pen-strokes which have immortalized the master's fame. Each quill-written note stands out with all the certainty of a conquering hero fresh from his victory over a fallen foe. The dates, all in Handel's writing, are thus found in the MS.:

Immediately following the overture are fourteen bars of another instrumental movement headed—

Although this Dead March was discarded, it furnished the strain for 'Pious orgies' in the same key (E flat), and was intended for a bass voice. The preceding recitative, rewritten from the word 'doubt,' ended in A flat. Handel subsequently changed his mind in these words, written by him at the beginning of the air :

Ex G♯ una terza più alto im discant.

This furnishes one of the many instances of Handel's adaptability in using up his material : he allowed nothing to run to waste.

Dr. Burney relates an interesting anecdote in connection with the duet, 'From this dread scene,' which he pluralises 'From these dread scenes.' He says :

At Frasi's, I remember, in the year 1748, he [Handel] brought in his pocket the duet of Judas Macchabeus 'From these dread scenes,' in which she had not sung when that oratorio was first performed in 1746. At the time he sat down at the harpsichord to give her and me the time of it, while he sung her part, I hummed, at sight, the second, over his shoulder ; in which he encouraged me by desiring that I would sing out—but, unfortunately, something went wrong, and Handel, with his usual impetuosity, grew violent : a circumstance very terrific to a young musician. At length, however, recovering from my fright, I ventured to say that I fancied there was a mistake in the writing ; which, upon examining, Handel discovered to be the case : and then, instantly, with the greatest good humour and humility, said, 'I pec your barton—I am a very odd tog : maishter Schmitt is to plame.'

In the chorus, 'O Father, Whose Almighty power,' Handel has throughout written 'if not to conquer, doom'd to save,' but in every instance he has run his pen through the word 'doom'd' and substituted 'born.' Material for the chorus 'We come, in bright array' will be found in Carissimi's 'Jephthah'—the duet 'Et clangebant tubæ.' The air, 'O liberty,' taken from the 'Occasional Oratorio,' was subsequently inserted. 'Semi-chorus' is the heading to the chorus 'Disdainful of danger.' An afterthought, and a curiously conceived one, is the duet 'Sion now her head shall raise.' In this connection Dr. Burney must again be quoted. After referring to the fact that Handel 'not only continued to perform in public after he was afflicted with blindness, but to compose in private,' the historian continues :

I have been assured that the duet and chorus in Judas Macchabeus of 'Sion now his [her] head shall raise' were dictated to Mr. Smith [the composer's amanuensis] by Handel after the total privation of sight . . . . Handel not only exhibited great intellectual ability in the composition of this duet and chorus, but manifested his power of invention in extemporaneous flights of fancy to be as rich and rapid a week before his decease as they had been for many years.

When Burney wrote this he had no idea that the 'intellectual ability' of the duet belonged to Bononcini! In the Fitzwilliam Museum, Cambridge, is the MS. of an air 'Peno, peno e l'alma fedele' of which the vivace section is as follows * :

Vivace.

S'al - mo - rir fos - se con - ces - so di pla - car, di pla - car, di pla - car . . . la - ciu - del-to . . .

di pla - car &c.

There can be no doubt that in this instance Handel's memory got the better of his 'power of invention' : and yet for similar 'liftings' Bononcini was hounded out of this country !

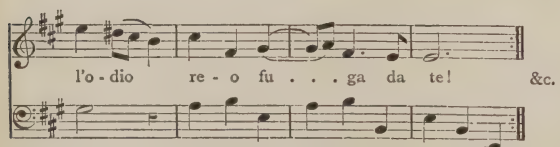

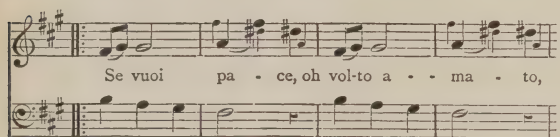

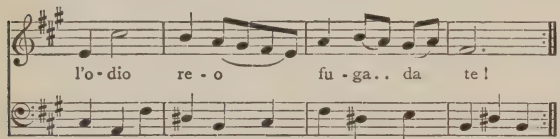

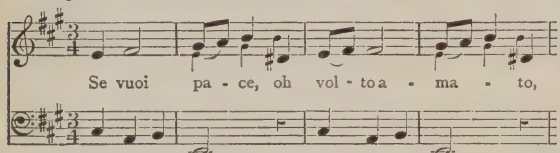

Trumpets and drums are first introduced in this oratorio in the latter part of the tenor solo 'Sound an alarm.' With commendable restraint Handel reserved these instruments until the right psychological moment arrived. And who can ever forget the clarion tones of Sims Reeves's voice in his magnificent declamation of these thrilling strains? The scoring is Trumpets 1, 2, and 3, Drums, Hautboys, and Strings.

* We are indebted to the kindness of Dr. A. H. Mann for making a transcript of Bononcini's air.

The 'Wise men flattering, may deceive you' was another afterthought. It originally appeared in Handel's opera 'Agrippina,' an early work composed at Venice in 1709, in the following form:

(The first violin part is in unison with the voice except where indicated with the small notes. The shakes in the voice part of the 'Judas' air were transferred from the first violin part of the following example.)

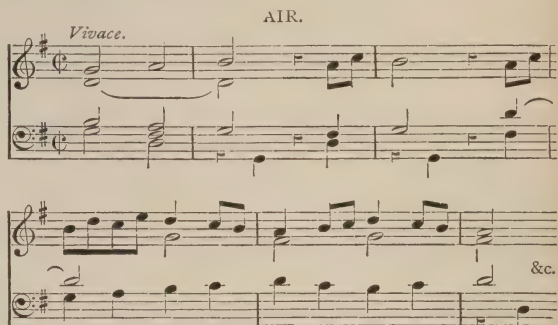

Here is another instance of the using up of old material.

The famous 'See the conquering hero comes'—typically Handelian in its dignified simplicity—was transferred from 'Joshua' after the first season of that oratorio—1747, a year later than 'Judas Maccabæus.' Handel evidently wished to make an effect by the transference, and who will deny that he achieved his object? Never a pedant in such matters as sequence of keys—the chord of G following that of A—the great master simply lifted the piece from one work to another with consummate appropriateness. No less interesting than a perusal of the autograph score of 'Judas' is a reference to that of 'Joshua.' On turning to the movement we find that Handel has here indicated the key of the horns (soli) in the interlude after the first strain thus 'Corni ex G.' Against the duet 'See the godlike youth advance' he has written the names of the soloists, 'Sig<sup>ra</sup> Cassarini, Sig<sup>r</sup> Galli.' But the most interesting of all are his directions at the double bar of the 'full chorus,' written in plain English with quill strokes of absolute legibility:

'Drum ad libitum the second time
Drum warbling. No Drum.'

The succeeding March is also an afterthought and, it must be added, not entirely a theme of Handel's own creation! In Gottlieb. Muffat's 'Componimenti musicali per il cembalo' (1727?) is a strain thus noted:

(The antique ornaments have been omitted in the above transcript.)

The duet 'O lovely peace' was originally cast in the form of an air with nearly the same melody. At bar 20 Handel has written 'Qui comincia il Duetto in voce dell' aria ad libitum.' At the end of the volume the duet version has been pasted in.

The copies of the original word-book of 'Judas Maccabæus' in the Royal Music Library show that various 'additional songs' were interpolated by Handel from time to time. The words of these additions or substitutions are either printed on a separate page or pasted over the airs temporarily displaced. Among these are the following:

Powerful guardians of all nature (Alexander Balus).
Happy, oh! thrice happy we } (Joshua).
Oh! had I Jubal's lyre
May balmy peace (Occasional Oratorio).

In concluding these fragmentary notes on one of Handel's great oratorios, reference must be made to a version of it published in 1820 with the following title:

Händel's Oratorium
JUDAS MACCABÆUS
Nach Mozarts Bearbeitung
im Clavier Auszuge
von LUDWIG HELLWIG
Musikdirector und Hoforganist in Berlin
Bonn und Cöln bey N. Simrock.

No reference to Mozart's 'Bearbeitung' in this edition can be discovered. It is difficult to believe that Mozart could have 'arranged' the air 'Father of heaven' for four voices, or that he should have cut out a whole slice—the solo parts—from 'Sing unto God!' These unwarrantable 'improvements' of a masterpiece are doubtless the handiwork of Hellwig himself.

At the preliminary Handel Festival held at the Crystal Palace in 1857, 'Judas Maccabæus' was performed. A similar plan will be followed at the Festival to be held at Sydenham in June next, whereby fresh interest will be aroused in one of the most characteristic creations which emanated from the genius mind of George Frederick Handel.

PRIVATE MUSICAL COLLECTIONS.

I. MR. EDWARD SPEYER.

Readers of Sir George Grove's Biography of Mendelssohn ('Dictionary of Music and Musicians') will remember a charming anecdote which the genial 'G' records in these words :

During the summer [of 1842] the King of Prussia had conferred on Mendelssohn, in company with Liszt, Meyerbeer and Rossini, the great honour of the 'Ordre pour le Mérite,' and the Order itself reached him at Frankfort. He set no store by such distinctions, nor perhaps was its Berlin origin likely to increase the value of this particular one. Shortly after it arrived he was taking a walk with a party of friends across the bridge at Offenbach. One of them (Mr. Wilhelm Speyer) stayed behind to pay the toll for the rest. 'Is not that,' said the tollkeeper, 'the Mr. Mendelssohn whose music we sing at our society?' 'It is.' 'Then, if you please, I should like to pay the toll for him myself.' On re-joining the party, Mr. Speyer told Mendelssohn what had happened. He was enormously pleased, 'H'm,' said he, 'I like that better than the Order.'

A footnote to the above quotation states : 'Told to the writer by the son of Mr. Speyer.' This worthy son of a worthy father is Mr. Edward Speyer, who, in his pleasant house on the Hertfordshire Hills, has gathered together a splendid collection of musical autographs and portraits of musicians. 'When I told that Mendelssohn anecdote to Grove,' he says, 'he nearly jumped up to the ceiling.' 'Just like him,' is the natural comment on such enthusiasm. It is a pleasant experience to go through Mr. Speyer's treasures in the fine music-room of his house on a winter's morning, with the sun streaming through an oriel window, and to enjoy their owner's pleasant intercourse and the advantage of his descriptions. And how beautifully and methodically these manuscripts are kept ! Arranged in alphabetical order and placed in strong boxes, they are easily obtainable at a moment's notice. In describing some of the autographs in this large and valuable collection it may be convenient to follow the alphabetical order in which they are so admirably arranged.

Auber is here represented by an 'O, Salutaris Hostia,' from his Mass composed in 1813, when he was thirty-one years of age, the same year in which he produced his first opera, 'Le séjour militaire.' From this Mass the beautiful unaccompanied prayer in 'Masaniello' is taken. A trio of treasures are in the handwriting of J. S. Bach : (1) The beautifully signed title-page to his church cantata 'Wo Gott der Herr nicht bei uns hält'; (2) the basso part of his cantata

'Ich liebe den Höchsten von ganzem Gemüthe,' and (3) the continuo part of that of 'Es ist ein trotzig und verzagt Ding.'

The first and third of these are the only remaining parts of these cantatas in Bach's autograph. There are also letters and musical manuscripts of Bach's sons, Carl Philip Emanuel and Joh. Christian Friedrich Bach.

Mr. Speyer may justly be proud of his Beethoven autographs. One handles with reverence the master's sketches for Mignon's song 'Kennst du das Land,' and those for the E flat Pianoforte concerto, and the last movement of the C sharp minor Sonata for pianoforte. Among various features of interest in this 'Moonlight' sketch is the well-known second subject in the minor key of the dominant before it had fully shaped itself in the composer's mind, offering, indeed, a remarkable proof of the 'crude, vague, commonplace shape in which his themes were first written down.' Sauer, an official appraiser appointed by the law-courts on the occasion, did a good stroke of business when, at the sale by auction of Beethoven's effects in Vienna in 1827, he bought this identical sketch-book from which this manuscript of the 'Moonlight' sketches is taken, for 3s. 6d., and then sold the sheets separately. Here is the MS. of a patriotic Austrian song by Beethoven, still unpublished, and this leads us to mention a letter, dated March 18, 1820, written to Nicolaus Simrock, of Bonn, horn-player and founder of the well-known music-publishing firm, in which Beethoven writes about the publication of his great Mass in D. He says : 'As I know that business men like to save in postage, I herewith enclose two Austrian folk-songs by way of a cheque to reimburse yourself, with which you can do as you like. The accompaniments are by myself. I think that a hunt after folk-songs is better than a hunt after heroes.' The last sentence shows Beethoven's shrewdness in regard to the publication of popular music. This interesting letter was given to Mr. Speyer's father by old Simrock himself. A very early letter (1796-1800) of Beethoven's to his friend Baron Zmeskall—to whom the F minor quartet is dedicated—is full of puns—e.g., he calls him (by inference) a goose, when, after having begged for some quill pens, he writes to him : 'His Excellency the Baron will have to make haste with the pulling out of his plumes (maybe some strange ones among them), which I hope will not have grown too fast into him.'

Although Baron Zmeskall was a nobleman of distinction, Beethoven treated him as a servant to be at his beck and call, and in one of his letters he begins 'My cheapest (not dearest) Baron.' Mr. Speyer hands us a letter—measuring 20 by 5 inches—from the composer of the Choral symphony to the Baron. It is about the purchase of a piano, and in it he says he will have nothing to do with the whole clan of pianoforte makers by whom he is stormed. If he has to have one specially made it must be of 'mahaghoni' (sic), it must not cost more than £15, and, as a recommendation, will be shown by Beethoven to Haydn. He concludes by saying, if 'our miserable Baron' (meaning Zmeskall himself) would like to come to-morrow, 'I believe we shall enjoy ourselves and could dine together afterwards with Reicha and a Frenchman—no black coat, as we are only among men.' Another interesting letter is in the handwriting of Häring, the Vienna banker and friend of Beethoven, to Sir George Smart, in which he (on behalf of Beethoven, who signs the letter himself) asks Smart to try and find an English publisher to take the 7th and 8th Symphonies, the Quartet (Op. 95), the Pianoforte trio (Op. 97), the Battle symphony, three overtures for full orchestra ('Ruins of Athens,' 'King Stephen,' and Op. 115). 'Poor Beethoven,' says Häring (who writes in English) 'is very anxious to hear something of the English publishers, as he hardly can keep those of this city from him, who tease him for his works.'

Here is also the famous letter written by Beethoven on his death-bed, in February, 1827, to Sir George Smart, recalling the proposal made a few years previously by the London Philharmonic Society to give a concert for his benefit, and expressing a hope that they would do so now, as he was suffering from a very tedious illness, of which the end could not be foreseen. The letter, dictated to Anton Schindler, but signed by Beethoven, begins with an apology on behalf of Beethoven for the use of the German language, as his (Beethoven's) nephew, who helped him in his English letters, was away. There is a letter of Roeckel's (the 'Florestan' of the 'Fidelio' performance of 1806) which describes the fearful scenes and the stormy meetings in connection with the suggested modifications of 'Fidelio'; but as showing the tender side of Beethoven's nature, he (Beethoven) says—in a long letter to Ferdinand Ries, dated 'Vienna, February 25, 1823'—'next spring (1824) I shall be in London to kiss your beautiful wife!' A letter from this 'beautiful wife' of Ries's (an Englishwoman), dated 1857, and addressed to Mr. Edward Speyer himself, is enclosed with the above. That Beethoven was very particular as to the printing of his works is evidenced by a proof copy of the great Trio in B flat containing the composer's numerous and careful corrections. He wishes the word Cres. to be followed by dots, in order that the crescendo may be continued; he also differentiates between dots and dashes as signs of staccato or accentuation. On one of the pages Beethoven writes instructions that all abbreviations () must be printed in full ()

Closely connected with Beethoven alphabetically and violinistically was Bridgetower, for whom Beethoven composed the 'Kreutzer' sonata, and with whom he also played it at its first public performance in May, 1803, in Vienna. In a letter written by him (in 1847) to Madame de Fouché, he says: 'but if the bearer of this letter is fortunate to find you, favour me by having your message conveyed to him who is not fair enough to be "my tiger," nor yet dark enough to be "my Friday," but is my long tried, honest Caliban.'

To see the point of this joke it must be remembered that Bridgetower was a mulatto! The Beethoven 'inner circle' is further represented by C. G. Neefe (1748-98), Beethoven's teacher in Bonn: letter dated Bonn, October 26, 1787; by Albrechtsberger (1736-1809), Beethoven's teacher in counterpoint in Vienna: 'Offertorium a 4 voci,' and 'Fuga in quatuor: Christ ist erstanden'; by Ferdinand Ries (1784-1838): numerous letters addressed to Spohr and to Wilhelm Speyer, with highly interesting descriptions of the state of music in England in the years 1816 to 1820; by the Archduke Rudolph of Austria, Beethoven's Royal protector, pupil and friend, to whom the Pianoforte concertos in G and in E flat, the Sonatas Op. 81A and 106, the great B flat Trio (Op. 97), the Mass in D, &c., are dedicated; a letter addressed to Beethoven from Baden, near Vienna, June 7, 1813, with touching expressions of friendship and solicitude for Beethoven's welfare; by Treitschke, the adapter of the new 'Fidelio' libretto of 1814: a letter; and last, but not least, by Anton Schindler (1796-1864), Beethoven's faithful friend and biographer, various letters addressed to Wilhelm Speyer.

Of Bellini there is the autograph of an aria, 'L'Abbandono.' This was formerly in Cherubini's possession and bears one of the printed labels of that important collection. Also two letters, dated 1830 and 1831, written from Naples and Turin, in which the composer speaks of his operas 'Norma,' 'La Straniera,' 'Montecchi e Capuletti,' &c. An amusing letter of Berlioz, to an unknown correspondent, is headed 'Dimanche 1<sup>er</sup> 1860!!! 1860!!!! Tonnerre de Dieu 1860!!!!' in which he makes an appointment at a railway station, saying that if the friend is there he (Berlioz) 'will follow you as Eurydice followed Orpheus.' In a letter to Mr. Speyer's father—Darmstadt, May 17, 1843—he gives the programme of his concert: selection from 'Roméo et Juliette'; '5 Mai'; 'King Lear' overture; songs for soprano and orchestra; 'Harold in Italy' symphony; and 'L'invitation à la valse.' The prolific composer Boccherini is here represented by a wonderfully elegantly-written small score (9 by 7 inches) of sixty-seven pages of 'Scena dell' Ines di Castro di Luigi Boccherini Ex Compositore di Camera della Maestà di Federico Guglielmo II. Re di Prussia'; and further by a legal document, stamped at Madrid in 1796, by which Boccherini cedes to Ignaz Pleyel in Paris fifty-eight of his works, mostly string quartets and quintets, the opening themes of all of which are written down in the neatest hand by Boccherini: a perfect masterpiece of calligraphy. From the hand of the composer of 'La Dame Blanche,' Boieldieu, we have the autograph of a Romance: 'Ni larmes, ni regrets'; also two letters.

Of Brahms, whose musical autographs are exceptionally scarce, we are shown the exquisite Vocal quartets 'Sehnsucht' and 'Nächtens' (Op. 112, Nos. 1 and 2), with an inscription: 'An Frau Antonia Speyer-Kufferath, Ischl, Frühling 1891, J. Brahms.' There is also a large number of letters addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Speyer. In one of these, dated November, 1894—in answer to a request which Mr. Speyer had transmitted to him on the part of the committee of the Birmingham Musical Festival to compose a work and conduct some of his other compositions for the Festival of 1897—Brahms writes that 'nature had not endowed him with a faculty for concerts and anything connected with them; no musical festival, whether German or English, could tempt him to undertake a journey, yea, even a country so entirely devoid of this kind of culture as Sicily had greater attractions for him.' There are also letters from Marxsen, Brahms's teacher at Hamburg, and several of Dr. Burney to Muzio Clementi in reference to a subscription in aid of the first publication of Haydn's 'Creation.' Any letter or document associated with Hans von Bülow is sure to be amusing. In one letter, addressed to A. W. Thayer, about conducting the C minor Symphony of Brahms, the caustic Hans says that he is 'simply director of his own business.'

Cherubini is exemplified by a musical MS.: 'Solfège à changement de Clefs,' and a letter of 1835 to Ingres, the great painter, in which Cherubini asks: 'Do you still occupy yourself with my triste face?' this having reference to the celebrated portrait of Cherubini by Ingres in the gallery of the Louvre. Then there is Clementi, with a MS.: 'Canone finito, à 3,' for two violins and viola, 'composte per suo amico Cherubini.'

Chopin is represented by the autograph MS. of his Waltz in A flat (Op. 70, No. 2), and Elgar by some sketches for the 'Apostles,' made while he sojourned under Mr. Speyer's roof. There are letters and musical MSS. by Dalayrac, Diabelli, Dvorák, Ernst, Carlo Broschi, Farinelli, the celebrated soprano singer (letter from Madrid, 1756, to the Padre Martini in Bologna) and Robert Franz. From Donizetti we have the autograph of the air, 'Per sua madre,' from 'Linda di Chamounix,' with a dedication to Dumas the elder!

An interesting Gluck MS. is that of a soprano air in F, with accompaniment for string orchestra, from the opera 'Issipile,' produced at Prague in 1752. Strangely enough this is the only vestige of the music that has remained. The word-book (by Metastasio) and the play-bill of the opera are preserved in the Bohemian Museum at Prague, but with the above exception the music seems to have entirely disappeared. The title-rôle was sung by Catharina Fumagalli, whose name is written at the head of the MS. A most interesting autograph MS. of twelve pages is that of Grétry, entitled 'Mon entretien avec Gluck,' in dialogue form, in which Grétry and Gluck are discussing musical principles. This is accompanied by a letter of 1789, and a musical MS. by Grétry. Here is also a Divertimento in E flat, for horn, violin and violoncello by Haydn, dated 1767, still unpublished; a letter from the composer to Artaria, his publisher, says that though his (Haydn's) 'blood is up somewhat, yet he hopes they will remain good friends.' Haydn was annoyed that a preliminary notice about the publication of some quartets had 'got into the papers,' and he hopes that Artaria 'will be more cautious in future.'

In connection with Haydn is to be mentioned a letter by J. P. Salomon, of Haydn Symphonies fame, dated London, January 8, 1790, and further one of Michael Haydn, Haydn's brother, addressed to Sigismund Neukomm. Other letters and musical MSS. there are of Halévy, Stephen Heller, Henselt, Hérold, Henri Herz, Hummel and Humperdinck.

Dr. Joachim was as much surprised as he was interested to find his counterpoint studies with Hauptmann in Leipzig, during the years 1844 and 1845, in Mr. Speyer's collection. There is also the autograph of an unpublished 'Capriccio for the Violin' by the great violinist, with a dedication to Mr. Speyer. The autograph of an unpublished Rhapsody by Liszt, written at Weimar (1885-86) is a composition which does not contain a single pure diatonic chord! And of Liszt we have further the autograph of a students' song for men's voices from Goethe's 'Faust,' dedicated to Mr. Wilhelm Speyer, and a number of letters addressed to the latter.

Meyerbeer wrote a large number of letters to the elder Mr. Speyer, ranging from 1832 to 1860, all of which are now in his son's collection, in addition to a sketch for the 'Huguenots.' The Mendelssohn autographs include a letter (May, 1824) from the composer's mother, Leah Mendelssohn, to Mr. Speyer's father, inviting him to music with her children, Felix and Fanny, when the former was a boy of fifteen. The MS. of the well-known duet 'I would that my love' had been presented by Mendelssohn to Marianne von Willemer, Goethe's friend, the poetess, author of 'Suleika,' and contains an inscription in the latter's handwriting dedicating the MS. to a sister of Mr. Speyer's. There are, further, the autograph of 'Abschiedstafel' for four-part men's chorus, with dedication to Mr. Speyer's father, and a number of letters addressed by Mendelssohn to the latter. Then we come to Méhul, with autograph music (page of an orchestral score) and two letters, and finally to such an extremely rare document as a long letter by Monteverde dated Venice, September 28, 1627, and speaking of his intermezzo 'Dido.'

Mr. Speyer's Mozart manuscripts are of supreme interest. Consideration of these, and the other MSS., which cover the remainder of the alphabet, must be held over till next month.

'Music should be in sympathy with the age in which it is composed, but this relates to the spirit and not the form.'

'Suppose we had no literature but translations from the German—no manufactures, but what came from the workshops of Berlin or Vienna. We should go on in life, but oh! how we should struggle and strive to get rid of it and have our own English things. We don't realise this in music and therefore we don't struggle for it.'

A FAMOUS MUSIC-PRINTER—JOHN DAY.

THE REBUS OF JOHN DAY, FROM A BIBLE PRINTED BY HIM IN 1551.

Before resuming the narrative, it may be interesting if we give in extenso the letter written by Archbishop Parker to Burghley concerning John Day's shop in St. Paul's Churchyard. Here it is, copied from Arber's 'Transcript of the Registers of the Company of Stationers' (i., 454):

Nowe, sir, Daye hath complained to me that dwellinge in a corner, and his brotherne [i.e., fellow-members of the Stationers' Company] envieng him, he cannot vtter his bookes which lie in his hande[s] ij or iij thousand powndes [= £20,000 to £30,000 of the present day] worthe, his frendes haue procured of Powles [i.e., the Dean and Chapter] a lease of a little shop to be sett vp in the Church yearde, and it is confermed, And what by the instant request of sum enuouse bookesellers, the maior and Aldermen will not suffer him to sett it vp in the Church yearde, wherin they have nothing to Doe but by power [mere force], this shop is but little and lowe and leaded flatt, and is made at his greate cost to the sum of xl or lii [= £400 or £500 at present], and is made like the terris, faier vailed and posted fitt for men to stande vppon in any triumphe or shewe, and can in noe wise either hurte or deface the same.

And for that you of the Councell haue written to me, and other of the Commission, to help Daie &c. I praie your Lordship to move the Queenes Maiestie to subscribe her hand to thes or such letters that all this entendement maye the better goe forward wherein your Honor shall deserve well both of Christes Church and of the prince and state &c.

And thus God preserue your Honor in better healtie, than I in a naughtie bodie feele in this harde winter.

At Lamhith this xiiijth of December [1572].

Your Honours lovinge ffrende

MATTHUE CANTUAR.

[Lansdowne MS. 15, fol. 99.]

Mr. Arber, in a footnote, furnishes the following interesting comment upon Archbishop Parker's letter to Lord Burghley:

What a fight was this, about a little shop, in which John Day, the Stationers' Company, the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, the High Commission, and the Privy Council, were all concerned, and apparently in vain. It needed the Queen's royal authority itself to say whether Day should have his shop or not. All this is testimony, 1st, to the value of St. Paul's Churchyard as a mart for books; 2ndly, to the extraordinary keenness of competition among the Stationers.

Day did not restrict his typographical achievements to books. In 1572 he printed a broadside entitled 'Certain prices set upon Fowl by the Lord Mayor, in the year 1572.' That he recognised the value of illustrations is proved by his Fox's 'Book of Martyrs,' the most fully illustrated book of the period—the picture-book of that time, in fact. 'The Testamentes of the twelue Patriarchs, the Sonnes of Jacob,' also printed by Day, contains a pictorial representation of Jacob bolstered up in bed with his sons round about him!

Monopoly had its opponents even in the 16th century. In the Burghley papers preserved at the British Museum (Lansdowne MSS.) is a four-page document entitled on the back 'The griefes of the printers glasse sellers and Cutlers sustained by reason of priuiledges granted to priuatt persons,' and subsequently designated 'Complaint of diuerse of their hynderance by graunte of Priuiledges.' Why this 'Complaint' contained the 'griefes' of 'glasse sellers and Cutlers' (with a capital C) as well as printers is not quite obvious. The 'priuillidge' of our particular printer is, however, thus set forth:

JOHN DAYE the Printinge of A.B.C.; and the Catechismes with the sole selling of them by the colour of A Commission. These bookes weare the onelie Releif of the porest sort of that Companie.

Although 'these bookes' must have had a very large sale, they are now extremely scarce, as indeed are other old-time school books that were widely circulated. It is interesting to find that so long ago as 1553, when Day issued the 'Short catechisme' above referred to, that the imprint bore a 'copyright note' in these words: 'Forbidding all other to print the same Catechisme.' Moreover, the book itself contains 'The Copie of the Kynges Maiesties letters Patentes for the Printynge of this and the lyttle Catechisme' which was 'Giuen at Grenewych the xx of May the vii yere of our Reigne [Edward VI.].'

To return to the 'Complaint' addressed to Burghley. Among the monopolists therein mentioned is a well-known name in music:

One BYRDE a Singingman hathe a licence for printinge of all Musicke bookes, and by that meanes he claimeth the printinge of ruled paper.

This 'Singingman' is, of course, William Byrde, the composer of 'Bow down thine ear,' who held the monopoly of 'printinge of ruled [music] paper.' Day's former partner is also included in the protest:

WILLIAM SERES hath priuillidge for the printinge of all psalters, all manner of Prymers englishe or latten, and all manner of prayer bookes, with the Reuercon of the same to his sonne, Who giveth not himself to our trade.

The document concludes with 'the names of all suche Stacyoners and Printers as are hindered by reason of the foresaid priuillidges.' The privilege granted to Day, on October 28, 1559, gave him a copyright of seven years for any original work produced at his own expense, and, as Mr. Steele says, it is probably owing to this that we owe the rapid changes in the Metrical Psalms in the earliest editions printed by him. His second privilege (May 6, 1567) was for ten years; while the third—granted August 6, 1577, through the influence of the Earl of Leicester—was to himself and his (Day's) son for life.

In 1579 John Day printed Daman's Psalter, which is entitled:

The Psalmes of Dauid in English meter, with Notes of foure partes set vnto them, by Guilielmo Daman, for Iohn Bull, to the vse of the godly Christians for recreatynge them selues, in stede of fond and vnseemely Ballades.

This was issued in four separate parts—Treble, Contratenor, Tenor, and Bassus—each with a separate title-page as above. No complete copy of this Psalter is known, but an almost perfect one—wanting only the title-page and the last leaf of the contra-tenor part—is in the library of

Mr. William Cowan, of Edinburgh, who kindly supplies the following note on the book:

As stated in the preface—which is signed by Edward Hake—these Psalm tunes were composed (i.e., harmonised, the tenor part being the ordinary church tune) by Daman for the 'private delite' of his friend 'John Bull, Citezen and Goldsmith of London,' and were not intended for publication. Bull, however, thought so highly of them that he considered it his duty to give them to the world in printed form. The tunes are harmonised in simple counterpoint, note against note, the preface stating that the composer 'never ment them to the use of any learned and cunning Musition'; and Daman, feeling that the work did not adequately represent his musical attainments, composed a much more elaborate setting of the Psalm-tunes which was published in 1591.

By

A SPECIMEN OF JOHN DAY'S MUSICAL TYPOGRAPHY.
FROM JAN UTENHOVE'S 'HONDELT PSALMEN DAUIDS,' PRINTED IN 1561.

In Daman's '1591' Psalter,—referred to by Mr. Cowan—printed by T. Este, 'the Tenor singeth the Church tune'; but in his 'second Booke . . . containing all the tunes of Dauids Psalmes,' also dated 1591, 'the highest part singeth the Church tune.'*

* The title of Daman's 'second Booke' as given in the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' (art. Daman) needs amendment. It should read:

'The second Booke of the Musicke of M. William Daman, late one of her maiesties Musitions: containing all the Tunes of Dauid's Psalmes, as they are ordinarily sung in the Church: most excellently by him composed into 4. parts. In which Sett the highest part singeth the Church tune.' [1591.]

John Day, backed up as he was by the Earl of Leicester, was one of the strongest men in the trade. The privileges which he and others held were still considered so irksome that certain printers combined to produce and circulate some popular books. One of these 16th century pirates, Roger Ward—'in retaliation for his imprisonment by certain Stationers in the Counter in Wood Street, London'—ordered his men to print as many as 10,000 copies of the 'A B C with the little Catechism, with Day's arms or trade-mark thereupon.' This piratical act resulted in the famous Star-chamber case of 'John Day v. Roger Ward and William Holmes,' heard between February 7 and July 10, 1582, of which a full account is given by Arber in his 'Transcript' (ii., pp. 753-769). Several appeals were made to the Crown in order to put an end to the very lucrative business resulting from the monopoly of the 'priveleges.' Even Mr. Christopher Barker, the Queen's printer, protested in a document, dated December, 1582, addressed to Cecil, which begins thus:

Item a note of the offices, and other speciall licences for printing, graunted by her maiestie to diuerse persons; with a coniecture of the valuation.

Christopher Barker refers to 'Mr. Daye' in these terms:

In the priuiledge, or priuate licence graunted to Mr. Daye, are among other things the Psalmes in meeter, with Notes to singe them in the Churches, as well in foure parts, as in playne songe, which being a parcell of the Church service properly belongeth to me. This booke being occupied of all sortes of men, women and children, and requiring no great stock for the furnyshing thereof, is therefore gaynefull. The small Catechisme alone, taught to all lyttle children of this Realme, is taken oute of the Booke of Common Prayer, and belongeth to me also, which Master Juggesold to Master Daye, and is likewise included in this patent procured by the right honorable the Earle of Leicester, and therefore for Duties sake I hold my self content therewith. This is also a profitable Copie for that it is generall and not greatlie chargeable.

Concerning the privileges of 'Mr. Birde and Mr. Tallis of her Majesties Chappell,' the Queen's printer has this to say:

In this Patent are included all Musicke bookes whatsoeuer, and the printing of all ruled paper, for the pricking of any song to the lute, virginals, or other instrumentes. The paper is somewhat beneficiall, as for the musick bookes, I would not prouide necessarie furniture to haue them.

Mr. Barker's 'report' concludes thus:

It Doth not become me to offer vnto your honour a meane of redresse: but if it please your Lordship to commaund me that service, I will most willingly set downe my simple opinion for your Honour to consider of. Whome I beseech the Lord to his pleasure long to preserve.

Whatever may have resulted from the above and similar protests, Day continued to flourish: yet no one can accuse him of lacking in benevolence. In January, 1583, a year before his death, he 'yielded to the disposicon and purpose aforesayde'—i.e., the relief of the poor members of the Stationers' Company—no fewer than thirty-six books, he being by far the most liberal of the patentees who generously relinquished their rights.

John Day died at Walden, in Essex, on July 23, 1584, aged sixty-two, and was buried, on August 2, in the church of Little Bradley, near Haverhill, Suffolk. He was twice married, and strangely enough he had thirteen children by each wife! A moiety of this quiverful family, with their parents, is represented on the brass to his memory in Little Bradley Church, of which an illustration (from the Gentleman's Magazine of November, 1832) is given on p. 239. It will be observed that two little Days are peacefully reposing in the tomb, around which their papa and mamma and their eleven brothers and sisters are engaged in an act of devotion. In 1880 a stained glass window was placed in Little Bradley Church to the memory of John Day, towards the cost of which the Worshipful Company of Stationers—of which Day was one of the original members—contributed the sum of fifty guineas.

The names of only four of Day's twenty-six children are known—Bartholomew, Richard, John, and Lionel, two of whom, with their father, have found a place in the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' Richard Day—an Etonian and a Fellow of King's College, Cambridge—although he took holy orders, kept on, for a time at least, his father's printing business. He had an exclusive privilege, jointly with his father, during their lives and that of the longer liver, to print the Psalms of David in metre, &c. (26 Aug., 19th of Elizabeth). As a printer, Richard Day justly merits the honour of attempting a general reform in the distinct use of the letters j and i, v and u. He retained the old shop at the west-end of St. Paul's Churchyard, and adopted the sign of the three lilies on one stalk, in the midst of thorns, derived from his device, with the motto sicut liliam inter spinas.

In conclusion, John Day was not only a man of integrity and great learning, but he was one of the foremost printers of his time. During his prosperous and active career of nearly forty years about 230 works of importance were issued from his press. He fully merits the praise of Dibdin that 'there are very few of our earlier printers to whom both literature and typography are more deeply indebted.' Like Jan Utenhove, already referred to, Archbishop Parker 'had a particular kindness for John Day, he being more ingenious and industrious in his art than the rest,' and he is the first English letter-founder of whom we possess authentic records, and also a portrait. (See the portrait supplement in the March issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES.) Not only were his new Anglo-Saxon, Italic, Roman, and Greek types remarkably fine, but he introduced a variety of mathematical and other signs, and, moreover, was liberal in the use of handsome woodcut initials, vignettes, and other illustrations. That John Day had every claim to be a music printer of great renown is evidenced by his typographical excellence, and that in twenty-seven years—1557 to 1584—he printed no fewer than fifty music books, of which the titles are given by Mr. Robert Steele in his invaluable bibliography 'The earliest English music printing.' Of these fifty books, forty-six are Metrical Psalters, which include forty-one of the Sternhold version, two by Utenhove, one by Archbishop Parker, Whythorne's 'Songs,' &c. He lived at a time when the night of ignorance was departing and giving place to the sunlight of knowledge, due to the printing-press. Therefore, who would question his right to the motto, 'Arise, for it is Day'?

Occasional Notes.

If music and sweet poetry agree,
As they must needs, the sister and the brother,
Then must the love be great 'twixt thee and me,
Because thou lov'st the one and I the other.
Dowland to thee is dear, whose heavenly touch
Upon the lute doth ravish human sense ;
Spenser to me, whose deep conceit is such
As, passing all conceit needs no defence,
Thou lov'st to hear the sweet melodious sound
That Phœbus' lute, the queen of music makes ;
And I in deep delight am chiefly drown'd—
When as himself to singing he betakes.
One god is god of both, as poets feign ;
One knight loves both, and both in three remain.

RICHARD BARNFIELD. 1547--1627.

Lincoln is to hold its Triennial Musical Festival on June 20 and 21. As usual this interesting music-making opens with an orchestral evening concert, at which Sir Hubert Parry and Dr. Cowen will each conduct one of their own compositions. On the next day two performances will be given in the beautiful cathedral, when the following works will be performed:

Festival Te Deum (Dvorák), Voces Clamantium (Parry), Tod und Verklärung (Strauss), Requiem (Brahms), Unfinished Symphony (Schubert), and Israel in Egypt (Handel).

There will be a full orchestra and chorus of upwards of 550 performers—the singers, in addition to Lincoln (190 voices), coming from Nottingham, Grimsby, Hull, Spilsby and district, and Gainsborough, thus widely spreading the interest of the event. An excellent team of soloists has been engaged; Mr. H. L. Balfour and Dr. W. G. Alcock are the organists; and the baton will be safe in the competent hands of Dr. G. J. Bennett, the cathedral organist.

M. Safonoff, who conducted the London Symphony Orchestra concert on February 22, is a batonless conductor. In this respect he resembles the majority of Welsh conductors, who rely entirely upon their hands in their time-beatings. There the similarity ceases, because the eminent conductor is a master of the orchestra. When M. Safonoff was asked (we quote from an interview with him published in the Morning Leader) how he first came to give up the use of the baton, he replied:

‘It was two years ago, when one day, in Moscow, I went to rehearsal forgetting to take my stick with me. When my servant brought the baton to me two hours later, the reform was accomplished.’

‘The orchestra approved, and for myself, I found that I had a sensitive instrument upon which I could, as it were, play at will. Since then I have always used my hands alone, even in conducting big oratorios.’

‘If one has no baton it is impossible for the players to be lazy; they have to watch the beat so carefully. As for myself, I find I have ten sticks (holding up his fingers) instead of one.’

‘Mark my words, in ten or fifteen years there will be no batons in the orchestra.’

‘I never have any studied gesticulations. Upon the sensitive instrument which I make of my orchestra I perform something in the nature of an improvisation, for I never play the same piece twice in exactly the same way. In the past few years the orchestra has changed greatly, and new treatment and new ideas are necessary.’

That M. Safonoff has original ideas in regard to expression marks, time-words, and metronomic indications, the following remarks will show:

‘I consider, for instance, that in the printed orchestral scores and parts no nuances or marks of tempi should be printed; their place should be taken by all the technical marks, such as bowing, phrasing, &c. Then the conductor steps up to the orchestra, and he himself inserts the nuances entirely as he pleases.’

‘These methods I have tried with the greatest success upon such orchestras as the Lamoureux, the New York Philharmonic, and the Vienna Philharmonic, and others.’

The results which the distinguished Russian conductor obtained at his first appearance in England will be found recorded on page 254 of the present issue.

The following biographical notes on M. Safonoff's career prefaced the programme-book of the London Symphony Orchestra concert above referred to:

‘WASSILY ILJITSCH SAFONOFF was born in 1852 at the Cossack village Itschörg, in the Caucasus. The son of a Cossack General, he was primarily educated at the Gymnasium, and, later, the Imperial Alexander Lyceum, Petersburg. He studied music zealously under Leschetizky (pianoforte), Sieke and Zarembo (theory). Zarembo died in 1879, and Safonoff then became a pupil of Brassin, entering the latter's pianoforte class at the Conservatoire. In 1880 he was awarded the gold medal of that institution, and for the next five years was occupied there as a teacher. In 1883 he went on an extensive tour (Finland, the Baltic provinces, Germany, Austria, and Hungary) with the famous 'cellist Davidoff, and two years later definitely left Petersburg for Moscow as a professor at the Conservatoire in that city, and as trainer of the choral and orchestral classes, in which capacity he conspicuously exhibited the gifts that have since given him his world-wide reputation as a conductor. In 1889 he was appointed Director of the Conservatoire, and in the following year the fortunes of the Imperial Russian Musical Society's Symphony Concerts were also placed in his hands. His pupils are numerous, and many have become eminent. Among these may be named Lhévinne, Goedicke, Scriabine, and Medtner. Safonoff's career has, during the last few years, aroused universal attention. His brilliant successes at Vienna resulted in an invitation to conduct the New York Philharmonic Orchestra. His talent was warmly recognized in the United States, and by transatlantic critics trumpeted far and wide. “Russia,” said one, “lost a great general when Safonoff became a conductor.” In short, the subject of this brief sketch is a born leader of men as well as a fine musician.’

The Leeds Choral Union—that splendid body of choristers who gave real ‘Yorkshire Relish’ to the Queen's Hall Orchestra concert on March 3—was formed in 1895, and consists of about 420 members. In addition to their usual quartet of concerts given at Leeds, they have had the honour of singing four times in London, and of having given an excellent performance of ‘The Apostles’ in York Minster. The scheme of this season's concerts includes the following choral works: ‘Faust’ (Berlioz), ‘Choral symphony,’ ‘John Gilpin’ (Cowen), ‘Requiem’ (Verdi), ‘Glory, honour, praise’ (Mozart); and a Handel selection. Dr. Henry Coward is the conductor of this full-voiced Choral Union, and Mr. Henry C. Embleton, a whole-hearted lover of music, is its Honorary Secretary and Treasurer.

Mr. Algernon Ashton writes:

SIR,—One of your readers, I notice, has asked you to furnish him with a list of distinguished musicians who have been cremated, or who had a motor-car funeral. You regret your inability to do so, and add: ‘Ask Mr. Algernon Ashton.’ So allow me to give you some small information on this subject. With respect to motor-car funerals, I doubt very much whether any musician has ever yet been carried to the grave by this mode of conveyance, nor was I aware that funerals by motor-car were already in vogue. As regards distinguished musicians who have been cremated, I can for the moment only think of nine, whose names are as follows: Hans von Bülow, the great pianist and conductor; Sims Reeves, the famous tenor; Ridley Prentice, well known as a successful pianoforte teacher and writer on music; Henry Hiles, a noted composer and contrapuntist; Adolf Schimon, a distinguished singing teacher and talented composer; Edward Dannreuther, the celebrated pianist, teacher, writer on music, and ardent disciple of Richard Wagner; Anton Seidl, the famous conductor; Antoinette Sterling, the renowned songstress; and Jenny Bürde-Ney, the celebrated opera-singer.

Like Sir Henry Irving, Hans von Bülow was first embalmed, then cremated (to my mind a most incomprehensible proceeding), and his ashes ultimately interred in the principal cemetery at Hamburg. The ashes of Ridley Prentice, who was an intimate personal friend of mine, were scattered to the four winds by his own request! What became of the incalculated remains of the other seven just mentioned, I do not know. The illustrious Johannes Brahms was in favour of cremation, and desired that his body should be consumed by fire, but as he left no proper will his wish was (fortunately) not carried out. My utter abhorrence for the burning up of human bodies, and my cogent reasons for this abhorrence, have been adequately expressed in former letters to the Press, so that I need not repeat them here. I am glad, however, to observe that so few musicians seem to be advocates of this truly detestable practice.—

Yours very obediently,

ALGERNON ASHTON.

By way of sequel to the article on Hereford Cathedral in our March issue, we give a reproduction of the Cathedral library book-plate. Reference may also be made to the 12th century chair located in the Sanctuary. Tradition has it that King Stephen ('worthy peer') sat on it, with the crown on his head, when he attended mass on Whitsunday, A.D. 1138, after he had taken Hereford city and its castle from Queen Maud. Whether this be true or not, there is no doubt of the antiquity of the chair, which may have been made for Bishop Reinhelm, 1107-15. Now used only at ordinations and visitations by the Bishop, the chair is a very fine and substantial piece of furniture. Made of good old oak, it is 3 ft. 9 in. high, 33 inches broad, and 22 inches from back to front. It was formed of 53 pieces (of which 8 pieces are lost), exclusive of the seat of two boards and the two small, circular heads in front. No nails or screws are used in the construction of this ancient chair; each piece of wood is let into an auger-hole of about an inch in diameter and secured by wooden wedges. The seat is fixed in grooves, and consists of plain oak boards. One little correction in the article has to be made. The Rev. Custos Duncombe did not begin to reside in the College of Vicars until the year 1875; but in June next he will original and 'catchy.' Despite its melodic nature, however, the composition never falls to the level of cheapness or triviality. Dr. Harriss draws his inspiration from many sources, and there is a strong Wagnerian influence in his orchestration and harmonies. The final chorus may be said to be Mendelssohnian in places, in respect to its part-writing; but these influences are noticeable only in its style, and the accusation of plagiarism cannot be brought against the composer.

At the same concert Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Canadian Rhapsody' (Op. 67) was performed for the first time in Canada. Played by the Pittsburgh Orchestra, under the direction of Herr Emil Paur, the work was as favourably received as it was here in London on its production by our Philharmonic Society last year. The Gala State Concert above referred to was one of two music-makings given on succeeding evenings (February 19 and 20) to inaugurate the Philharmonic Society, Montreal. This musical organization has been formed by Dr. Charles Harriss 'for the purpose of giving throughout each season a series of performances such as is hoped will prove worthy of the support necessary to the success of the organization, and to the work which it aspires to do in furthering the development and progress of music in the Metropolitan City of the Dominion.' May these efforts in the cause of good music be crowned with success!

When was Beethoven's E flat pianoforte concerto first performed in England? The programme-book of the latest Philharmonic concert says: 'It was introduced to London music-lovers by Mendelssohn, in 1829, at a concert given by the flautist, Drouet.' As this statement comes at the end of the analysis of the concerto it may be regarded as a 'deceptive cadence,' because the work was introduced here in England by Charles Neate nine years earlier than the Mendelssohn performance—on May 8, 1820, and indeed at a Philharmonic concert! The Quarterly Musical Magazine and Review—then the only English musical journal—noticed the Neate performance in these words:

On the same evening [May 8, 1820,] a concerto, by the same author [Beethoven], was performed for the first time in this country by Mr. Neate. Beethoven wrote it expressly for himself, but his slovenly habits of execution were unequal to the task. The tutti introduction is fine, and the executive parts for the pianoforte very various, very difficult, and at times very effective, though frequently incongruous. Mr. Neate played with remarkable brilliancy, and was greeted with never-ending applause.

The programme of the concert—there were no analysts in those days—gives the work thus:

Concerto, Pianoforte, MR. NEATE ... Beethoven.
(never performed in this country)

As Beethoven was living in the year 1820, it would be interesting to know if he saw the foregoing depreciative comments upon his interpretative and creative achievements, and still more interesting to know what his comments were on the charges of 'slovenly habits of execution' and the 'frequently incongruous' portions of his masterful concerto. It should not be forgotten that Charles Neate—who lived to be ninety-three years of age—is said to have been the first to introduce to English audiences Weber's Concertstück as well as the concerto referred to above. He had such admiration for Beethoven that, in 1815, he visited Vienna in order to see the great man. There he stayed for eight months, enjoying the friendship and profiting by the advice of the composer of the glorious E flat pianoforte concerto. If only Charles Neate had written his reminiscences!

have been connected with the Cathedral for the long period of forty years—first, as a deputy, then assistant vicar, and then a vicar-choral proper. Moreover, he has exceeded the record of tenure of all former holders of the office of Custos, as he was elected in October, 1877, and the longest time ever completed as Custos since Queen Elizabeth's charter was twenty-eight years, by one Robert Moore in the 18th century. May many more years be granted to genial Custos Duncombe!

A Gala State Concert was given at Montreal, on February 19, in honour of Their Excellencies the Governor-General of Canada and the Countess Grey, and at which they were present, when Dr. Charles Harriss's Choric Idyl 'Pan,' for soli, chorus and orchestra, was performed under the composer's direction. The local Press speaks in appreciative terms of the work, the following being a sample of the criticisms passed thereupon:

The music is interesting throughout, and there is not a dry bar in the whole work. The composer has an abundance of melody, and some of the themes are most

MADAME CARREÑO.

Madame Teresa Carreño played with such splendid vigour in Rubinstein's D minor Pianoforte concerto, and with such exquisite delicacy and charm in some Chopin pieces at the first Philharmonic concert this season, that it is difficult to realize that she gave her first recital in London nearly forty years ago. This took place on July 22, 1867, when—if the distinguished pianist's birth-date is correctly given in the biographical dictionaries—she was a prodigy aged thirteen, who appeared in short frocks. As no mention of Teresa Carreño's early appearance in England is to be found in the usual books of reference, we reprint, from the Musical World of August 10, 1867, a notice of the 'matinée,' as it was called, which she gave in London:

MDLLE. TERESA CARRENO, 'the celebrated Vénézuélian pianist,' as she styles herself—and who knows so well?—gave a matinée in the minor hall, St. James's Hall, on Monday, July 22nd, which was loftily patronized, proving that Vénézuélian art is within the immediate acquaintance of a certain section of our aristocracy, who think proper to lend it the lustre of their names, if not altogether to sanction it by their presence. The list of grand patronesses who commend Mdlle. Carreno to public consideration of course know all about that lady's talents and qualifications. Independent of the countenance of noble and honourable ladies, however, Mdlle. Carreno may be praised as a very good pianoforte player, who is a mistress of several styles, and distinguishes herself in all. She played Beethoven's Sonata in C sharp minor, Op. 27; Chopin's Ballade in A flat; Gottschalk's solo on the 'Miserere' from the Trovatore; Fumigalli's rêverie, 'A une Fleur'; Quidant's 'Grand Galop de Concert'; and a fantasia of her own composition on Norma. Mdlle. Carreno has a powerful finger and much brilliancy of style, and is altogether what may be called a 'taking player.' She evidently pleased her audience, who applauded her with liberality. Mdlle. Carreno was assisted in the vocal department by Mdlle. Blanche Gottschalk, Madame Demeric-Lablache, Mdlle. Mela, and Signor Franceschi; and, in the instrumental, by Mdlle. Bertha Brousil, violinist. The conductors were Mr. Benedict, Signors Li Calsi and Campana.—B. B.

The initials 'B. B.' at the end of the above extract are an abbreviation of 'Bashi Bazook,' one of the pen-names of either Mr. J. W. Davison himself or one of his critical cronies.

The fact that a great conductor like M. Wassily Safonoff, on making his début in London with one of the most famous orchestras in the world (which the London Symphony Orchestra can claim to be), thought it worth while to devote attention to so slight a work as Mozart's Serenade in G for strings, occasioned some remark. But how welcome this pellucid and naïve music was, and how exquisitely it was played, under the evident loving care of the conductor! In our experience we have known string orchestras that have 'turned up their noses' when this miniature symphony has been recommended to them. It has been said to be too easy and straightforward, and too obvious in plan and texture to deserve the attention of experienced players. But this view leaves out of account the illimitable possibilities of beautiful execution when applied to Mozart's music. Amateur string bands ought to welcome a piece which makes comparatively slight demands upon technical skill, and therefore permits conductor and performers to concentrate study upon beauty of execution and charm of expression. The Serenade was composed in Vienna, and is dated August 10, 1787. In the Mozart catalogue it is No. 65 and in Köchel No. 525. It is usually described as 'Eine kleine Nachtmusik.'

The recent revival—by the J. W. Turner Opera Company, at the Standard Theatre, Shoreditch—of Edward James Loder's opera 'The Wilis,' or 'The Night Dancers,' as it is called, almost synchronised—either by accident or design—with the jubilee of its production. The opera was first performed at the Princess's Theatre, Oxford Street, on October 28, 1846, and apart from the success which the work immediately obtained, the occasion became historical in that The Times notice of the performance was the first operatic criticism contributed to that journal by Mr. J. W. Davison. From this notice—which occupied more than a column and a half of The Times—we extract the following, as giving an outline of the libretto:

First, be it understood, that the 'Wilis' are young girls betrothed, who die before the marriage day. An irresistible passion for dancing afflicts them in the grave, to such an extent that at midnight they rise, clad in the semblance of their bridal trappings, jewels on their fingers, and wreaths of flowers on their heads, and perform a succession of mystic dances on the highway, till the approach of morning drives them back into their graves. Although their faces are white with the whiteness of death, they are endowed with a kind of unearthly beauty, which is so fascinating that anyone who comes within the influence of their attraction, is forced involuntarily to join in their dances, and to continue dancing until death ensues from sheer exhaustion.

The production of the opera was very nearly attended with a serious catastrophe. To quote further from Mr. Davison's excellent notice:

In the scene of the 'Wilis' an accident occurred, which might have cut the opera short most gloomily. The gauze dress of Madame Albertazzi [who impersonated Giselle] caught fire as she was rising from a trap-door, and the flames increased rapidly and alarmingly. Owing to the presence of mind displayed by Mr. Allen and the other actors who were in the scene, however, they were immediately extinguished, and Madame Albertazzi resumed her part amidst the most vociferous applause. It was a moment of great and painful excitement.

Loder's opera has so long been known by its subtitle 'The Night Dancers' that its original designation 'The Wilis' is forgotten, though one would expect it to be recorded in all books of reference, especially in the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' An eminently melodious composer, Loder is now best known by his songs 'The brave old oak,' 'The Diver,' &c.; but there are other strains of his muse that might with advantage be revived.

The Abendblatt der Frankfurter Zeitung of February 28 thus comments upon the first performance of 'The Apostles' in Berlin on February 23:

The performance of Edward Elgar's 'The Apostles' in Berlin—by the Singakademie, under Prof. Schumann's direction—brought the English composer, so frequently spoken of in recent years, to an undoubtedly recognised position in the world of art. With a single bound he reveals himself to us in an entirely new light. Those short works of his, with which we have hitherto become acquainted, proclaimed his genius for characterization which, with its broad colouring, often triumphs over the beautiful. But now for the first time we see the composer's creative gifts turned to account in a form of art of greater dimensions, and we bow before the overwhelming tone-power of the 'Apostle' poet. Scenes such as the ensemble in the Sermon on the Mount (By the Wayside), and the exquisitely painted picture 'Golgotha,' with the grandly built-up 'Ascension,' are seldom found in modern choral works. Some less important and coldly reflective portions, especially in the first part, are richly atoned for by those already mentioned. A successful performance of the work has won its creator a first place in contemporary musical art.

Manuel Garcia celebrated his 101st birthday on March 17, in the full enjoyment of health. To him be offered the heartiest congratulations upon having beaten time against five full scores of years. It seems more than probable that the veteran teacher will, after all, be able to give lessons to the young lady to whom he said twelve months ago: 'You are rather too young: come to me in two years' time'! By the way, the conductor of an omnibus which passes Mr. Garcia's residence at Cricklewood is wont to call the arch-veteran musician 'a centurion.' This reminds us of a local preacher who took for his text Acts x., 1 and 2. In the course of his sermon he said: 'Those of you who are musical, dear friends, will observe that Cornelius was a musician: for was he not a member of the Italian band?'

For many years past it has been the custom for the English residents in our midst to contribute towards the social enjoyments of the winter season by a very generous devotion of time and trouble in the getting up of Amateur Theatrical Performances of one kind or another.

Thus states The English Herald and Swiss Advertiser, issued at Montreux. No one would wish anything but well to such designs. But how are they carried out? The particular performance referred to in the journal quoted from, was Sullivan's 'Patience,' in which—according to the same authority—appeared a 'Chorus of rapturous Maidens.' Should not such 'Patience' maidens be hospital patients?

'PACKINGTON'S POUND.'

One of the best known of our old English ballad-tunes goes by the curious name of 'Packington's Pound.' It is found in the Fitzwilliam Virginal Book, and in many other early collections of our popular music, both printed and manuscript. Nightingale's song in the third act of Ben Jonson's 'Bartholomew Fair,' beginning 'My masters and friends and good people, draw near,' is sung 'to the tune of Packington's Pound.' There are so many different versions of the tune that it is difficult to make sure of its original form. The following, from the 'Beggar's Opera' (1728), is as good as any:

Who was Packington? In a manuscript formerly belonging to Dr. Rimbault the tune is called 'A Fancy of Sir John Pagington.' There was a well-known character of this name, a romantic and chivalrous personage of the Court of Queen Elizabeth. He was born in 1549, educated at Christ Church, Oxford, admitted a member of Lincoln's Inn on November 22, 1570, knighted in 1587, and elected Sheriff for Worcestershire in 1595 and 1607. He died in January, 1624, and was buried at Aylesbury, the principal seat of the family. This was the 'lusty Packington' who offered to swim from Westminster to Greenwich for a wager of £3,000, and was only prevented from making the hazardous attempt by the personal intervention of Good Queen Bess, 'who had a particular tenderness for handsome fellows.'

But why 'Packington's Pound'? I can find nothing recorded of the career of this Sir John that will explain it. But there is another and an earlier Sir John, great-uncle of the one just mentioned, who seems to me to have a better claim to be associated with the tune. He was a member of the Inner Temple as early as 1505, and on November 1, 1528, was elected to the office of Treasurer, the highest position which any Benchman could attain in his Inn. He held this post for five years. By Letters Patent of April 5, 1529, he was granted for life the right of remaining covered in the presence of Royalty, but neither the Signed Bill nor the Patent itself indicate the nature of the services for which this unusual privilege was awarded. In 1532 he became a Sergeant-at-Law, a rank corresponding more or less to the modern King's Counsel. In 1535 he was made a Justice of North Wales, and in 1540 Custos Rotulorum for Worcestershire. He was knighted in 1545, died in 1560, and was buried at Hampton Lovett. Among many services that he rendered to the Inner Temple not the least was the construction of a river wall on the south side of the Temple Gardens, which in those days extended right down to the water's edge. The Temple was already enclosed on three sides, and I cannot help thinking that it was the construction of this wall on the fourth side, completing the enclosure, which gave occasion to the wits to speak of 'Packington's Pound,' much as we speak to-day of Queen Elizabeth's Pop-gun, or the Twopenny Tube. The records of the 'Parliament' of the Inner Temple, held on June 21, 1524, contain the following entry:

It is agreed that a roll be made by Thomas the butler of the contributors towards the stone wall to be built in the garden near the Thames. Master Pakyngton and Master Rice are elected surveyors for the wall, and are to provide all things for the same, and that the money be delivered to them.

Later on, under date February 5, 1534, we read:

Att this parliament Ihon Pakyngton, late treasurer of the Inner Temple, which hath takyn many and sundre payns in the buyldyng of the walle betwene the Thamez and the garden of the seyd Temple, which also hath takyn lyke payns or getter in buyldyng and setting uppe of the newe chambers, lately made betwene the lybrarye and the logginges called Baryngton's Rentes, and also in zeling of [?] providing a new ceiling for] the halle, hath geven unto the company of the seyd Temple x li. of good money towertes the apparelles of the seyd Temple, for which ytt is ordenyd and established by this parlyament that all the seyd new chambers betwene the lybrarye and Barington's Rentes be from hens forth named and callyd Pakyngton's Rentes, and the seyd company, for his greate dylygens, labors and payns takyn for the greate profet of the Howse of the seyd Temple, gevyth unto hym hartey thanks.

MENDELSSOHN'S ITALIAN SYMPHONY.

By SIR GEORGE GROVE, C.B.

Allegro vivace. A major.

Andante con moto. D minor.

Con moto moderato. A and E major.

Saltarello: Presto. A minor.

The name of 'Italian' by which this delightful work is known is due to Mendelssohn himself. He composed it during his stay in Italy in 1831, and repeatedly refers to it under that title in his letters home, to distinguish it from the 'Walpurgis Night,' which in joke he calls the 'Saxon' symphony, and from the 'Hebrides' overture, which he also wrote at the same time, as well as from the 'Scotch' symphony, which he planned and made some progress with during that period of activity. The opening and closing movements appear to have been composed in Rome itself. At any rate, writing from Rome on February 22, 1831, after he had been there four months, he tells his sisters that the 'Italian symphony is making great progress; it will be the gayest thing I have yet done, especially the last movement; for the Adagio I have not found anything yet exactly right, and I think I must put it off for Naples.' A week later he is in the same mind, and lamenting how fast the time flies, and very unnecessarily upbraiding himself for not making the best use of it, he continues: 'If I could do but one of my two symphonies here! but the Italian one I must and will put off till I have seen Naples, which must play a part in it.' The part which it did play then is the slow movement. Of the Scherzo, or what stands for it, more anon: the Andante, if anything, records Mendelssohn's visit to Naples. It is difficult to realise this, and to find in that grave, beautiful, regretful strain a reflection of the streets and quays of the noisiest and most brilliant city in the world. It is not like the protest of an earnest-minded man against the frivolity and recklessness of the 'great sinful streets of Naples,' which raised so powerfully the indignation of a poet of our own days.* One would rather guess it to have been the production, or rather the suggestion of some solemn evening hour in Rome, in the gathering shades of St. Peter's, or the mouldering quaint grandeur of the Vatican gardens. And we cling to this idea, notwithstanding the two letters just quoted; for it was not till April 5 that he left Rome, and the Holy Week and Easter had come in the interval, with their wonderful ceremonials, and the lovely land journey—by road, not by railway—from Rome to Naples, in which to collect his impressions and mature his ideas. This Andante (often, though entirely without warrant, called the Pilgrims' March) is one of the most favourite orchestral pieces in the whole repertoire of music; it is often (most improperly) encored, and probably shares with the Allegretto of Beethoven's No. 8 Symphony the honour of having made more people happy than any other similar piece.

I. The opening movement, Allegro vivace, seems to embody the general feelings aroused by Mendelssohn's entrance into Italy and his journey from the Alps to Rome, of which such delightful records are left in his letters. It is full of the 'open air' and 'blue sky' and the 'season of blossoms' that he loved so much, and is always talking of in the letters of this period. Never perhaps was music written more wonderfully full of the fire of youth and the animal spirits of a man at once thoroughly genial and thoroughly refined. There is something irresistible in the gay elan with which it starts off at once without an instant's hesitation; in this respect like, and yet in much else how unlike, Beethoven's Eighth Symphony!*

No. 1. Allegro vivace. VI. in 8ves. arco.

How bright and variegated is the colour of the opening, as the flutes, clarinets, and oboes come dancing in one after the other, and the staccato bass picks its way about so effectively!

The subject just quoted from is developed at considerable length before the introduction of the 'second subject' proper. The latter, when it arrives, is given to his favourite clarinets, and might well be the very phrase which came into his head à propos to Goethe's line:

'Die ganze Luft ist warm und blüthevoll,' in speaking of which, indeed, he especially names† them:

No. 2.

The second part of the movement (after the double bar) opens with equal beauty and originality, with a fugato passage for the strings only, on the following crisp and spirited subject:

No. 3.

* The instrumentation of the opening accompaniment—flutes, clarinets, bassoons, and horns, with the air in the violins—is virtually identical with that of the Allegretto in the same Symphony of Beethoven.

now introduced, and ending in the reappearance of the opening theme (No. 1). The subject of this fugato is re-employed more than once in the Coda which terminates the movement. Another melody which appears only in the second part is the following joyous strain commenced by the second violins, and continued by the flute, with an accompaniment of staccato triplets in the fiddles, and detached pizzicato notes in the bass:

No. 4.

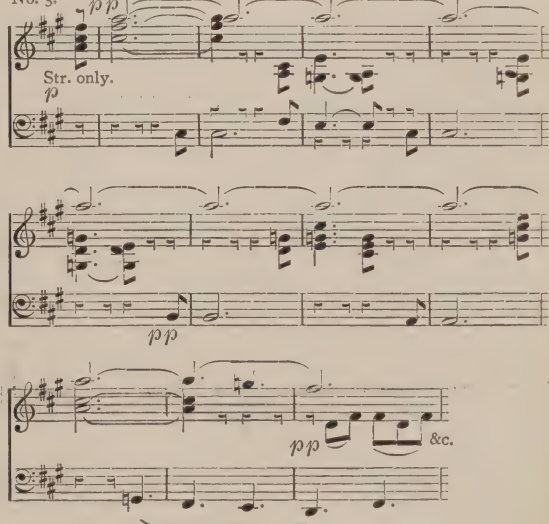

Mendelssohn must always have his violoncello solo; it is found in his very first symphony, written when he was barely twelve years old, and here it comes in with excellent effect on the return of the second subject, with a charming triplet accompaniment above it in the flutes and clarinets alternately (Ex. 4a):

the B and G in the first violins accompanying the second subject on its first appearance—see quotation No. 2) one might write for a week. But the music itself is better than any commentary. Let that be marked, learned, and inwardly digested, and the object of these remarks will be more than gained.

Such is this most gay and joyous movement. And yet, as if to show that no great poet is without a touch of melancholy, even in his brightest moods, and as if to remind us that we are not to be 'merry when we hear sweet music,' Mendelssohn has introduced a distinct colour of sadness in the following phrase for the wind, just at the end of the first part of the movement :

with the answer of the violins (in octaves) which follows it :

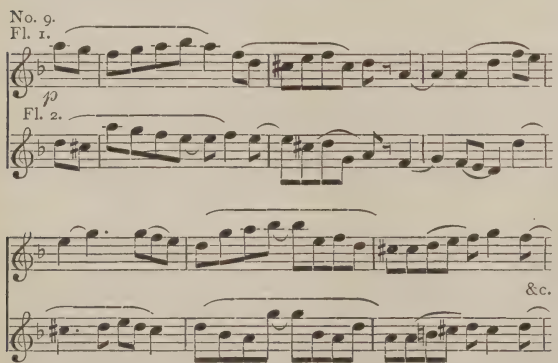

and leads into the return of the first part. The phrase re-appears at the close of the entire movement, but more fully accompanied, and without the same regretful tone as before.

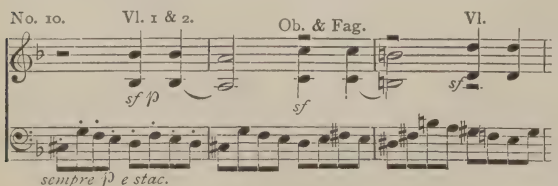

II. The second movement is the well-known Andante con moto already spoken of—often unwarrantably called the Pilgrims' March—which for originality and depth of sentiment stands, if not without a rival, certainly without a compeer. It is in D minor, and begins with the following loud call to prayer or meditation, like the cry of the muezzin from the minaret :

The rest of the movement is too well known to need quotation, only we cannot refrain from mentioning the part taken by the two flutes, interweaving their sweet voices with complete independence of each other and of their fellows in the band :

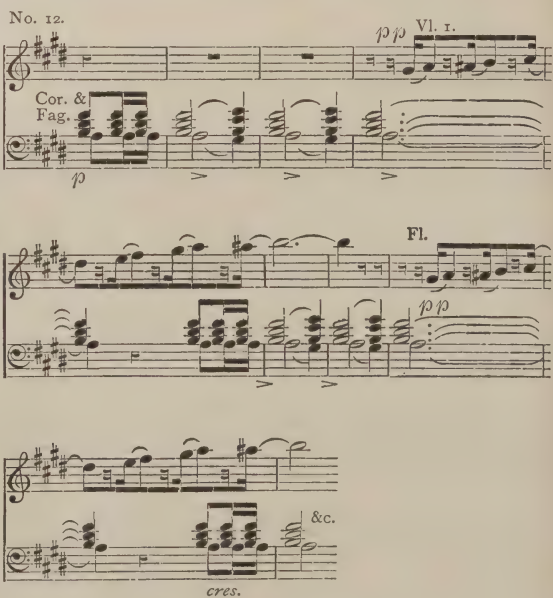

Also the fine change where the clarinets come in in A minor—not altogether unmindful of a similar change in the Allegretto in Beethoven's No. 7 Symphony ; and the beautiful idea where the strings and the wind answer one another energetically above the delicate staccato bass figure—like 'deep calling unto deep' :

III. With regard to the third movement, Con moto moderato, which occupies the place of the usual minuet or scherzo, there is a tradition (said to originate with Mendelssohn's brother-in-law Hensel, but still of uncertain authority) that it was transferred to its present place from some earlier composition. It is not, however, to be found in either of the twelve unpublished juvenile symphonies, and in the first rough draft of this symphony there is no sign of its having been interpolated, as the writer can vouch from actual inspection. In style the movement is no doubt earlier than the rest of the work :

The opening phrase has a Mozartish turn ; indeed it may be found almost note for note in Mozart, and there is a fine Mozart flavour in the four bars of Coda at the end of the first section. But these resemblances only last long enough to please us by the association, and the rest of the subjects and the whole of the treatment are as individual Mendelssohn as anything in the whole range of his works. So also is the Trio, which was certainly never anticipated by Mozart, and is as piquant and fresh as music can be :

IV. The Finale—in A minor—was doubtless inspired by the Carnival of Rome, in the fun of which Mendelssohn joined as heartily as any born Italian, and of which he has left a capital description (he would have said not so vivid as this Finale) in his letters. It is entitled 'Saltarello' in the printed score, thus giving the author's direct corroboration to the connection of his work with Italy. The Saltarello differs from the Tarantella in having a leaping step ; to accommodate which the phrase contains a crotchet in place of the even quavers of the other. This will be seen at once from the theme of the present

Saltarello (where the crotchet is however represented by a quaver and a rest):

No. 13. Presto. Fl. SALTARELLO. p leggiero. sempre stac.

There are three distinct themes in the movement, viz., that already quoted, a second Saltarello:

No. 14. Vl. 1. Vl. 2.

and a third subject of busy whirling motion and different rhythm from the others—in fact, a Tarantella:

No. 15. Vl. 1. Violas, p p

This last works up the tumult in an astonishing way, till the mad dancers seem almost visible; and a very Oriental effect is added by the steady iteration of the drum, while first the clarinets and then the oboes and flutes take up a new little subject:

No. 16. Cl.

with a melancholy pathos in it, like prophets standing in the background, pointing the moral of the revelry. As the close approaches the dancers drop off, the lights go out, and the lament makes its way more obviously to the ear.

The Symphony was first played at the Hanover Square Rooms, at the Philharmonic concert of May 13, 1833, during Mendelssohn's third visit to London. He himself conducted the performance, and played the D minor Pianoforte concerto of Mozart in the first portion of the concert; and the score of the symphony was purchased by the Society as part of the commission given him on November 5 in the preceding year. The reports both in the Harmonicon and the Athenæum, though short, fully recognise the beauties of the work. The Times has no report.

The autograph bears date 'Berlin, 13th March, 1833,' an evidence that, with his usual conscientious care, he had given it his last attention (and doubtless many an alteration) before setting out with it on his English journey.

A passage relating to the Symphony, from one of his published letters, written in the interval between the date just quoted and his leaving Berlin for England, is full of interest, as showing the characteristically earnest, modest way in which Mendelssohn regarded his work. 'Berlin, April 6th, 1833. My work, about which I had so recently so many misgivings, is finished; and now that I look it over I find, contrary to my expectations, that it satisfies me. I believe it has become a good piece; and be that as it may, I feel that it shows progress, and that is the main point. So long as I feel this I know that I can enjoy life and be happy; but the bitterest moments I can imagine or ever endure were those of last autumn, when I was in difficulty about it. Would that this mood of happy satisfaction could be collected and preserved—but that is the worst of it; I know for certain that when the evil day comes again I shall have forgotten it all; and against it I know no safeguard, nor can you tell me of any.'

The Symphony seems to have been on the whole well received from the very first; indeed, by that time Mendelssohn was so widely known and so popular in London that his music had a double chance of success. The slow movement (like the Scherzo of the 'Reformation' symphony) was encored at the first performance, and often since. The Finale alone did not satisfy so universally. It was, however, after the death of Mendelssohn in 1847 that the work became a universal favourite. This no doubt arose from the fact that until then it remained unpublished. It is said that this was at Mendelssohn's own desire; that, with the fastidiousness implied in the letter just quoted, he was not quite satisfied with the Finale—wished to develop it more, to add a second episode (the Tarantella being the first) and to combine the two. In fact, a year before his death he sent for the piece with the view of making these and other alterations, and it was in his possession still unaltered when he died.

Among all Mendelssohn's works there is not one more characteristic than this Symphony, of that cheerful, sunshiny, happy disposition, which was even more remarkable than his genius. Well might he call it the gayest thing he had written. It is not only that there is not a dull bar in the work, there is a force of freshness and life, and of youth innocent without being weak, to which a parallel is to be found in his own G minor Pianoforte concerto, which indeed was the offspring of the same happy time of his life. The B flat Symphony of Beethoven—now known to be the pæan for his engagement to Countess Theresa Brunswick—in some respects resembles it, but the absolute youth, the extraordinary spring, the action for the mere sake of it, and because it can't be helped, is wanting even there. What a quality to possess! and how fortunate for him, and for us for whom he wrote, that Mendelssohn's circumstances were such as to put him above the reach of those sordid anxieties and cares which were such a clog on Mozart, Schubert, and Beethoven (which indeed broke off the engagement alluded to), and to enable him to indulge the hopes and aspirations of youth to the full extent to which his pure mind and loving spirit prompted.

It is curious to notice—as every little point about a great writer is interesting—what a dominion the key of A seems to have taken over Mendelssohn during his journey and stay in Italy. Three of his greatest works were planned or executed then, the 'Italian' and 'Scotch' symphonies and the 'Walpurgisnacht,' and of the three the first is in A major, and the last two in A minor.

Church and Organ Music.

AN INTERESTING BOOK.

To the goodly company of hymn-tuneologists must be added Mr. James T. Lightwood, the author of 'Hymn-tunes and their story' (Charles H. Kelly). Wisely avoiding the dry dissertational style, and telling his story in a pleasant, anecdotal manner, the newcomer has produced a volume of distinct value to the student of the subject, and, moreover, one that will be read with interest and pleasure by the general reader. While Mr. Lightwood generously acknowledges the labours of other workers in the same field, he gives many proofs of having been a diligent investigator himself. He says :

The information contained in these pages represents the result of many years' research. I have spent much time in the British Museum Reading Room, in the magnificent Dr. Henry Watson Library at Manchester, and in the various free libraries of the large towns, ever on the look out for old tune and psalmody books, ancient and modern. What has given me far greater enjoyment, however, has been to combine pleasure with research, and to go off on my bicycle to the villages and country districts, there to look up the oldest and most loquacious inhabitants, and hear from them their memories of the singing and the tunes of bygone days.

Here is enthusiasm of the right kind—painstaking and pleasure-getting information that is invaluable. No mere hack worker, this Lancashire bicycling hymn-tuneologist is to be commended for his investigating zeal, no less than for his narrative, so readably set forth in these four hundred pages.

Taking 'The German Chorale' as the foundation of his superstructure, Mr. Lightwood builds the first storey of his 'story' with 'The rise of modern psalmody,' and upon this he places 'The psalmody of the seventeenth century' (Chapter III.), an interesting period which saw the productions of Ravenscroft, Andro Hart, and other old-world psalmidists. One of these was George Wither, whose first book, 'Hymnes and Songs of the Church' (1624?) was enriched by the compositions of Orlando Gibbons, including the familiar tune known as 'Angels,' or 'Angels' song.' In the dedication of his book—'to the high and mighty Prince James, by the grace of God, King of Great Britaine'—Mr. Wither says : 'So I haue also labored to sute them [the hymns] to the nature of the subiet, and the common Peoples capacities without regard of catching the vaine blasts of Opinion. The same also hath bene the ayme of Master Orlando Gibbons (your Maiesties seruant, and one of the gentlemen of your Honourable Chappell) in fitting them with tunes.'

In 1643 Mr. Wither issued a hymnal for private use entitled :

Haleluiah, or Britains Second Remembrancer . . .
applied to easie Tunes to be Sung in Families.

In this 'Haleluiah' are to be found hymns suitable to be sung

When we put on our Apparel.
A hymne whilst we are washing.
When we enjoy the benefit of a fire.
Before we begin our work.
When we are at our labour.
When we put off our Apparel.
A Hymn for a House-warming.
For one whose Beautie is much praised.
For Lovers being constrained to be absent from each other.

For a Widower, or a Widow delivered from a troublesome Yoke-fellow.

For a Musician.

With withering irony the old psalmist adds above the last-named hymn :

Many Musicians are more out of order then their Instruments : such as are so, may by singing this Ode, become reprovers of their own untuneable affections.

Many of these hymns are assigned to one or other of the tunes from the psalter, e.g. :

Hymne xxix. When we Journey by Boat or Barge.
Sing this as the 4 Psalme.

Hymne xxviii. For a Widower, or a Widow delivered from a troublesome Yoke-fellow. *Sing this as the

The chapter on 'Psalmody in the eighteenth century' is no less ably treated, and special attention has been given to that rich store of hymn-tune lore—the Methodist revival of John and Charles Wesley. The agonising side of Christianity is exemplified in a hymn, which Wesley asked his followers to sing, of which the following is an extract, taken from 'Sacred Harmony' :

Fixt in . . my soul I feel . . Thy dart,
&c.
Groan, groan, groan - ing I feel it . . night . . and day.

assigned to a tune called 'Mourner's.' Sepulchral to a degree are the following lines, written by a 'so-called poet of small capabilities' :

Hark ! hark ! 'tis a voice from the tomb ;
Come, Lucy, it cries ; come away,
The grave of thy Colin has room
To rest thee beside his cold clay.

to which Lucy replies :

I come, my dear Shepherd, I come ;
Ye friends and companions, adieu !
I haste to my Colin's dark home
To die on his bosom so true.

Poor Lucy ! Mr. Lightwood tells us that 'this lugubrious ditty was set to music by Dr. Morgan, and the melody seems to have taken John Wesley's fancy ; for, in spite of the difference in metre, it was set to 'When I survey the wondrous Cross.' While in this interment region, reference may be made to a hymn-tune adaptation of the Dead March in 'Saul,' formerly associated with Dr. Watts's hymn, 'Hark ! from the tombs, a doleful sound.' If objection be raised to such a perversion of Handel's immortal strain, no one could question the appropriateness of the name of the tune : it is called 'Cemetery,' and marked to be sung Grave.

The tune 'Miles's Lane'—named after the little court still existent near London Bridge (on the north side) in which a Meeting House once stood—is so closely associated with Peronnet's hymn, 'All hail the power of Jesus' name,' that it may come as a surprise to learn that these words have been set many times and in many ways. Mr. Lightwood gives an example in a tune designated 'Coronation,' which appeared in 'Walker's Companion to Dr. Rippon's Tune Book' (circa 1820). It is there given anonymously, but the 'composer' must have been a deep-dyed Handelian. Here is the Coda :

And crown Him, crown crown Him Lord of all, Him Lord of all,

all, crown Him, crown
Lord of all, and crown Him Lord of all.
Him Lord of all, and crown Him Lord of all.

The remaining chapters of Mr. Lightwood's entertaining book include 'Some well-known eighteenth century' tunes; 'Some well-known composers'; 'A chat about old Methodist Tunes' (which contains much out-of-the-way information); 'The nineteenth century'; 'The names of tunes'; 'Adaptations and arrangements'; in addition to appendixes and indexes. As a sample of the kind of information herein set forth, we learn that Ewing's tune to 'Jerusalem the Golden' was originally in triple rhythm—we give the melody of the first four bars :

One of the most curious concoctions in the way of hymn-tune adaptations referred to in the book is that by John Bernard Sale (who ought to have known better) in his 'Psalms and Hymns for the Service of the Church.' As a fitting (or rather a misfitting) tune to the Easter Hymn, Mr. Sale dovetailed Beethoven's Romance in G (for violin) into portions of Handel's Hallelujah Chorus, with the following result :

(Melody and Bass only.)

Je - sus Christ is ris'n to - day, . . .
Hal - le - lu - jah! Hal - le - lu - jah! &c.

To quote further from Mr. Lightwood's companionable book—which will be of great use as a book of reference—would be unfair. Enough has been said to induce those who are interested in a subject that is by no means exhausted to peruse these pages, which may be done with profit and not a little enjoyment.

The Rev. Arnold Duncan Culley, who has been appointed Minor Canon and Precentor of Durham Cathedral, was a former Norfolk and Norwich Scholar at the Royal College of Music. After holding the organistships of St. Peter's Church, Hammersmith, and Christ Church, Surbiton, he became organist-scholar of Emmanuel College, Cambridge. Upon his ordination he held the curacy of the Chapel Royal, Brighton, and in 1897 was appointed Deputy Priest-Vicar of Exeter Cathedral, and three years later, sub-organist. The degrees and diplomas of Durham's new Precentor are B.A. and Mus. B. (1894), M.A. (1898), F.R.C.O. (1887) and A.R.C.M. (1889). At Exeter he conducted the Exeter Male-voice Choir, the Exeter Dramatic Society, and the Axe Vale Musical Society. Mr. Culley's published compositions include anthems, part-songs and songs.

Mr. Edwin H. Lemare is on his way, via America, to New Zealand, where he has been engaged by the Town Council of Wellington to give some recitals on the new organ which has recently been erected by Messrs. Norman & Beard. From New Zealand he will proceed to Melbourne to re-open the organ in the Town Hall and give twelve recitals. After visiting other towns in Australia, Mr. Lemare expects to return to England about October or November.

At the orchestral service held at Brixton Church on Sunday afternoon, March 4, Prof. Prout's new Orchestral Suite (for strings, clarinets and pianoforte) was produced. The pianoforte part was played by Mr. Welton Hickin, and Mr. Douglas Redman, organist of the church, conducted.

Mr. Robert Sharpe, organist and choirmaster of St. Mary's Church, Southampton, has recently been the gratified recipient of presentations from the rector and choir in commemoration of his twenty-five years' tenure of his office, and of the esteem in which he is held by his fellow-workers.

Dr. Warwick Jordan has just completed the fortieth year of his organistship of St. Stephen's Church, Lewisham, a length of service upon which he is to be warmly congratulated.

Handel's 'Passion of Christ' was sung at All Saints' Church, Hatcham Park, on Sunday, March 18, under the direction of the organist, Mr. C. T. Couch.

Dr. Herbert Brewer, organist of Gloucester Cathedral, has been elected an Honorary Member of the Royal Academy of Music.

Mr. Frederick J. Wagg, St. Paul's Parish Church, Camberley, Surrey.

Mr. Leonard Gowing, Deputy vicar-choral of St. Paul's Cathedral.

'BEAUTIES TRIUMPH' AT MR. PRIEST'S SCHOOL.

As a sidelight on the production of Purcell's 'Dido and Æneas' at Josias Priest's School at Chelsea, it is interesting to note, what appears so far to have been overlooked, that Purcell's opera was not the only musical work produced at the School. The British Museum contains a copy of a Masque, the words of which are by an obscure poet named Thomas Duffett (best known by his parody—'The Mock Tempest'—of the musical version of Shakespeare's play), the title-page of which is as follows:

BEAUTIES TRIUMPH; | a | Masque. | Presented by the Scholars of | Mr. Jeffery Banister, | and | Mr. James
Hart, | At their | New Boarding-School | for Young Ladies and Gentlemen, | kept in that House which was for- | merly Sir Arthur Gorges, | at Chelsey. |
Written by T. Duffett. | —tutus, et intra | Spem
venie cautus— | London, Printed in the year
MDCLXXVI. |

Mr. Randall Davies, in his excellent history of Chelsea Old Church (1904, p. 131), says that Gorge's House stood just behind what is now Lindsey Row, between Beaufort Street and Milman's Row. It was sold (probably in 1664) to William Morgan, whose son Richard Morgan, of Marlies, in Essex, sold it, with a close adjoining, to Josias Priest. Priest, as we know from his advertisement on November 25, 1680, moved in that year into 'the great School-House at Chelsey, that was Mr. Portman's,' but the title-page of Duffett's Masque shows that four years earlier the School must have been in existence and kept by Banister and Hart.

Jeffrey Banister, probably a relation of the more celebrated John Banister, was appointed a Musician-in-Ordinary to Charles II. on December 24, 1663, and in 1668 his name occurs in a list of the King's 'four and twenty fiddlers' under Grabu. James Hart, 'a base from Yorke,' as he is styled in the Cheque Book, was sworn in as a member of the Chapel Royal on November 7, 1670. He died, aged seventy-one, May 8, 1718, and was buried in the West Cloister of Westminster Abbey; in the latter part of his life he was a Gentleman of the Abbey Choir. He was the father of Philip Hart, a musician of some eminence in the 18th century, who successively held the posts of organist at St. Andrew Undershaft, St. Michael's, Cornhill, and St. Dionis Backchurch. Songs by James Hart are to be met with in several of Playford's publications ('The Banquet of Musick,' The Theater of Musick, &c.), and a curious glimpse of him is obtained in the correspondence between John Baynard and Dr. Holder (Sloane MSS. 1388), relating to the latter's 'Treatise on the Natural Grounds and Principles of Harmony' (1694). In a letter dated March 20, 1693, Baynard says:

Your Present [of a copy of the Treatise] will be ready for Mr. Hart . . . He is an honest, Ingenious man. I was formerly, pretty well acquainted with him, and learnt a while of him: But I found him wedded to Mr. Birchenshaw's notions; viz. That all Musical Whole notes are Equall; and no difference of Half notes from one another, and that the Diversitie of Keyes is no more then the Musical Pitch higher or lower, or will pass for that without any great Inconvenience: your book may doe him a kindness, and rectify those mistakes in him.

In a later letter Baynard says:

Mr. Hart takes it so kindly from you that you thought him worthy of one of your Books, that he is almost transported; and said he values it more than he would do a present of ten Guinies from any body else.

It would be interesting if the music to Duffett's Masque could be discovered. The libretto is not at all a bad piece of work, and is certainly superior to that which Nahum Tate provided for Purcell's production at the Chelsea School. So far, I have only succeeded in tracing the music of three numbers. These are:

(1.) A Two-part song 'Let's love and let's laugh,' by John Banister, printed in Book II. of Playford's 'Choice Ayres and Songs' (1679).

(2.) 'When Beauty, arm'd with smiling Eyes,' a song, also by John Banister, in Book I. of the 'Banquet of Musick' (1688).

(3.) An anonymous setting of 'To the Grove, gentle Love,' in the second edition of D'Urfey's 'Pills' (1707).

WM. BARCLAY SQUIRE.

At the Westmorland Musical Festival, to be held at Kendal, April 25-28, the following works are to be performed: 'The Sun Worshippers' (Goring Thomas), 'Ode to the North-east wind' (Cliffe), 'Rhapsodie' (Brahms), 'O Light Everlasting' (Bach), and 'Messiah.' These have all been diligently practised for months past by Mr. A. H. Willink, the honorary chorus-master of the Festival, which will be conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, and at which the Queen's Hall Orchestra will co-operate with the local combined choirs. The Princess Christian has not only given her patronage to the Festival, but has announced her intention of presenting the competition prizes on April 28.

Southport, following in the wake—may we not say the 'wide-a-wake'?—of Morecambe and Blackpool, has resolved to hold an annual musical festival of the competitive type. The initial experiment is to take place on July 6 and 7, with Dr. Varley Roberts and Dr. W. G. McNaught as adjudicators. There will be the usual competitions for all classes, vocal and instrumental, and the Honorary Secretary is Mr. Fred. W. Jackson, from whom copies of syllabus may be obtained upon application.

Reviews.

Grove's Dictionary of Music and Musicians. Edited by J. A. Fuller Maitland, M.A., F.S.A. Vol. II.

[Macmillan & Co., Ltd., 1906.]

English musicians may congratulate themselves that on the completion of this work they will be in possession of a musical dictionary superior to anything that has been attempted in any language. The work with which one naturally compares it is that known as Mendel's Conversations-Lexikon. This undoubtedly contains a larger amount of printed matter, the excess being mainly caused by the number of biographical articles, which in many cases will be found to be simply translations from the 'Biographie Universelle' of Fétis. The Dictionary of Riemann suffers from too great compression, while both these German works have a certain dryness from which the English volumes are happily free.

The real excellence of a work of reference can only be estimated by use, and this we claim to have given to the original edition. We fully recognize its many merits—its errors were mainly those of omission. In the new edition these have been rectified, and we have made a number of 'dives' with unvarying success. The difficulties of such a work are those of selection and proportion. The late Sir George Grove appears to have been too easy, and to have allowed certain of his contributors undue freedom. The present editor has succeeded in keeping his large body of contributors well in hand, at the same time allowing them ample scope where the subject demanded extended treatment. On a matter of relative importance no two opinions are likely to agree, but for ourselves we cannot help expressing the feeling that in many cases the notices of singers are treated with undue importance. The present volume extends from F to L, occupying nearly half as much space again as the original work, but this includes two long and important articles on Musical Histories and Libraries, which formerly found their place under M. The experience of indexers and cataloguers is that the letters A to K cover half the space in a work of this nature; we are a little puzzled therefore as to how it can be extended to five volumes as announced. We believe that the number of new or re-written articles amounts to over 450. But it is not by mere figures that its excellence can be estimated; the whole work appears to have been subjected to a thorough revision. It will be remembered that in the first edition, the year 1450 A.D. was given as the date of departure. This we thought at the time a wide limit, as ruling off much controversial matter, although we believe it was not strictly adhered to, for certainly an article on the system of notation invented by Hucbald found a place in the supplement. This limit is now tacitly abandoned, and we have an elaborate article on Greek music from the pen of Mr. H. S. Macran, with the addition of an excellent bibliography of the subject. Having adopted this new departure it is curious that the names neither of Alypius, Aristoxenus, nor Euclid occur in their alphabetical position, nor does the great guide of early musicians, Boethius, find a place. The medieval writers are now better treated. There is one trifling point in arrangement which may occasionally perplex those who consult it. In German names the modified vowel is treated as though the word was spelt out; for instance Gänsbacher precedes Garfori, as though it were written Gaensbacher. We are not saying that this is wrong. German practice seems to vary, but we think the British Museum rule of writing the name in full is the better plan, especially as the title of every article is printed in capitals.

In the quarter of a century which has elapsed since the previous edition many musicians have come to the front, while many others have been removed from active life. Of the former we have not detected any serious omissions. Among those whose loss we lament a foremost place of right belongs to the name of the late Sir George Grove, to whom the original conception of this work is due. Most of our readers will be acquainted with the delightful biography which Mr. C. L. Graves has written of that distinguished and versatile man. It was most fitting therefore that the notice should be entrusted to one so pre-eminently qualified. The result is a most happy appreciation of Sir George's labours.

Among the subjects which are now treated with more detail, is that of the English madrigal composers. Most of the articles on these musicians have been revised or re-written by Mr. G. E. P. Arkwright, whose labours in this department are well known, and coming to a slightly later date, he has thrown much light on the five members of the Ferrabosco family, the individual members of which it has always been so difficult to distinguish. Another branch of knowledge which was inadequately treated in the previous edition—that of the early English music printers—has now been undertaken by Mr. F. Kidson, whose knowledge of the subject is unrivalled. We are also indebted to him for an exhaustive bibliography added to the article on Irish Music. Questions of Ritual and early Church Music were treated at great length in the old edition by the late Mr. W. S. Rockstro. These we think have been somewhat cut down, while further matter has been supplied by the Rev. W. H. Frere, the principal editor of the Plain Song Society's publications. The descriptions of the various wind instruments have been revised and added to by the well-known authority Mr. D. J. Blaikley, and while the original article on fingering considered that of keyed instruments alone, there are now added elaborate articles on the fingering of stringed instruments by Mr. E. Krall, and of wind instruments from the pen of Mr. Blaikley.

We have already mentioned the articles on Musical Histories and Libraries. These have both been corrected and brought down to date. For the latter article, which is very comprehensive, we are indebted to Mr. W. Barclay Squire, with the exception of the portion referring to America, for which Mr. H. E. Krehbiel is answerable. It is pleasant to find the son and daughter of the late Sir John Stainer inheriting their father's zeal for music. They both contribute valuable matter, and Miss Stainer's article on Goudimel is of special interest. In the absence of any list of the articles written by the several contributors—this we have no right to expect until the completion of the work—it is somewhat laborious to trace them, but we have detected some excellent articles on Russian composers by Mrs. Newmarch. We are glad to find that the original notice of Hummel has been suppressed. The author of the present article, Mr. Duncan Hume, has a much fairer appreciation of Hummel's standing, and an adequate knowledge of his compositions. In the article on Leonardo Leo, Mr. E. J. Dent gives us the results of his original investigations into the music of that period, and what is of great value an extensive list of Leo's works. We ought also to mention the Rev. F. W. Galpin's article on the Water Organ (Hydraulus). The subject has been such a bone of contention that one hesitates to commit oneself to any opinion on it, but at least Mr. Galpin succeeded in making a working model, which many of us have heard, on the principles which he has adopted.

We have named a few only of the more prominent additions. The list might be indefinitely extended, but space runs short. What has always struck us is the eminently readable character of the work. Open it where you will, you at once become interested, and will shut it with regret. This is a quality which the German writer with all his accuracy and learning seems unable to acquire. For example, one lights on the article 'Gymnastics'—a word it would hardly occur to one to look for—to find a most interesting article by the editor on the mechanical means of training the hand. This involves an account of J. B. Logier and his famous chiroplast, and details of the controversy which convulsed the musical profession. We are then led on to Schumann's unfortunate attempt to obtain independence of the finger, and a description of the Digitarium and the Virgil Practice Clavier. Another unexpected but most welcome article is that on Hickford's Room by Mrs. Harrison, the details of which must have cost enormous research in collection. The result is virtually a history of a very little known period of musical life in London, for which we are grateful.

PART-MUSIC FOR MALE VOICES.

The phantom host. Choral ballad for men's voices. English words by the Rev. Canon Gorton. Music by Friedrich Hegar. (Op. 17.)

As torrents in Summer. Words by Longfellow. Music by Edward Elgar.

To Celia. Words by William Whitehead. Music by C. Lee Williams.

Give a man a horse he can ride. Words by James Thomson. Music by C. Harford Lloyd.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

A gruesome story is related in 'The phantom host.' In January, 1719, the Swedish General Armfield started to march from Norway to Sweden with ten thousand men. The way lay across the Tydal mountains, and the cold was so intense that only 500 men reached the country of their destination. The ballad tells how the soldiers staggered and fell on the icy earth and 'died where they fell, one by one,' and how 'The wild beasts gather from cavern to wood,

Awaiting that haggard band.'

The tragic intensity of the poem has been realised by the composer, who has treated it dramatically and, be it added, in a manner that demands real dramatic perception from the singers. Under such conditions the little work would prove very effective, for the part-writing is well laid out for the voices and the harmonic scheme is well considered.

'As torrents in Summer' is an arrangement for men's voices of the four-part chorus in Sir Edward Elgar's cantata 'King Olaf.' In its new form it will doubtless be welcome to male-voice choirs, for it is most excellent music.

How many composers have set William Whitehead's piquant lines? It would be difficult to answer that question, but Mr. C. Lee Williams's 'To Celia' (Je ne sais quoi), may be ranked with the best achievements. The humorous spirit of the song is immediately suggested by the opening phrase, 'Yes, I'm in love,' being declaimed in unison fortissimo, and contrasted by the soft, confidential delivery of the third line beginning 'And yet I'll swear.' The meditative sentences are treated with equal happiness, being made to provide effective contrasts. In truth, 'To Celia' is a right merry ditty.

The manly and romantic sentiment of James Thomson's lines 'Give a man a horse he can ride' have been allied to bold and breezy music by Dr. Harford Lloyd, and the little work, if sung with due spirit, cannot fail to have an exhilarating effect on an audience and, indeed, upon the interpreters of these attractive strains.

The Erl-King. English words by Sir Walter Scott. Set to music for chorus and orchestra by H. M. Higgs.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. H. M. Higgs's setting of Goethe's familiar poem may be warmly recommended to amateur choral societies, both small and great. The poetic atmosphere of the ballad is cleverly suggested in an instrumental introduction, which may be said to represent the gloom of the forest and its supernatural visitants, also the storm through which the father rides with his sick child. The vocal part is commenced by the tenors and basses, singing in four parts. The words of the child are given throughout the poem to the female voices, and the sentences of the malignant phantom to the tenors and basses, while to the full choir is entrusted the narrative portions. By this means, no less than by adept characterization in the music, interesting variety and effective contrasts are obtained. The valuable aid to continuity supplied by the rhythm of the galloping horse is made to contribute to the dramatic element, and many deft touches testify to the composer's skilled musicianship.

Obituary.

Russian music has sustained a loss by the recent death of ANTONY STEPANOVICH ARENSKY, at the early age of forty-five. Born at Novgorod on July 31, 1861, he studied harmony and composition with Zikke, and subsequently with Rimsky-Korsakov at the St. Petersburg Conservatorium. Appointed professor of harmony and counterpoint at the Moscow Conservatorium in 1882, Arensky subsequently became a member of the Council of the Synodal School of Church Music in that city, and for seven years conducted the Russian Choral Society there. From 1894 to 1901 he held the directorship of the Imperial Chapel at St. Petersburg. He composed three operas, 'A dream on the Volga' (1890); 'Raphael' (1894); and 'Nal and Damayanti' (1899); and two Symphonies, in B minor (Op. 4) and A minor (Op. 22). In England Arensky is best known by his songs and piano-forte pieces, and especially by his Pianoforte trio in D minor (Op. 32), a work charged with deep feeling and dedicated to the memory of Charles Davidoff, the eminent violoncellist, who died at Moscow in 1889. To the theoretical literature of music Arensky contributed a treatise on Harmony and one on Form in vocal and instrumental music.

We record with regret the death of Mr. WILLIAM WEST, which took place on January 24, at 119, Bethune Road, Stamford Hill, aged seventy-five years. A much esteemed professor of music and founder (in 1863) of the North-east London Academy of Music, Mr. West was the father of Mr. John E. West.

Mr. ALFRED J. SUTTON, the doyen of the musical profession in Birmingham, died on February 17, in his seventy-ninth year. He was conductor of the Amateur Harmonic Association from its formation in 1855 to 1877, and for eighteen years he was joint chorus-master with Mr. Stockley to the Birmingham Triennial Festivals. Mr. Sutton was also known as a composer. His widow, formerly a popular soprano singer, took part for many years in the concerted music in 'Eljah,' and other works at the Birmingham Musical Festivals.

The death of Mr. CHARLES LUNN took place on February 28. His speciality was the voice, a subject upon which he was a prolific and strenuous writer, his principal work being 'The philosophy of the voice,' which first appeared in 1874. Mr. Charles Lunn, who was a brother of the late Rev. J. R. Lunn, was born on January 5, 1838, at Birmingham, where he continued to reside till he removed to London in 1895, where he died.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

SIR,—It was with much astonishment that I read in your issue of December last a letter signed 'One who would assist,' in which, while deploring the lack of music teachers in this State, the writer endeavoured to urge teachers to come out here to the Eastern goldfields for the practice of their profession. Much of the information contained in the letter was to a great extent misleading, and I think it would be just as well if some of the statements were corrected.

Your correspondent says that no capable teacher of singing is to be found in this State. Apparently he (?) has either never taken the trouble to inquire for them, or he is ignorant of the qualifications necessary to teachers of voice culture. Perhaps the goldfields are not so well supplied as Perth; but at present there are several good teachers at Kalgoorlie and Boulder City. The reason there are not so many is easily explained. On account of the extremely trying climate, a great number of the children are sent away to Perth or to the other States to be educated, and in the case of the adult population, like that of most gold-mining centres, it is always, more or less, on the move.

As to the statement that a good man might make easily £500 to £800 a year, that is quite absurd, £300 to £400 being quite a large income for a teacher. Besides, the cost of living on the goldfields is something enormous—fully three times as much as in Perth, where living is more expensive than in the other States.

I enclose a cutting from one of the leading dailies here, and this, perhaps, may induce anyone who has been carried away by the couleur de rose prospects set forth by 'One who would assist' to carefully consider all sides of the question before making up his mind to run the risk of making a start on the fields. One other thing which would well-nigh break the heart of an English musician is the standard of music there, classical or high-class music scarcely ever finding a hearing, except among a few of the more accomplished people, the majority certainly preferring the musical comedy song or the coon ditty.

Trusting you may find room for this letter in your widely-read columns, Perth, West Australia. I am, yours truly, RUBATO.

[The cutting above referred to is contained in the Morning Herald of January 13, under the heading 'Music and the drama,' and reads as follows—ED. M.T.]:

It would appear that some of the residents of this State, in spite of their apparently musical proclivities, are most remarkably and lamentably ignorant as to the standard of musical instruction imparted here. Even a slight knowledge of the results of the examinations held annually might be accepted as proof that good, sound work is being carried on, for it is extremely unlikely that any privileges would be extended to candidates in this State in preference to others.

THE CHURCH MUSIC SOCIETY.

The Church Music Society was formally constituted at a meeting held at the Church House on March 20, under the presidency of Mr. W. H. Hadow. The Chairman, in his opening remarks, said that the objects of the Society are (1) to collect and reprint in a cheap form the best of those anthems and services which are at present not readily accessible; (2) to prepare classified lists of the best ecclesiastical compositions, arranged according to their difficulty and their suitability to various occasions; (3) to furnish, when asked, such information as may be needed on questions of selection or performance. The Society does not intend to impose any opinion or to show partisanship for any particular school, or century, or style: its whole object is to gather the best ecclesiastical music of all styles and to make it available for different uses and for different kinds of choir. Its range will include the simplest as well as the most complex works, old as well as new, familiar as well as unknown, and it is hoped that the collection when completed will form a corpus of our best church compositions which all may consult who will. Works for which sufficient provision has been made already will, of course, be included in the lists, with a statement showing where they are published and at what price they can be obtained.

Earl Beauchamp proposed and the Bishop of Bristol seconded the election of the Bishop of Winchester as President, and an executive committee was appointed to carry out the work for the first year. The six elected members of the committee are: Dr. H. P. Allen, Dr. P. C. Buck, Dr. H. Walford Davies, Mr. J. A. Fuller Maitland, Dr. C. W. Pearce and Mr. W. H. Hadow (Chairman), with instructions to elect six more members who shall be as widely representative as possible of the different interests involved.

The constitution of the Society was then agreed to. It includes three classes of members: (1) Life members, who give a donation of not less than £5; (2) Subscribing members, who pay a subscription of 5s. per annum; (3) Acting members, consisting of precentors, incumbents, organists, choirmasters, and all who are responsibly engaged in the practice of church music—who may be admitted to membership without payment of any donation or subscription. All three classes of members will have the privilege of purchasing the publications of the Society at a reduced rate.

Miss Gregory, the Deanery, St. Paul's, E.C., and the Lady Mary Forbes Trefusis, 68, Chester Square, S.W., are the secretaries of the Society.

MR. GATTY'S 'GREYSTEEL.'

(BY OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

The most important event in the 'University Opera Week' at Sheffield, under the management of the Moody-Manners Opera Company, which lasted from February 26 to March 4, was the first production on any stage of a one-act opera by Mr. Nicholas Gatty, to a libretto by his brother, Mr. R. Gatty, the full title of which is 'Greysteel; or, the Baresarks come to Surnadale.' This was given on March 1, at a matinée, and the programme was filled out with a performance of Gounod's 'Philemon et Baucis.' The new opera, although it is in a single act, is of no slight importance whether dramatically or musically. The plot is derived from Dasent's translation of the Icelandic saga, 'Gisli the Soursop,' and tells how Ingibjorga, the wife of Ari, son of Thorkel, was beloved by her husband's brother, Gisli; her thrall, Kol, is the possessor, or keeper, of a magic sword forged by dwarfs, and called 'Greysteel'; but when Ari has to defend his house and his wife from the onslaught of the chief of the Baresarks, Bjorn the Black, he refuses to take with him the sword which Kol rather reluctantly offers, and is accordingly slain by Bjorn. From Kol's reluctance to offer him the sword, from Ari's admission that his object in consenting to fight single-handed is rather to enhance his own reputation than to ensure his wife's security, and from other hints, we gather that the marriage is a loveless one, and so we are prepared to sympathize with Gisli, who has a long and very elaborate solo on returning to the home of his forefathers. At the end of this there is rather a curious episode, in a scene in which Ingibjorga artfully finds out the secret of his love, and then turns upon him as a traitor to his brother. Soon afterwards Ari's dead body is carried in, and Gisli apostrophizes it with vows of vengeance against his slayer. This nobility of soul moves Ingibjorga to confess her love for Gisli over Ari's corpse, and as the custom of the time directs that a dead man's chattels are to pass to his next of kin, the way to the union of the lovers is made plain; Kol is delighted to lend 'Greysteel' to Gisli, who kills Bjorn with it, and wins Ingibjorga for his wife.

The story is carried on in a kind of alliterative verse nearly akin to the stabsrim in which the Wagnerian trilogy is written; as the characters wear the costumes associated in most people's minds with the personages of the 'Nibelungen,' it is inevitable that some of the less discerning judges should be ready to label the music as an imitation of Wagner. Nothing could well be further from the truth; Mr. Gatty is a man of his age, and he scores for a big orchestra, not disdaining to tread those paths of dramatic verisimilitude, orchestral richness, and declamatory writing for the voice, which Wagner was the first in modern times to clear. But neither in the cast of his melodies, nor in the way they are treated, is there anything derived from Wagner. His power of developing his themes (such as the beautiful and taking phrase identified with the sword) is derived far more surely from the classical masters than from Wagner, and though very few modern writers for the stage, except Wagner, have contrived to exercise so much power of building up great climaxes and to foresee the end of a scene from its beginning, yet Mr. Gatty's way of getting a culminating effect is quite different from Wagner's, and far more like Sir Hubert Parry's. Mr. Gatty writes for the stage with wonderful ease and certainty of effect, and all his great moments 'come off,' and hold the audience intensely interested in the story, although the story in itself is perhaps not the most interesting that could be imagined, as well as being a little deficient in conciseness. The charming song in which Kol, the thrall, reveals himself as the faithful dependant and the eager guardian of the sword, is worked up to a fine ending; but better still is the sustained interest of the long song for tenor solo, in which Gisli enters and declares to the audience his love for Ingibjorga. This is by no means easy to sing, but is masterly in design, and very surprising in cumulative effect. It is the sort of scena in which Jean de Reszke would have made a thrilling impression. Both these characters are finely individualized, and so also is Ingibjorga, whose utterance of a kind of dirge over her husband's body is a very fine moment; she enlists our sympathies from the beginning, and holds them to the end. The masterly orchestration of the whole, and particularly the noble funeral march, in which two tubas are employed, deserves mention.

The whole performance, under the direction of Mr. Harrison Frewin, reached a remarkably high standard of excellence, but the chief success was made in the character of Ingibjorga by Miss Enriqueta Crichton, who displayed great dramatic power, strong individuality, and very considerable vocal skill; with more experience in this trying style of music she will learn to avoid the easily pardonable defect of giving herself away in the earlier scenes, and so being obviously a little too tired at the end to give the full effect to the music. She was a most picturesque figure, and her gestures were always graceful and appropriate. Gisli was well played by Mr. Charles Carter, a young tenor of remarkable ability, whose voice was well suited in the music. Mr. Marshall Vincent brought out all the subtlety of the part of Kol, and the parts of Ari and Bjorn were quite adequately filled by Messrs. H. van Lachterop and George Neilson. The chorus, made up of the choirs of the 'A' and 'B' companies combined, were remarkably good, and the stage-management, though not perfect, was creditable. The success of the opera was unequivocal, the composer being called before the curtain at the close and warmly applauded.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Gounod's sacred trilogy 'The Redemption' was performed at the Royal Albert Hall on Ash Wednesday, February 28. The choruses were finely sung by the Society under the direction of Sir Frederick Bridge, the number 'From Thy love as a Father,' in which Miss Agnes Nicholls was the soloist, in particular being impressively rendered. The remaining soloists were Miss Edith Patching, Miss Alice Lakin, and Messrs. John Coates, Daniel Price and F. B. Ranalow. Mr. H. L. Balfour presided at the organ with his customary skill and judgment.

The first performance of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' at the Royal Albert Hall attracted a large audience on March 22. The size of the building militates against the subtleties of the work making their full effect, but on the other hand the broadly designed choruses acquired additional force and grandeur by the volume of tone engendered by so large a force of executants, and the refinement of the choral singing imparted peculiar impressiveness to soft and mystical passages. The soloists were Madame Kirkby Lunn, Mr. William Green and Mr. Frangcon-Davies, on whose singing it is unnecessary to comment. Sir Frederick Bridge conducted, and is to be warmly congratulated upon so effective an interpretation of this exacting work.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The first concert of the ninety-fourth year of the Society's existence brought forth a quasi-novelty in the Symphony in G (Op. 23) by Herr Felix Weingartner, who conducted it. The work is clear and concise in its thematic material and development, its most attractive features being a dainty Vivace scherzoso, charmingly scored, and an Allegro vivo (the last movement) most exhilarating in its verve and brightness. The symphony and the conductor-composer were very warmly received. Two overtures, 'Macbeth' (Sullivan) and 'Husitská' (Dvořák), completed the purely orchestral features of the programme. Madame Teresa Carreño gave a magnificent interpretation of Rubinstein's Pianoforte concerto in D minor, in addition to playing a group of Chopin pieces with infinite charm; Mr. Frederic Austin sang 'Wotan's Abschied und Feuerzauber' from 'Die Walküre.'

Brahms's C minor Symphony and Sir Charles Stanford's second 'Irish Rhapsody' were included in the programme of the second concert, at which Mr. Emil Sauer gave a brilliant rendering of Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in E flat. The vocalist was Miss Marie Brema, who sang the closing scene from 'Götterdämmerung.' Dr. Frederic Cowen conducted, with his well-known resourcefulness, both concerts, which took place on February 27 and March 15 respectively at Queen's Hall. The analytical programmes of these concerts, which, since the season of 1885 have been contributed by Mr. Joseph Bennett, are now written by Mr. F. Gilbert Webb and Mr. Edgar F. Jacques.

The first appearance in London of Mons. Wassily Safonoff was looked forward to with considerable interest, and some misgiving as to whether his method of conducting without a baton was a pose intended for effect on the audience. But all doubts on this point were agreeably dispelled after the exceptionally brilliant performance of the 'Leonora' overture No. 3, which commenced the programme. It was clear that Mons. Safonoff had fine conceptions, and that he had the power to impose his ideas on the plastic material before him. The orchestra seemed to glow with enthusiasm and to be held literally in the hollow of the conductor's hands, a venerable remark that may be very appropriately used in this connection. Of the delightful performance of Mozart's Serenade for strings we write elsewhere (see p. 242). The Symphony was played with almost overpowering effect. Mons. Safonoff seemed to be in entire sympathy with this truly magnificent work. It is not always safe to compare performances, but we think we are justified in saying that this performance was the most impressive that has been heard in London. Whether Mons. Safonoff's plan of conducting would do for all sorts and conditions of orchestras is doubtful. There was seldom any distinct indication of the pulsation so necessary to note when players count time, but rather a highly suggestive treatment of the phrase. M. Léon Delafosse gave a good performance of the Polonaise. The concert took place at Queen's Hall on February 22.

Taillefer (Ballad by Ludwig Uhland), for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra (Op. 52) .. .. .	Strauss.
(First performance in London.)
Choral Symphony .. .. .	Beethoven.

The fact that all tickets for this concert were sold a week before the event proved the interest taken by the public in the enterprise shown by the Queen's Hall Orchestra managers in bringing the Leeds Choral Union to London. This choir enjoys a great reputation, and now that it is trained by Dr. Coward it may be able to beat its own record. At the performance under notice the chief characteristics exhibited were the fine resonant tone, the unity and certainty of the execution, and the delicacy and force of the expression. There was, perhaps, hardly the rhythmic elasticity, high colour, and exciting intensity of expression which have earned the Sheffield choir its prominence, but this comparison implies no inferiority. Brahms's work was conducted by Dr. Coward, who secured a good all-round performance.

Taillefer was conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood. It can scarcely be said to have made a deep impression, although the execution of the work was often magnificent. Whether passages that seem dull and inconsequent are so because of the limitations of the listener rather than of the work it is hard to say. That there are flashes of inspiration in the music is undeniable, but we cannot help thinking that audiences will have to be educated a good deal before they can frankly appreciate this specimen of the Strauss idiom.

The ninth Symphony, which was also conducted by Mr. Wood, was well performed, but without special distinction. The first movement lacked spirituality and was almost uninteresting. There seemed to be some lack of unity, which may have arisen from the fact that the members of the Orchestra were rather straggled out of their accustomed places to make room for the choir. But the Scherzo was brilliantly performed, and the choir in the final movement sang splendidly. The soloists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Jessie Goldsack, Mr. Henry Turnpenney and Mr. Montague Borwell.

The image displays a page from a musical score for a piece titled "The Slave's Song." The score is written for four vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, and Bass) and a piano accompaniment. The key signature is one sharp (F#), and the time signature is common time (C). The vocal parts are arranged in four staves, each with a treble clef. The piano accompaniment is shown in a grand staff at the bottom, consisting of a treble and bass clef. The lyrics, "sa - cred laws af - ford," are written below the vocal staves. The score includes dynamic markings such as "dim. e rall." (diminuendo and rallentando) and phrasing slurs. The piano part features complex chordal textures and arpeggiated figures.

ALEXANDRA PALACE CHORAL SOCIETY.

'THE APOSTLES.'

This Society continues to flourish under the directorship of Mr. Allen Gill. It has become now an important factor in the musical life of the metropolis. It is boldly and ably managed, and as a consequence has attracted the cream of North London chorists. A curious newspaper-born convention regards Muswell Hill as not London proper, and so what goes on there is stamped as suburban, and consequently as necessarily not important. Yet for millions of Londoners it is easier to reach the Alexandra Palace than it is the Albert Hall. The most recent achievement of this Choral Society was a performance of Elgar's great work 'The Apostles,' which was given on March 10. The interest excited may be measured from the fact that the audience numbered 4,000 persons. The choir sang remarkably well, notwithstanding that this was their first attempt at the work. Some of the effects were imposing—the opening chorus especially—but the last part of the work was apparently not so well known. Choralists generally are not yet accustomed to Elgar's peculiar style of treating the chorus, and probably it will be some years before they can be expected to sing such music as freely as they now sing the works of Handel and Mendelssohn.

The band was large and fairly competent, if not first-rate. It consists to a considerable extent of amateurs, stiffened by the best professionals. That a band so constituted could perform this difficult work so highly creditably was proof of its general competence. The best soloists were engaged. Mr. John Coates sang the part of St. John with fine expression, and Mr. Charles Knowles, whose fine bass voice is now becoming familiar to choral society audiences all over the country, was a dramatic and fervent Judas. Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies took his usual part with his usual success, and Miss Alice Lakin and Miss Ethel Lister also did very well. To many who desire to see native conductors dealing adequately with large resources and complicated art works, the success of Mr. Allen Gill was one of the most satisfactory features of this performance.

TWENTIETH CENTURY MUSIC.

The programme of Miss Mary Cracroft's concert, which took place on February 24 at Æolian Hall, was thoroughly up-to-date, consisting as it did of 20th century compositions. There are, on the other hand, some concert-givers who entirely favour old music, but either extreme should be avoided; medio tutissimus ibis, wisely remarked Ovid. Then, apart from such consideration, it is difficult to hear a number of new songs and pieces and form a definite opinion as to their value. First impressions can, however, be recorded. After two characteristic lieder by Richard Strauss came a Sonata in D minor (Op. 22) for violoncello and pianoforte by Ludwig Thuille, composer of the opera 'Lobentanz'; the thematic material and the workmanship were good, yet the music on the whole appeared laboured. There were three songs and three pianoforte solos by Debussy, the French composer, whose music, since the production of his 'Pelléas et Mélisande' at Paris in 1902, has attracted considerable attention and also provoked no little discussion. The songs and pianoforte solos heard at the concert in question all strike one as often peculiar, and, especially the pianoforte pieces, extravagant, and yet they are sufficiently interesting to induce one to make further acquaintance with the composer. Some Preludes for pianoforte by Rachmaninoff proved effective rather than original. The artists were Miss Mary Cracroft, herself a clever pianist, Mr. Carl Fuchs, a good violoncellist, and the vocalists Miss Gladys Horsford and M. Carlos Ronzevalle, who deserve commendation. The accompanist was Mr. W. G. Spencer.

Mr. Isador Epstein created a favourable impression at his pianoforte recital on March 8 at Æolian Hall. In fortissimo passages he sometimes overstruck his instrument, and his phrasing at such times was more excited than clear, but his playing possessed significance, and he seemed to be thinking in the mood of the music he played.

MR. CHARLES WILLIAMS'S CONCERTS.

At the two orchestral concerts conducted by this estimable musician, he had the invaluable co-operation of the London Symphony Orchestra, and on each occasion unhackneyed programmes were presented. On February 26 an admirable performance of Brahms's Symphony in F was secured, and Mr. Jasper Sutcliffe played the violin solo part of Joachim's 'Hungarian' concerto with conspicuous skill and artistic feeling. The remainder of the selection consisted of Elgar's 'Introduction and Allegro for Strings' (Op. 47)—a work that greatly improves with more intimate acquaintance—and the pleasing 'Rondo' from Brahms's 'Serenade' (Op. 16).

On March 12 the concert opened with Mr. W. Y. Hurlestone's 'Fantasie Variations on a Swedish Air,' a work completed in August, 1903. In common with modern practice, Mr. Hurlestone endeavours to palliate the sharp divisions of variation form, and with this end in view has made each variation, with one or two exceptions, to lead into its successor. The composer has also written an introduction, phrases from which are used in the variations, thereby contributing to effect of continuity. The 'Swedish Air' is taken from Chorley's book on 'National Music,' and is a charming melody. Lively perception of contrast is shown both in the form of the variations and in their scoring, and in its entirety the composition adds to the reputation this young composer has already acquired.

CREATORE AND HIS BAND.

Preceded by reports of sensational character, Signor Creatore and his band made their first appearance in London on March 3 at Queen's Hall. The constitution of this organization, consisting of about sixty instrumentalists, is similar to that of Sousa's band, but the playing was more mobile. The chief feature of the performances, however, was the energetic and at times ludicrously exaggerated gestures of Signor Creatore, who walked about in a semicircular space in front of the band, gesticulating with an energy that suggested the most violent excitement. In consequence the readings of important works, although showing perception of their spirit and character, were for the most part exaggerated in accent, emphasis and tempo, slow movements being taken at funeral pace and quick ones at reckless speed. The chief aim indeed of the interpretations seemed to be to appeal to the physical rather than to the intellectual, and it must be admitted that Signor Creatore provided Londoners with a new thrill.

Record is due of the first performances—on February 26, at Æolian Hall—of a Sonata in F, No. 2, for viola and pianoforte, a Caprice for pianoforte solo, and a Duet for viola and organ, composed by Mr. York Bowen. The composer presided at the pianoforte, and the viola was played by Mr. Lionel Tertis. All the works show a lively imagination, combined with melodic invention and excellent musicianship.

Two commendable chamber concerts were given by the 'Norah Clench' Quartet respectively on March 5 and 19, the selection on the former occasion including Stanford's Pianoforte quintet in D minor (Op. 25), and Glazounow's 'Quatuor Slave' in G (Op. 26). The programme for March 19 contained (by request) Hugo Wolf's Quartet in D minor.

Amongst the number of recitals in the past month, very pleasant recollections remain of that given by the Misses Carmela and Grazia Carbone, on March 9, at Æolian Hall. The former is gifted with a soprano and the latter with a contralto voice, each of rich quality and manifestly allied with a musical temperament. Miss Grazia's organ is remarkably rich and noble in tone, and her interpretations were distinguished by dignity and sympathetic sensitiveness. The sisters also sang duets with admirable precision and great charm. Mr. Francis Macmillen contributed several violin pieces, thereby enhancing the pleasure of the afternoon.

Miss Ester de Munsterhjelm, a Finnish soprano, sang pleasingly at her first recital in London on March 13 at Æolian Hall. Chief interest in her selection centred in a group of Finnish songs by Jean Sibelius, Merikanto and Farnefelt. These proved Swedish in idiom and simple and direct in expression, and were charmingly sung by the fair vocalist.

Miss Norah Drewett may be said to have increased her reputation as a pianist by her highly intelligent playing at her recital, on March 15, at Bechstein Hall. Her selection included César Franck's Prelude, Choral and Fugue, Beethoven's Thirty-two Variations, and Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques. The young artist's interpretations of these and other works were admirably conceived and brilliantly executed.

Herr Emil Sauer's pianoforte recital at Queen's Hall on March 19 included beautifully finished interpretations of Beethoven's Sonata (Op. 109), Schumann's Toccata (Op. 7), and Chopin's Fantasia (Op. 49). A startling incident in the afternoon was the invasion of the platform by an old gentleman who, walking up to Herr Sauer, solemnly shook him by the hand, much to the pianist's astonishment. Having accomplished his purpose the admirer quietly left the hall.

Dr. Theo. Lierhammer included a considerable number of new German songs at his recital, on March 20, at Æolian Hall. Amongst the most pleasing were 'Nachtgebet,' by Eduard Boehm; 'Es ist ein hold Gewimmel,' by Hugo Kann; 'Abendwolke,' by Siegmund von Hausegger, and a merry little ditty called 'Das Kätzchen,' by Ernst Boehe. Of two songs from the pen of Max Reger, that entitled 'Waldeinsamkeit' was the most acceptable.

Miss Theodora Macalaster gave much pleasure at her vocal recital, held at Steinway Hall on March 21. The possessor of a well-trained and tuneful voice, Miss Macalaster gave abundant proof of her cultured versatility in the choice of her songs, sung in their original languages, by English, French, German and Italian composers. In the artistic interpretation of these she achieved special success, and in a pleasing song-cycle composed by Mr. Richard H. Walthew, and entitled 'The girl in the garden.' The enjoyment of the evening's music was enhanced by the violin and pianoforte playing of Miss Ethel Wilson and the singing of Mr. William Forington, while Mrs. Valentine rendered good service in the capacity of accompanist.

So much interest has been aroused by Mr. Cyril Scott's compositions, that his concert devoted to his own creations at Bechstein Hall, on March 22, deserves notice. It opened with a Sextet (Op. 26) for pianoforte and strings, a work conceived in an orchestral spirit and possessing a certain distinction, but marred by want of contrast, not only between its three movements but also in the part writing. The composer, who played the pianoforte part in his Sextet, performed several short pianoforte pieces. Miss Edith Clegg and Mr. Gervase Elwes sang a number of the talented young musician's songs, which proved to be the most acceptable of his efforts, those entitled 'Sorrow,' 'Picnic,' and 'Waiting' possessing originality and charm. Of the pianoforte pieces the most attractive was 'Asphodel,' a graceful and poetical trifle played on this occasion for the 'first time.'

The following performances merit record:—The chamber concert by the Berlin Philharmonic Trio, March 3, Bechstein Hall. The Misses Ruth and Margaret Clarkson's violin and pianoforte recital, March 6, Æolian Hall. Miss Fanny Davies and Mr. Walter Ford's recital, March 9, Steinway Hall, for the benefit of the new Chamber-music Club. Miss Georgina Axton's concert, at which the Scotch violinist, Mr. John Dunn, made his reappearance in London, Æolian Hall, March 12. Miss Elsie Playfair's violin recital, Æolian Hall, March 12. Mr. Frederic Hosking's vocal recital, March 13, Æolian Hall. Miss Margaret Kingsford's concert, March 17, Æolian Hall. Miss Ada D. Hatchmell's Australian concert, March 22, Steinway Hall.

Suburban Concerts.

An interesting performance of Purcell's 'King Arthur' music was given in the Bermondsey Settlement Lecture Hall on February 24, when the solo vocalists were Miss Lilian Pigott, Miss E. Knight, Miss Lilian Sweeting, Mr. Fred Norcup and Mr. Bertram Mills. Mr. John E. Borland conducted.

The first concert of the Stroud Green Choral Society took place in the Hanley Hall, Crouch Hill, on February 26, when Stainer's cantata 'The Daughter of Jairus' and Stanford's 'The Revenge' were successfully performed. The solo vocalists were Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Wilfrid Lawrence, and Mr. G. Heath Robinson. The accompaniments were played on the pianoforte and Mustel organ by Mr. Charles Warner and Mr. Phil Davis respectively. Mr. H. J. Timothy conducted.

The West Ham Choral Society, under the direction of Mr. W. Harding Bonner, performed Elgar's 'King Olaf' in the Town Hall, Stratford, on March 3. The choir and orchestra numbered 130 performers, and the solo vocalists were Miss Edith Evans, Mr. Henry Turnpenney, and Mr. Arthur Walenn.

An interesting concert was given at the Crystal Palace on the evening of March 3 by the Dulwich Philharmonic Society. The first part of the programme was devoted to Handel's 'Acis and Galatea,' the solo parts being worthily sustained by Miss Kate Cherry, Mr. Whitworth Mitton, and Mr. Charles Bennett, the last-named artist deserving special praise for his admirable singing of the part of Polyphemus. The second part included an arrangement for chorus and orchestra of eight folk-songs of the sea, under the title of 'The Old Sea Chanties,' arranged by Mr. John Bradford and Mr. Arthur Fagge. The choir sang with spirit and enthusiasm, and Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted.

The fifth concert of the Blackheath Conservatoire of Music took place on March 20, when Elgar's 'King Olaf' and Cowen's 'John Gilpin' were performed. The vocalists in 'King Olaf' were Madame Sobrino, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. Frederic Austin. The band (led by Mr. G. H. Wilby) and chorus numbered 250. Mr. Alfred Burnett conducted.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, March 15, 1906.

Chamber music of marked interest has recently been given here. Messrs. Robert Fuchs and Hermann Grädener, both well-known and highly esteemed professors at the Conservatorium, came forward as composers at a concert given by the Röger-Soldat Quartet. Herr Fuchs was represented by a Violin sonata in E, a work of refined, graceful and joyous character, and Herr Hermann by an impassioned Quartet in D minor. Two guests also appeared as composers: Prof. Julius Klengel, from Leipzig—renowned throughout Germany both as composer and performer—displayed wonderful mastery of his instrument in two concertos, and he also played some of his own compositions, among which was a Concerto in D major; while Prof. Gustav Jenner, from Marburg, produced two ably-written pieces of his own, a Violin concerto in E flat and a Pianoforte quartet in F, in addition to a Notturmo, a setting of a Rückert poem for voice with accompaniment for pianoforte, violin and viola, an original work full of poetry and beauty. Debussy's Quartet in G minor—a peculiar rather than pleasing, and yet interesting work—was introduced to us by the Brussels Quartet, while their rendering of some of Beethoven's quartets excited great enthusiasm.

The Society of Composers brought forward a chamber symphony by Wolff Ferrari, the composer of the much-discussed opera 'Die neugierigen Frauen,' a work for pianoforte and various string and wind instruments; the programme also included a Serenade for wind instruments by a young composer of this city, and duets by Alexander Ritter; but none of these happened to be a masterpiece. However, in the nature of a contrast, the pianist, Frau Tolmei, gave a chamber-music evening devoted to vocal and instrumental works by Bach. The performances of the Tschampa Ladies' Quartet proved highly attractive; they were heard in old and modern solo quartets sung a capella, among which were several Volkslieder, and their singing was specially noticeable for precision, purity of tone, and refined rendering of the music.

A fine performance was given of Anton Bruckner's unfinished ninth Symphony at the Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Dr. Muck, from Berlin. Haydn's 'Seasons' was heard at the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde, with Fräulein Stagemann as soprano vocalist. At another concert given by the same Society, a youthful work of Hans Pfitzner's was presented, viz., 'Der Blumen Rache,' a short, clever cantata for female voices and orchestra.

Interesting and seldom-heard works have been performed by the Orchestral Society: e.g., Spohr's Double Concerto for two violins in B minor, Schubert's second Symphony (in D) and Beethoven's 'Prometheus' Ballet music. On the other hand, new works were given by the Concert Society, at whose concerts virtuosi of the highest rank, such as Ysaye and Busoni, were to be heard. The latter played Liszt's A major Concerto, and conducted some numbers of his incidental music to Gozzi's 'Turandot,' in which he has introduced some original Asiatic melodies. This characteristic music would, of course, be heard to greater advantage in immediate connection with stage action and scenery.

Two works have been re-staged and carefully rehearsed at the Hofoper: Mozart's 'Il Seraglio' and Wagner's 'Lohengrin.' Lortzing's opera 'Die beiden Schützen' has also been revived with great success at the Jubilee Theatre; it is many years since it was heard at Vienna.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Festival Choral Society's 'Handel' Concert was held in the Town Hall on February 22, the nearest approach to the anniversary of the composer's birth that usage would allow. The programme comprised 'Acis and Galatea,' and a miscellaneous selection. The soloists were Madame Emily Squire, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Robert Radford, all of whom did well. The singing of the chorus was very fine. The part of Damon was omitted. Madame Squire sang 'Let the bright seraphim,' and solos from 'Solomon'; Mr. Saunders gave a spirited rendering of 'Sound an alarm' and Mr. Radford's fine bass voice was heard to advantage in the air, 'Si tra e ceppi' from the opera 'Berenice.' The chorus gave 'Praise the Lord with harp' and other numbers with magnificent effect, but excelled above all in Samuel Wesley's fine motet, 'In exitu Israel,' a work worthy to be placed side by side with the creations of the great Saxon. Dr. Sinclair conducted, and there was an enormous attendance.

On February 24 the Midland Musical Society gave an excellent performance of Sullivan's 'Golden Legend,' with Miss May Eaves, Miss Elsie Millard and Messrs. John Barnsley and Charles Knowles as principals. Mr. Arthur Cook gave a brilliant performance of the solo part in Mendelssohn's Pianoforte concerto in G minor, and the concert ended with Schubert's 'Rosamunde' overture. Mr. A. J. Cotton ably conducted.

Mr. Beard's Select Choir gave the following Saturday evening concert (March 3), when the programme included madrigals and part-songs, ranging from Lassus and Morley to Elgar and Granville Bantock. Several members of this first-rate choir sang solos, and Madame Nettie Carpenter contributed some violin pieces. Mr. Beard conducted, and Dr. Winn officiated as accompanist.—On March 10, the Choral Union, directed by Mr. Thomas Facer, gave a performance of Costa's 'Eli,' a work Birmingham audiences like to hear occasionally. Mesdames Annie Norledge and Marguerite Gell, and Messrs. J. Whitehouse, S. Stoddard, Webster Millar and William Evans were the soloists.—The second Oratory Musical Evening took place on February 26, when Cherubini's 'Requiem' in C minor was the principal work performed.

The eighth Halford concert was given in the Town Hall on February 27, when Norman O'Neil's overture 'In Springtime' was produced and well received, the composer conducting. His Ballad for contralto and orchestra 'Death on the hills' was also given, Miss Grainger Kerr being the vocalist. Mrs. Norman O'Neil gave a truly artistic rendering of the solo part in Mozart's Pianoforte concerto No. 21, in C, and Mr. Halford conducted a fine performance of Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony. The feature of the ninth concert (March 13) was the Suite from the incidental music to 'Nero,' by Mr. S. Coleridge-Taylor, who conducted the performance, which was exceedingly good, the music creating a marked impression. The Prelude 'The Eastern Dance,' and the 'Entr'acte' were especially admired. Schubert's 'Unfinished' symphony and Rimsky-Korsakoff's 'Capriccio Espagnol' were admirably performed, and Mr. Zacharewitsch was brilliant as soloist in Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto.

The last of the Harrison concerts was held on March 5. The Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, gave splendid performances of Mozart's 'Haffner' symphony, Tchaikovsky's Suite No. 1, in D minor, Rimsky-Korsakoff's 'Capriccio Espagnol,' Lalo's Norwegian Rhapsody, and some lighter pieces. The strings were heard to advantage in Bach's 'Brandenburg' concerto in G, and the wood-wind and horns had their turn in Beethoven's rarely-heard Rondino in E flat. Madame Kirkby Lunn sang in grand style the recitative and rondo 'Non più di fiori,' from Mozart's 'Clemenza di Tito,' and two pleasing songs by Percy Pitt.

On March 19 the Amateur Orchestral Society gave a concert to the members of the Midland Institute, introducing several novelties. First came an overture, 'From green pastures,' by Mr. George Halford, conducted by the composer and cordially received; then followed a Concert-piece for harp and orchestra, by Gabriel Pierné, a tasteful work, the solo part beautifully played by Mr. Charles Collier. The next novelty consisted of some instrumental movements from a dramatic cantata, 'Kunacepa,' by C. E. Pritchard, the conductor. The pieces were a Prelude and two numbers of the Ballet music, French in style—the composer was born in France, and educated at the Paris Conservatoire—and delicately scored; the music made a favourable impression. Other works were Dvorák's Symphony in D, and Edward German's Welsh Rhapsody, the latter admirably played.

Miss Alice Lakin gave a recital of English songs at the Masonic Hall on March 8, winning hearty approval. She introduced a young lady violoncellist, Miss Gertrude Ess, who made a good impression. Mr. F. W. Beard was the accompanist.—On March 14 a concert was given in the Town Hall by the Welsh C.M. Church. Mr. Phillip Lewis, the Welsh violinist, made a successful first appearance here, and Miss May John and other vocalists assisted. Mr. Tom Griffiths conducted a choir whose singing was good. Mr. C. W. Perkins gave some organ solos, including the Welsh Rhapsody.—The next evening, at the Grand Hotel, Mr. Max Mossel brought his drawing-room concerts to a close. The programme included a Sonata for pianoforte and violin, by Karl Kämpf, which was well played by Madame Marie Fromm and Mr. Mossel. Songs were contributed by Madame Minadiou and Miss Lillie Wormald. Mr. G. H. Manton accompanied.—Miss Clara Winwood gave a vocal recital in the Masonic Hall on March 20. She was assisted by Miss Muriel Marwood (violinist), and Mr. Joseph Holbrooke (pianist). A varied programme was well rendered, the songs and pianoforte pieces of Mr. Holbrooke forming the great features of the evening. Miss B. Hewitt and Mr. G. A. Russell were the accompanists. With the exception of Mr. Holbrooke, the artists were past or present students of the Institute School of Music.

Mischa Elman gave a recital in the Town Hall on March 22, when he played the fourth Concerto of Vieuxtemps and other pieces with amazing technique and wonderful depth of expression. Miss Eleanor Felix was the vocalist, and Mr. R. J. Forbes accompanied.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There was a large attendance at Colston Hall on February 24, when the annual concert on behalf of the Great Western Railway Employés' Widows and Orphans' Fund was held. The vocalists were Miss Mabel Manson, Miss Lucie Johnstone and Mr. Samuel Masters, and a capital rendering of favourite compositions was given by the band of the Irish Guards, under the direction of Mr. C. H. Hassell.

The Bristol Cathedral School on February 27 gave its fifteenth annual concert at the Redland Park Hall, in the presence of a numerous assembly. The choir sang part-songs and glees, under the direction of Mr. E. Morrie Tyrrell, and an orchestra of forty executants (Mr. Harold Bernard, leader) was under the direction of Mr. A. E. Hill. Songs were given by Miss Jenie Ellis and Mr. A. E. Marchant, Miss Susie M. Pate accompanying.

In connection with the Sunday afternoon and evening services at Colston Hall, there have been concerts held which were very largely attended. On March 7, the Bristol Ladies' Glee Society and the Bristol Harmonic Male-Voice Choir sang, both Societies having for conductor Mr. J. Jenkins. Songs by Miss Edith Evans, Miss Emmie Holder, Mr. W. Morgan and Mr. Barry Lindon were greatly appreciated, Miss Clarice Ryall-Davis being the accompanist. There were solos by Mr. George Riseley on the organ, Miss Lilian Gittins (violin) and Master Vivian Langrish (pianoforte). At the concert on March 10 the vocalists were Madame Alice Gomez, Miss Eva Long, Miss Maude Waite and Mr. Montague Worlock. Mr. Harold Bernard's string orchestra played with effect some light compositions, and Mr. Riseley contributed organ solos with his customary ability.

The fourth of the series of educational concerts for young students was held on March 7 at Redland Park Hall. Schumann's compositions formed the first part of the programme, and prior to the concert Mr. E. T. Wedmore gave an account of Schumann's career and works.

On March 8 the season of the Clifton Chamber Concerts was concluded with a performance of an interesting character. The executants were Messrs. Herbert Parsons (pianoforte), Maurice Alexander and Hubert Hunt (violins), Ernest Lane (viola) and Percy Lewis (violoncello). There were adequate interpretations of Brahms's Quartet in C minor (Op. 51) and Sir Charles Stanford's Pianoforte quintet in D minor (Op. 25). Mr. Parsons played agreeably three pieces by Chopin, and Mr. Lewis gained much applause for his rendering of a Lied by Vincent d'Indy and a Hungarian Rhapsody by Popper. The vocalist was Miss Ethel Henry Bird.

The performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' by the Bristol Choral Society at Colston Hall, on March 17, was excellent. Choir and band totalled nearly 600 performers, and under the careful direction of Mr. George Riseley there was all due attention to the details. The soloists were Miss Amy Castles, Miss Clara Aldersley, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Robert Radford; while Mr. G. H. Riseley was at the organ.

MUSIC AT CAMBRIDGE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The past two terms have witnessed a welcome revival of orchestral music in Cambridge. A new organization (the 'Cambridge Symphony Concerts') has been started and, under the conductorship of Dr. Charles Wood, has given two concerts with a professional orchestra. Moreover, the University Musical Society has somewhat enlarged the scheme of its chamber concerts, and has included two of an orchestral character.

In the term just concluded the principal concerts have been the Symphony concert on February 1, when the programme included the 'Meistersinger' overture and Brahms's Symphony in D; and the three University Musical Society concerts on January 31, February 21, and March 7. At the first we heard Brahms's Clarinet quintet and Beethoven's Septet; at the second the Bohemian Quartet appeared; and at the third Mr. Leonard Borwick played Mozart's Pianoforte concerto in B flat, and the orchestra contributed Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, and Mozart's Adagio and Fugue in C minor. Miss M. Diestel and Mr. Higley were the vocalists, and Dr. Alan Gray conducted. The University Musical Society performed Handel's 'Jephtha' on February 13.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On February 27 the University College Choral Union gave a concert under the conductorship of Mr. Robert O'Dwyer, at which was performed the first scene from Verdi's 'Il Trovatore.' Mr. Arthur Darley, as the solo violinist of the concert, achieved great success with his fine performance of Ernst's 'Elegie.'

On the same evening Mr. Robert Harrison, vocalist, and Mr. William Harrison, violinist, gave a recital. The former sang well a selection of German and English songs, and the latter played Handel's Violin sonata in A and some other stock pieces. Mr. George Harrison accompanied.

On March 9 Dr. Esposito gave a very interesting lecture on 'Italian harpsichord composers' at the Royal Dublin Society. The discourse was illustrated by many beautiful examples from the works of Ercole Pasquini, Frescobaldi, Rossi, Durante, Marcello, Zipoli, Martini and, of course, the two Scarlattis. Some of the examples were played on a harpsichord by Ferdinand Weber, made in Dublin about the year 1770.

The Dublin Orchestral Society gave its second concert for the season on March 15. The Lord-Lieutenant and the Countess of Aberdeen, accompanied by a large party, honoured the Society by their presence. The programme was as follows: Concerto in E flat for violin and orchestra, Mozart (soloist, Herr Adolf Wilhelm); suite 'Jeux d'enfants,' Bizet; 'Waldweben' ('Siegfried'), Wagner; and Dvorák's symphony 'From the New World,' the last-named being quite brilliantly played under Dr. Esposito's able conductorship.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The last of the orchestral concerts, devoted exclusively to Wagner, formed a brilliant termination to a grand series. Mr. Frangcon-Davies sang with dramatic force 'Wotan's Abschied,' and 'Wahn, wahn' ('Die Meistersinger'). A plébiscite of the subscribers was taken as to whether the choral concerts should be continued or not as part of this series. As the discontinuance of the choral-orchestral concerts would be a serious blow dealt at the prestige of choral music here, it is to be hoped that the good sense and artistic feeling of the subscribers will prevent a step so disastrous.

The annual concert of Mr. Moonie's choir, on February 28, was the finest it has hitherto given. The choir sang brilliantly in Gade's 'Erl-King's daughter' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha,' and were ably supported by the soloists—Misses Lenora Sparkes and Nina Horsburgh, and Mr. Charles Bennett; while the accompaniments were superbly played throughout by Mr. Amers's fine orchestra from Newcastle-on-Tyne. Mr. George Campbell (a member of the choir) scored a great success in Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea,' his efforts being loyally backed up by his male colleagues, who sang with great dash and vigour. Equally successful was the University Musical Society, which gave its concert two evenings later. The chief numbers in the programme were Bach's church cantata 'A stronghold sure,' 'Hiawatha's departure' (Coleridge-Taylor), and 'Ye mariners of England' (Pierson), the last-named composer having been a former occupant of the Reid Chair of Music in this University. The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Mrs. Marion Christie, Mr. Lloyd Chandos, and Mr. Robert Burnett, and the accompaniments were played by a section of the Scottish Orchestra, with Mr. Collinson at the organ.

The last two of Mr. Denhof's chamber concerts (March 2 and 12) reached the highest point of excellence. Mr. Denhof shows wonderful insight in his choice of colleagues, and no concert-giver has ever surpassed him in the quality of his programmes or of the artists he has brought before the public. Associated with him on these two occasions were Messrs. Jaques Thibaud (violinist) and Gervase Elwes (vocalist); and the Brodsky Quartet and Madame Antonia Dolores respectively. It is a cause of keen regret, and very discreditable to Edinburgh musical taste, that Mr. Denhof has decided to discontinue the concerts owing to their lack of public support.

The fourth and last historical concert of the University Course, given under the direction of Prof. Niecks, took place on March 13, and was devoted to the larger forms of chamber music—Sextet, Double quartet, and Octet. The performers were Messrs. Verbrugghen, Daebnitz, Freeman, and Magrath (violins); W. Haigh and D. Nichols (violas); and J. H. Foulds and J. Messias (violoncellos). The programme was selected from the works of Spohr, Mendelssohn, Brahms and Svendsen.

On March 19 the Choral Union performed 'Elijah,' with Misses Gleeson-White and Gertrude Lonsdale, and Messrs. Herbert Grover and Ffrangcon-Davies as soloists, and a local orchestra led by Mr. Dambmann. The chorus, under Mr. Collinson's guidance, sang excellently, and of the soloists Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies rendered the part of the Prophet with great distinction.

Of recitals and concerts by local artists the most important have been those of Miss Young Scott, soprano (February 26), Mesdames Neustadt, vocalist, and May Elliot, pianoforte (March 5), and Mr. Chollet (March 8).

We have had visits from Madame Carreño, Mr. Henry J. Wood and the Queen's Hall Orchestra, and M. Victor Maurel.

MUSIC IN GLASGOW.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Choral and Orchestral Union's last classical concert for the season took place on February 22, when the chief numbers on the programme were Beethoven's Choral symphony and Cowen's 'John Gilpin,' the latter work being a novelty here. For the annual plébiscite programme on February 24, Dr. Cowen's second set of 'Old English Dances' and Beethoven's Symphony in C minor were voted first and second place, while the ultra-modern works of Debussy and d'Indy received only thirty-two votes between them! The series of concerts just ended has been very successful, not only with respect to the quality and performance of the programmes, but also in the large measure of public support given.

As usual at this time of the year a large number of miscellaneous concerts fall to be recorded. On February 22 Mr. Hutton Malcolm's male-voice choir made an excellent appearance in Stanford's 'Songs of the Sea,' Goetz's cantata 'The Water Lily,' and Grieg's ballad 'Recognition of land.' At Herr Denhof's third chamber concert, on March 1, the concert-giver was associated with Mr. Jacques Thibaud in very fine performances of Beethoven's third Sonata for violin and pianoforte, and that of Gabriel Faure's (Op. 13). Mr. Gervase Elwes contributed songs by Brahms, Schubert and Schumann. At his fourth concert, on March 13, Herr Denhof provided a strong attraction in the shape of the famous Brodsky Quartet, with Miss Antonia Dolores as vocalist. It is to be regretted that for lack of public support these excellent concerts will now be discontinued.

On March 1 the Hamilton Choral Union, ably conducted by Mr. T. S. Drummond, gave a capital rendering of Handel's 'Alexander's Feast' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast.' The solo vocalists were Miss S. Maconochie and Messrs. Sydney Butler and Robert Burnett. On the same evening the Greenock Choral Union (conductor Mr. W. T. Hoeck) gave a glee and madrigal concert. The chorus was well balanced and sang with precision and finish, and vocal solos were given by Miss Lillie Wormald and Mr. Charles Tree. The Clydebank Choral Union, under Mr. W. J. Clapperton, performed Haydn's 'Creation' on March 9 before a large audience. The solo music was well sung by Madame Siviter and Messrs. Henry Brearley and Montague Borwell.

The Carl Rosa and the Moody-Manners opera companies have each given a fortnight's performances, the most notable being Beethoven's 'Fidelio' by the former, and a first performance in Glasgow of Tchaikovsky's 'Eugene Onegin' by the latter organization. Of amateur operatic performances the following have taken place: Sullivan's 'The Emerald Isle,' by the Glasgow Amateur Operatic Society; 'Faust' and 'The Daughter of the Regiment,' by the Athenæum Opera Class; and 'Utopia, Limited,' by the Orpheus Club. From these performances the funds of several local charities will largely benefit. Several good concerts have been given by church choirs, among them being St. Matthew's United Free Church ('Judas Maccabæus'), Lansdowne Church ('Creation'), St. George's-in-the-Fields (Spohr's 'Last Judgment'), and Wellington Church ('The Woman of Samaria').

The third of the Chamber concerts given under the auspices of the Pollokshields Philharmonic Society took place on March 19, when the Verbrugghen Quartet gave excellent renderings of Mozart's Quartet in C (No. 17), and Grieg's Quartet in G minor (Op. 27). Miss Gertrude Simpson was solo vocalist, and Miss Ailie Cullen accompanied. The St. Mungo Choir, under Mr. Golan E. Hoole, gave a very fine performance of Cowen's 'St. John's Eve,' and Hecht's 'Charge of the Light Brigade,' on March 19. The soloists were Misses Steven and Mackay, and Mr. Robert Burnett. Mr. Cole's band supplied the accompaniments.

The Glasgow Amateur Orchestral Society gave their second concert on March 21, the programme including Beethoven's 'Prometheus' overture, Haydn's Symphony in B flat (No. 12), the Suite on ballet pieces from Gluck's operas, arranged by Mottl, Mendelssohn's 'Son and Stranger' overture, and Beethoven's Pianoforte concerto in C minor. In the last-named work the solo part was brilliantly played by Mr. Edgar Barratt, a very able local pianist. Mr. Hoeck conducted the performance with his customary skill.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' symphony was the principal feature in the programme of the ninth concert of the Liverpool Symphony Orchestra at the Sun Hall on February 26, and the characteristic work was very well played by Mr. Vasco Akeroyd's orchestra, who also did full justice to Bizet's 'L'Arlésienne' suite and Dvorák's 'Legenden.' Mrs. Helen Trust was the vocalist.

The third Gentlemen's Concert of the Liverpool Orchestral Society took place on March 3 at the Gymnasium, when chief interest centred in the first performance of a 'Preludium' by Jarnefelt, a near relative of Sibelius. The brief work was repeated in response to applause. Beethoven's seventh Symphony was also in the scheme, the Scherzo being given with splendid verve, and Tchaikovsky's 'Serenade' for strings was also well played under Mr. Granville Bantock's direction.

A pianoforte and violoncello recital was given in the Arts Theatre of the University in connection with the University Musical Society, by Mr. Paul Schnabel (pianist) and Mr. Walter Hatton (violoncellist). The vocalist was Mr. Attley Thomas, who sang Schubert's 'The Wanderer' with good effect.

Mr. J. Butler Fortay continued his lectures on the great composers, and that on 'Richard Wagner and the music of the future' made a considerable impression at the Gregson Institute on February 26.

The penultimate concert of the Philharmonic Society occurred on March 6, when the vocalist was Señor Luis Alvarez, who appeared for the first time in Liverpool, and M. Thibaud, who played the solo part in Saint-Saëns's Violin concerto No. 3, in B minor, with good effect. Dr. Cowen conducted his fifth Symphony and the 'Meister-singer' and 'Il Barbiere' overtures.

Sterndale-Bennett's cantata 'The May Queen' was creditably given at the annual choir concert of Trinity Wesleyan Church. The principals were Miss Mabel Corns, Miss Ada Phillips, Mr. Tom Barlow, and Mr. Fred Owens. Mr. Richard Lowry conducted.

At Mr. Schiever's last concert, given on March 10, the programme included Glazounow's String quintet (Op. 39), Haydn's Quartet in G, and Schumann's Pianoforte quintet, with Miss Evelyn Suart as solo pianist.

Sir Charles Stanford conducted the Liverpool Symphony Orchestra concert on March 12, when the first performance was given in Liverpool of his new symphony, written last year as a memorial to G. F. Watts. The work was finely played. The 'Sea songs' were also included in the programme, with Mr. Plunket Greene as soloist, the Birkenhead Glee and Madrigal Society giving due effect to the refrains.

The University Musical Society gave Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' on March 13.

The programme of the last Philharmonic concert included the first act of 'Lohengrin' and the 'Kermesse' scene from 'Faust.' The principals were Miss Agnes Nicholls, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. John Harrison, Mr. Hamilton Earle, Mr. Edward Iles, and Mr. Lemprière Pringle.

We have had visits from the Queen's Hall Orchestra, conductor Mr. Henry J. Wood, and from Herr Kreisler.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The music season in Manchester, now drawing rapidly to a close, has been quite an average one in the interest it has excited, and in the pleasures it has provided, although it can scarcely claim to possess any great originating or creative importance. The attractiveness of speculation has gathered chiefly round Strauss's 'Sinfonia Domestica,' played at the Hallé concerts in February, and repeated on March 1. The most recent Hallé concerts have added one or two fresh works to the already large repertoire: Liszt's 'Dante' symphony, for orchestra and female chorus (February 22); Glazounov's new Violin concerto in A minor, played by Master Mischa Elman (March 1); Mr. York Bowen's Symphonic Fantasia (March 8); and at the same concert Wagner's 'Love-feast of the Apostles.' At the concert of February 22, Mr. Wilhelm Backhaus played Mr. Busoni's arrangement of Bach's Pianoforte concerto in D minor. There was a fine performance on March 8 of Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony. Beethoven—whose name has figured most frequently in this season's programmes—held sole possession of the twentieth and last concert on March 15. For the choral portion of the ninth Symphony the soloists were Miss Fillunger, Miss Florence Oliver, Mr. Webster Millar, and Mr. Fowler Burton. Dr. Richter secured a magnificent rendering of the first three movements, and the choral movement was capably done, so far as Mr. R. H. Wilson's choir is concerned. The programme was completed with the 'Leonora' overture No. 1, and the two great airs from 'Fidelio'—'Thou monstrous fiend,' sung by Miss Fillunger; and 'Heaven! what gloom profound,' sung by Mr. Webster Millar.

Miss Fanny Davies, always specially welcome, played at the Gentlemen's Concerts, on February 26, Mendelssohn's Pianoforte concerto in G minor, a Concert Allegro for pianoforte solo by Sir Edward Elgar, and Liszt's Will-o'-the-Wisp ('Feux Follets') Study. The Concert Allegro—which is still in manuscript, and is dedicated to Miss Davies—was played again later in the concert. The 'Jupiter' symphony, as Dr. Richter secured the interpretation of it, seemed more than aptly worthy of its christening.—The Queen's Hall Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Henry J. Wood, was here on March 6, in connection with the Harrison concerts. Madame Kirkby Lunn—a native of Manchester, by the way—was the vocalist; and the programme contained the 'Capriccio Espagnol' of Rimsky-Korsakoff, the third of Bach's 'Brandenburg' concertos (for strings), Beethoven's 'Rondino' for wind instruments, Tchaikovsky's Suite in D minor, No. 1 (Op. 43), Mozart's 'Haffner' symphony, one of Lalo's two Norwegian Rhapsodies, and Debussy's Symphonic Prelude, 'L'après-midi d'un faune.'

At an interesting Promenade concert given on February 24, the tone-poem 'Findlandia,' by Sibelius, was performed for the first time in Manchester. Mr. Arthur Catterall was solo violinist. The popular tastes were appealed to in a Fantasia concertante by Demerseman, for flute and oboe, the solo instruments played by Mr. V. L. Needham and Mr. C. Reynolds respectively. At the Brodsky Quartet concert on February 25 the programme consisted of Brahms's Pianoforte quartet in A (Op. 26), and Schubert's Octet. Mr. Richard Epstein was at the pianoforte in the Quartet, and Mr. E. Mills (clarinet), Mr. Otto Schieder (bassoon),

Mr. F. Paersch (horn) and Mr. J. Hoffmann (double bass)—all of the Hallé Orchestra—took part in a fine performance of the Octet.

Mr. Selmar Farnow, violoncellist in the Hallé Orchestra, who was playing with his colleagues on March 5, died on March 7. Born in Paris, he studied at the Conservatoire, where he gained the prize for his instrument. He became a member of the Hallé Orchestra twenty-six years ago, and was appreciated and esteemed alike professionally and in private. His death under the circumstances is a matter of special regret.

The extra Hallé concert, now given annually in behalf of the Orchestra Pension Fund, took place on March 22, Dr. Richter conducting. Mr. Fritz Kreisler, who gave his services, played Brahms's Violin concerto with a fine cadenza of his own. The orchestral pieces were—Symphony in G minor (Mozart), March Hongroise (Berlioz), 'Don Juan' (Strauss), the Venusberg music (Wagner), and the '1812' overture (Tchaikovsky).

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

Dvorák's Suite in D and Brahms's 'Song of Destiny' formed the principal features of the concert of the Darlington Choral and Orchestral Society's Concert on February 28. Mr. A. Wilson played Wieniawski's second Violin concerto. Mr. Watkin Mills was the vocalist and Mr. T. Henderson conducted. During a visit of the Carl Rosa opera company to Newcastle in the last week of February, Beethoven's 'Fidelio' was revived after many years of local slumber. Much interest was thereby manifested in musical circles, and a crowded house showed much enthusiasm, particularly in regard to the magnificent music of the second act.

In connection with the Harrison Concerts, Novocastrians were afforded another opportunity of listening to the Queen's Hall Orchestra on March 8, when Mr. Henry J. Wood conducted an eclectic programme ranging from Bach and Mozart to Lalo, Tchaikovsky and Rimsky-Korsakoff, and Madame Kirkby Lunn sang in her usual artistic style.

Although only in its second season and existing in a town where serious orchestral music has not hitherto been cultivated, the South Shields Orchestral Society (at their concert on March 14), boldly attacked two symphonies—Beethoven's fifth and Mendelssohn's 'Italian,' in addition to Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture, and works of smaller calibre. The performance was exceedingly creditable, the amateur local element exhibiting signs of much careful and musicianly training by the conductor, Mr. A. Adams.

On the same evening the Gateshead Vocal Society, conductor Mr. T. Robinson, sang, to pianoforte accompaniment, Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives' and Bach's cantata 'My spirit was in heaviness.' The performance of a Bach Church cantata is a great rarity in this district—in fact, Bach seems to be utterly neglected. The vocalists were local artists—Miss Marie Fairs, Messrs. R. R. Greenwell and W. J. Dodds.

The Newcastle Philharmonic Society gave a good performance of Handel's 'Samson' on March 15. The soloists were Miss Clare Addison, Miss Ada Soulsby, Messrs. Henry Beaumont and Charles Knowles, and the accompaniments were sustained by strings, pianoforte and organ. Mr. G. Dodds was the capable conductor.

Gluck's 'Orpheus' (Act II.), MacCunn's 'Bonny Kilmeny,' Coleridge-Taylor's 'She dwells by great Kenhawa's side,' and Jensen's 'Feast of Adonis' were sung by the Armstrong College Choral Society on March 20. Misses M. Wyatt, B. Buckley, and Messrs. D. Gibson and A. Lambert were the vocalists. Miss F. K. Cross contributed violin solos and Mr. F. Richardson flute solos. Mrs. Cotter was accompanist, and Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

MUSIC IN NORWICH AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The principal recent musical event in Norwich was the concert of the Norwich Philharmonic Society on February 25, which was entirely orchestral, the attraction on the occasion being the first appearance in Norwich of Prof. Carl Halir, who played Mendelssohn's Violin concerto, the Adagio from Spohr's ninth Violin concerto, a Hungarian Dance by Brahms-Joachim, and Ries's 'Moto Perpetuo.' The band contributed Cherubini's 'Anacreon' overture, Dvorák's 'New World' symphony, and Tchaikovsky's '1812' overture in a creditable manner, but the last-named was somewhat beyond the powers of an orchestra consisting as it did almost entirely of amateurs. One or two vocal items would have been an improvement in the programme. Dr. Bates conducted.

The Saturday Popular Concerts, under the direction of Dr. Bunnett, are having a very successful season, the programmes being well varied and a large number of artists, both local and otherwise, having been engaged. Among others who have appeared at these concerts during the season are Miss Lilian Gardner, Miss Euneta Truscott, Miss Ethel Lister, Miss Gertrude Maxted, Miss Teresa Blamy, Miss Clara Dow, Miss Phyllis Lett, Miss Dorothea Whitley (violin), Miss Pearl Evelyn-Bryer, and Mr. Kenneth Park (violincello).

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Boston Choral Society gave a performance of 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast,' with a miscellaneous second part, on February 27. 'Onaway, awake, beloved,' was artistically rendered by Mr. G. H. Gregory, who conducts the Society.

The final orchestral concert of the Nottingham Sacred Harmonic Society took place on March 1, when the programme comprised the 'Leonora' overture No. 3, Dvorák's 'New World' symphony, Wagner's 'The Mastersinger' overture, Grieg's 'Peer Gynt' suite No. 1, and Edward German's Welsh Rhapsody. Of these the 'rhapsody'—the only novelty at this concert—was received with great enthusiasm, though placed at the end of a long programme. Mr. Robert Radford was responsible for the vocal items, and was heard to advantage in Handel's 'O ruddier than the cherry'; his other contribution to the programme was Stanford's 'Sea Songs,' in which he was too much dominated by the orchestra. Mr. Allen Gill conducted, and may be congratulated on concluding the season with one of the best orchestral concerts he has directed in this city.

The West Bridgford Choral Society (conductor, Mr. J. B. Lyddon) concluded its season with a performance of Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' on March 9. The solo parts were admirably sustained by Miss Alice Baxter, Miss Nellie Oldham, and Mr. Ben Ivor. Madame Wilson Moulds, a foremost representative of local talent, gave a concert on March 9, when she was assisted by the Meister Glee Singers, as well as by Miss Florence Farnworth, Miss Bessie Maude, Madame Ethel Elgar and Mr. W. R. Maxwell. The programme was rendered interesting and popular by the selection of the 'Garden Scene' from Gounod's 'Faust,' and the accompaniments were ably played by Miss Mabel Goodyer and Mr. W. Ryde.

Herr F. Hegedus gave a concert in Nottingham on March 13, when additional interest was imparted to his early re-appearance in this city from the fact that he was supported by Miss Lily Henkel, who is well known in local circles. The violinist was heard in Handel's Violin sonata in D, Vivaldi's 'Ciaccona' and Grieg's Pianoforte and Violin sonata in C minor. Miss Henkel contributed three solos by Chopin in brilliant style.

The last concert, on March 22, of the Sacred Harmonic Society introduced two novelties to this city. The first, 'Everyman,' by Dr. Walford Davies, was performed with great effect by the Society, and the solos were ably sustained by Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Gwladys Roberts, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Lane Wilson. The second composition was entitled 'The Awakening,' composed by Mr. John Cullen, a local musician whose work, though short, is very ably written, and it met with a most enthusiastic reception. The chorus sang their part con amore, and gave a really fine rendering of the unaccompanied chorus 'Shew us Thy mercy.' Miss Roberts received a warm appreciation of her rendering of the contralto solo 'Rend your hearts,' which is the best number in the work. The Society are to be congratulated on their venture, and Mr. Allen Gill on the results. At the close, Mr. Cullen was loudly called for, and acknowledged the compliment.

MUSIC IN OXFORD.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The first concert of this term took place in the Town Hall on February 1, under the auspices of the Musical Club, when a portion of the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Dr. Allen, gave an excellent concert, Herr Fritz Kreisler being the solo violinist. The principal items were Bach's Concerto for violin and orchestra in E, Beethoven's ever-welcome Violin concerto, while the band contributed Wagner's 'Siegfried Idyll' and Mozart's Symphony in E flat.

On February 8, in the same building, the Vocal Society gave the 'Messiah,' at popular prices. Mr. Wilsdon conducted a very good performance, and the house was crowded.

Sir Hubert Parry gave an interesting lecture in the Sheldonian Theatre on February 14, taking as his subject 'The function of thematic material in musical organization.' The audience was keen and appreciative. Illustrations were given by Miss Vera Evans and Miss Velland, as well as by the genial professor himself.

In the Assembly Rooms, on February 17, Miss Taphouse gave another delightful concert of ancient music and dances, assisted by the Misses Chaplin and others. The entire performance from first to last was perfectly charming. Of exceptional beauty were Purcell's Suite No. 1, played on the spinet by Miss Taphouse, D. Scarlatti's 28th Lesson, played on the harpsichord, and a couplet of songs by Pelham Humphreys, 'A poor soul sat sighing' and 'Where the bee sucks,' nicely sung by Miss Elsie Guggenheim. We hope that we may be treated to another of these delightful concerts next year.

On February 21, in the Town Hall, and under the auspices of the Musical Club, Miss Fanny Davies, Prof. Carl Halir and Mr. Whitehouse gave a chamber concert. Dvorák's Trio in F minor (Op. 65) and Schubert's Trio in E flat (Op. 100) were capitally rendered. Miss Fanny Davies selected as her solos three pieces of Schumann, Canon in A flat, Scherzo-Canon in B minor, and the D major Novelette; for the last-named piece she was deservedly encored.

On March 1, also in the Town Hall, Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was given by the combined forces of the Choral and Philharmonic Societies and the Bach Choir, under the able conductorship of Dr. Allen. The soloists were Miss Sichel, Miss Lett and Mr. Francis Harford, together with Mr. Child and Mr. Sunman, lay-clerks of the Cathedral. We may sum up shortly with congratulations to all concerned, especially to Dr. Allen, on a most excellent all-round performance. May this 'triple alliance'—strenuously recommended in these columns some time since—go on and prosper.

The Sunday evening concerts at Balliol have been continued as usual this term under the careful direction of Dr. Walker.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The second series of operatic performances organized in aid of the Sheffield University was given in the week commencing February 26. This annual festival of grand opera is promoted by a local committee working in association with the Moody-Manners Opera Company. There is no guarantee fund, but local interest, social, musical and educational, is aroused, and all receipts over a definite sum paid to Mr. Manners are given to the University Fund. At the first Festival £457 was realised. The works presented on the recent occasion comprised 'Siegfried,' 'Carmen' (a 'students' night'), Tchaikovsky's 'Eugene Onegin,' a new one-act opera by Mr. Nicholas Gatty, entitled 'Greysteel,' Gounod's 'Phlémon et Baucis,' 'The Flying Dutchman,' 'Tristan und Isolde,' 'The Marriage of Figaro,' and 'Lohengrin.' The advantages of co-operation are seen in securing such an excellent list as this, for the local committee had a voice in the selection of the repertory. A chorus of ninety voices and an orchestra of sixty players, under Mr. Richard Eckhold, together with special scenery, contributed to an admirable, imposing ensemble. The performances attracted widespread attention owing largely to the interest created by a very excellent revival of 'Eugene Onegin,' with Madame Fanny Moody in her original (English) part of Tatiana, and the production of Mr. Gatty's new opera, specially noticed on page 253. Fine performances of 'Tristan und Isolde' and 'Lohengrin' further distinguished a successful series.

The Chapeltown and District Sacred Harmonic Society gave on March 13 a well-prepared and studied performance of 'St. Paul,' under the direction of Mr. T. Bool. The small but courageous choral society at Handsworth sang Gaul's 'Joan of Arc' with credit, and in connection with the Wesleyan Central Mission a band and chorus of 300 performers essayed 'Elijah,' in the Albert Hall, conducted by Mr. H. C. Jackson. The Sheffield Chamber Music Society's sixth concert was organized by Mr. J. W. Phillips (pianoforte), his associates being Mr. and Mrs. R. Wood and Mr. Collin Smith. Schumann's Pianoforte quartet in E flat (Op. 47) and Dvorák's Pianoforte trio in B flat were played with good tone and ensemble.

Notice of the announced performance of 'Everyman' and 'John Gilpin' by the Sheffield Musical Union under Dr. Coward must be deferred till next month.

The Sheffield Amateur Musical Society have arranged to perform 'The Apostles' in December next, under the direction of Mr. Henry J. Wood. The work has not yet been heard in Sheffield.

Arrangements are being made for a party of 200 or 300 singers from Sheffield to visit Berlin and Cologne in December next, in order to take part in a series of concerts. The works selected include Bach's B minor Mass, Beethoven's Choral symphony, and 'The Dream of Gerontius.' Among the conductors suggested are Mr. Henry J. Wood, Herr Felix Weingartner and Dr. Coward, the last-named acting as chorus-master. A local guarantee fund is being promoted.

MUSIC IN STAFFORDSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The interest in the premier performance on a festival scale in North Staffordshire of the noble 'Passion' of St. Matthew as left to us by the grand old church musician J. S. Bach must have been very keen, otherwise the Victoria Hall at Hanley, on March 12, would not have presented the appearance it did when the conductor, Mr. John James, amid cheering signs of encouragement, advanced to his desk. The band and chorus numbered 350 performers, including a choir of 45 boys, selected by Mr. James from the Council schools of the borough, and trained by him for the occasion. They were seated together in the centre of the platform and wore surplices. The orchestra, composed largely of Hallé's band, was about 60 strong. The vocal principals were Madame Squire, Miss Joan Ashley, Messrs. John Harrison, James Frost and Charles Knowles, all of whom gave the difficult parts allotted to them with great credit. The choral singing was superb. Immense power was imparted to the grand double chorus 'Have lightnings and thunders,' the bass runs being magnificently sung. The sopranos in such choruses as 'Now tell us,' rang out their upper notes with a beauty and volume of tone which has never been surpassed in the history of local choral-singing. The orchestral work, on the whole, was very intelligent and satisfactory. Messrs. Reynolds and Hunter played the oboi d'amore parts with great effect. The tone of these obsolete instruments gave an old-world flavour to the accompaniment of the soprano recitative that was quite refreshing. Mr. John James amply proved his right to his present important position by evincing mastery of the instrumental quite as much as of the choral portions of the noble work so satisfactorily interpreted.

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

Mr. Percy Grainger's remarkably brilliant pianoforte playing gave distinction to the Leeds Subscription Concert on February 21, when Miss Ada Crossley was the vocalist and Miss Maud McCarthy the violinist. All three artists are by birth or residence Australians, and the coincidence is made the more striking by the fact that on the following day two other Australian musicians appeared at Leeds, Miss Nora McKay, a young violinist of exceptional technical and artistic ability, giving a recital at which the vocalist was Miss Maud Dalrymple, a very promising contralto. On February 27 the Headingley Choral Society—which generally presents something rather out of the common—introduced to Leeds Elgar's 'Black Knight,' of which an excellent performance was given under the conductorship of Mr. Percy Richardson. On February 28 the Bohemian Society gave one of their interesting chamber concerts, Quartets by Haydn, Glazounow, in D (Op. 70), and Vincent d'Indy (in E) forming the programme. These two recent examples of chamber music were not new at these concerts, having been given during the previous season, but the wise policy was adopted of repeating them before the impression they then made had faded. The Municipal concert on March 3 was of chamber music for wind instruments, of which some interesting modern examples by Verhey, Julius Rietz, Saint-Saëns, Pierné and Barthe were given by local musicians, all members of the Municipal Orchestra, whose playing showed them to be fully equal to the greater refinement and finish which chamber music demands. Miss Gertrude Appleyard was the vocalist on this occasion, and sang most charmingly. On March 17 the Municipal Orchestra, under Mr. Fricker's direction, gave a Beethoven programme. The eighth Symphony was admirably played, and Mr. Noel H. Bell gave a thoroughly artistic reading of the solo part in the fourth Pianoforte concerto. On March 19 the Musical Union, under Mr. Bell's conductorship, sang Elgar's 'Greek' part-songs for male voices with good effect, and on the following day Mrs. Henry J. Wood sang a varied selection of songs at one of Messrs. Haddock's musical evenings, M. Zacharewitsch being the violinist.

BRADFORD.

The Bradford Permanent Orchestra's season came to a close on March 3, when the rigours of orchestral music were mitigated, for an audience whose preferences are rather on the side of vocal music, by the co-operation of a chorus formed from the chief male-voice choirs in the district, which, under Mr. Henry Coates's direction, sang part-songs of the usual type. Mr. Allen Gill and his orchestra levelled down their efforts to suit the occasion, the only orchestral piece of genuine distinction being the 'Egmont' overture, which was played in artistic style. Miss Nellie Judson was the vocalist. The most important event at Bradford during the past month has been a performance of César Franck's 'Béatitudes' at the Subscription Concert on March 9. The work was rather drastically abbreviated by numerous cuts, and though its plan and character may have some leaning to monotony, it may be doubted whether it is not beautiful and individual enough to be heard with pleasure in an un mutilated condition. While it has the grace and charm of modern French music, it is more sincere than most oratorios of the French school, and the fine contrapuntal texture of the music gives it a certain virility in which they, for the most part, are lacking. Dr. Cowen conducted a good all-round performance, and the cast of principals included Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Edna Thornton, Miss Rawling, and Messrs. Ffrangcon-Davies, F. Austin, W. Green, D. Bannan and F. H. Richardson. The Harrison Concerts came to an end on March 13, when Mr. Henry J. Wood brought the Queen's Hall Orchestra and gave a series of finished and brilliant performances, Mozart's 'Haffner' symphony and Tchaikovsky's first Suite being the chief pieces in the programme. Madame Kirkby Lunn was the vocalist.

OTHER TOWNS.

The Huddersfield Choral Society gave, on March 2, a performance of Bach's B minor Mass that was of uneven merit, reaching its highest level in the choral singing, which was in many instances superb, the brilliant movements being as vigorous and energetic as they could possibly be. The soloists were Miss Minnie Tracy, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. H. Wilde and Mr. Herbert Brown; the last-named artist sang 'Et in unum spiritum' with exactly the right sense of purity and dignity and with good musical effect. Dr. Coward conducted with characteristic energy. At the Huddersfield Subscription Concert on March 6 Beethoven's Septet was the chief feature of a programme in which the wood-wind figured largely, while Mr. Claude Hobday's double-bass solo, played with extraordinary finish, provided something like a sensation. Miss Antonia Dolores's delightfully artistic singing was a pleasing feature of the concert. On March 13 the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society, of which Mr. J. W. Armitage is the conductor, gave a concert consisting chiefly of part-songs.

The Halifax Orchestral Society's concert on March 1 had for its most important features Mendelssohn's 'Scotch' symphony, Tchaikovsky's 'Nutcracker' suite, and Beethoven's 'Coriolanus' overture, which were very creditably played by the orchestra—largely an amateur body—under Mr. H. Van Dyk's conducting. Madame Sadler-Fogg was the vocalist. 'King Olaf' was chosen for the Halifax Choral Society's programme on March 8, and an excellent and in many respects highly-finished performance was given of this early but beautiful example of Elgar's music under the direction of Mr. F. de G. English. Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Gervase Elwes, and Mr. C. Knowles were the principals. Goring Thomas's 'Sun Worshippers' and Mr. J. Weston Nicholls's clever Concert overture for organ and orchestra completed the programme. On March 14 the Morley Choral Society, of which Mr. Fricker is now the conductor, gave an exceedingly bright performance of 'Acis and Galatea,' followed by a miscellaneous selection from Handel's works. Miss Dorothy Court, Mr. F. Fallas, Mr. Marsden Williams and Mr. J. W. Smith formed a satisfactory cast of principals, and the chorus sang with remarkable zest and force.

The Pudsey Choral Union gave, on March 19, Goring Thomas's 'Swan and Skylark,' under the direction of Mr. Pickard.

The Keighley Orchestral Society's concert on March 7 included a creditable performance of Mozart's E flat symphony, and some lighter pieces showed the good quality of the band, which is conducted by a local amateur, Mr. Summerscales. Miss Antonia Dolores was the vocalist, and the brilliant violoncello playing of Mr. Abbas was another interesting feature of the concert.

One of the enjoyable York Chamber concerts took place on March 10, when the Brodsky Quartet gave a really masterly performance of Beethoven's first Quartet and two movements from Tchaikovsky's Quartet in D (Op. 11), while in Brahms's Pianoforte quintet in F minor they had the co-operation of Mr. Padel as pianist.

Foreign Notes.

AIX-LA-CHAPELLE.

The conductors of this year's (the eighty-third) Lower Rhenish Musical Festival—to be held June 3 to 5—are Prof. E. Schwicklerath and Herr Felix Weingartner, the former as great a choir-trainer as the redoubtable Felix is a master of the orchestra. Superb performances may thus safely be predicted, especially as the Aix-la-Chapelle Choir is second to none in Germany in regard to quality of voices no less than in intellectuality of interpretation.

BAYREUTH.

It is reported that Siegfried Wagner has just completed yet another opera; which is to be produced next season. Its title is 'Sternengebot,' which may perhaps be translated 'The stars' ordainment,' or 'Ordained by the stars.'

BERLIN.

Sir Edward Elgar's oratorio 'The Apostles' was performed by the Singakademie, under Prof. Georg Schumann, on February 23, the soloists being Fräulein Clara Erler, Frau Walter-Choinanus, Herren Felix Senius von Wilde, Heinemann and Günther. Further reference to this performance will be found on page 243.—Miss Gwendolyn Toms, formerly a pupil of Mr. John Francis Barnett at the Royal College of Music, gave a concert with the Philharmonic Orchestra on February 24, at which she mastered with conspicuous success a titanic programme consisting of the Pianoforte concertos of Brahms (in D minor), Mozart (in A major), and Schumann.—The Philharmonic

Choir, under Prof. Siegfried Ochs, devoted its third subscription concert, on March 5, to four church cantatas by Bach, viz., 'Nun ist das Heil,' 'Christ lag in Todesbanden,' 'O Ewigkeit, du Donnerwort,' and 'Du Hirte Israel.' The performances of the choir were as usual masterly.

BONN.

The 'Beethoven House' Festival of this year will be devoted to Schumann instead of Beethoven, with a view to celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the great romanticist's death. The celebrations will begin on May 20 with a memorial ceremony at the master's monument over his grave in the 'Old' cemetery, the male-voice choir 'Concordia'—which fifty years ago carried Schumann's mortal remains to their last resting-place—taking part in the function with performances of some appropriate pieces. At two evening concerts, on May 22 and 23, the B flat and E flat Symphonies, the 'Genoveva' and 'Manfred' overtures, the Concertstück for four horns and orchestra, the Pianoforte concerto, the scenes from 'Faust,' the 'Requiem for Mignon' and the 'New Year's Song' will be performed, while a chamber concert on May 24 will be devoted to the Pianoforte quartet, some pianoforte solos, the 'Dichterliebe' and the 'Spanish Liederspiel.' The orchestra will be the Berlin Philharmonic, augmented by local artists, and Bonn Societies will furnish a choir of 300 voices. Professors Joseph Joachim and Grüters will be the conductors, Ernst von Dohnányi the pianist, and Mesdames Kappel and von Kraus-Osborne, Herr Felix Senius, Dr. von Kraus and Prof. Messchaert the vocalists. A Rhine trip on a specially chartered steamer will conclude what will doubtless prove a most enjoyable and elevating Festival.

BRESLAU.

Richard Strauss's unsavoury opera 'Salome' was performed here for the first time during the last week of February, and as rapturously received as on its production at Dresden. Breslau is the first town, after the Saxon capital, to mount the work. To 'accommodate' the director of the local municipal theatre, Dr. Strauss relented to the extent of contenting himself with an orchestra of only eighty players, instead of the 120 good men and true which the whole Continental Press advertised for months as being the great man's sine quâ non of any and all performances of this darling child of his Muse.

BRUSSELS.

Berlioz's 'Faust' was performed on the stage of the Royal Theatre de la Monnaie on February 21, and greeted with enthusiasm. The performance—in the success of which the stage manager as well as the scene painters, electricians and machinists could claim an equal share with the executants—was admirable. The mounting of the extraordinary work exceeded in beauty and remarkable effects even that of Gluck's 'Armida,' and there can be no doubt that Berlioz's setting of Goethe's poem will continue to draw enthusiastic audiences.

BUDAPEST.

A romantic opera, 'The gipsies of Nagy-Ida,' by Ferdinand Rékai, was produced with great success at the Royal Opera House on February 24. The clever score contains many suggestions of Hungarian folk-songs and dances, while the libretto is based on a legendary gipsy tale.

COLOGNE.

This year's Festival performances at the new municipal theatre, to take place in June next, will be devoted to Verdi's 'Falstaff,' 'Lohengrin,' 'The Flying Dutchman,' 'Don Giovanni' and Strauss's 'Salome.' The last-named work will necessitate certain alterations in the stage, even though this is one of the newest and most up-to-date in the world! In order to meet the expense of these alterations some Cologne music-lovers have subscribed 30,000 marks. Citizens of this ancient musical centre will also 'find' the 3,000,000 marks required to build the new and long-hoped-for concert hall, the old 'Gürzenich' having long been voted inadequate to the needs of the growing population.

DRESDEN.

The Court Opera has accepted for performance a new 'musical tragedy' of Herr Max Schillings, one of the foremost living composers of Germany. The work is entitled 'Moloch,' and based, by Emil Gerhäuser, on the Drama-Fragment left by the poet Hebbel.

DETMOID.

A new opera, 'The Judge of Zalamea,' by Georg Jarno, has been successfully produced here.

DUISBURG.

The sixth annual meeting of Evangelical organists of the Rhineland and Westphalia was held in the beautiful Salvator Church. The programme of the festival concert included works by the old masters—Johann Pachelbel, Dietrich Buxtehude and J. S. Bach—and by the ultra-modern Max Reger. The last-named composer is never absent from programmes of these and similar important functions, and the juxtaposition of his ripest works with those of the great Johann Sebastian never fails to give occasion for interesting and stimulating comparisons and discussions. Herr Musikdirektor Wilhelm Kipp, of Bochum, played the G minor Toccata and two Choralvorspiele by Pachelbel, while Herr Gustav Beckmann, of Essen, chose Buxtehude's Passacaglia and the unprecedentedly difficult Symphonic Fantasia and Fugue by Reger. Fräulein Emmy Grosse-Weischede sang two airs for contralto voice, organ and violin, by Bach—'Jesus nacht mich geistlich reich' and 'Ich will doch wohl Rosen brechen,' and Herr Konzertmeister Paul Lehmann played the Sonata in A for violin solo (from Op. 42) by Reger.

DÜSSELDORF.

At the sixth subscription concert, on February 15, of the Städtischemusikverein, conducted by Prof. Julius Buths, a new ballade, 'Lenore,' for soprano, contralto and baritone soli, chorus and orchestra, by a Dutch composer, Otto Lies, was produced and very favourably received. At the subsequent concert (on March 8) a new symphonic fantasia, 'Sardanapal,' by G. Kramm, was brought to a first hearing; while at the final concert of his season (April 5) Prof. Buths, who is one of the most eclectic and enterprising conductors of Germany, will give Elgar's 'Apostles' for the first time in the charming 'Rhine-Athens,' as Düsseldorfers love to call their town.

ESSEN-ON-THE-RUHR.

At this year's Tonkünstler Versammlung—to be held here from May 24 to 27—Gustav Mahler's latest Symphony, No. 6, is to be produced. The work will possess at least one claim to distinction, in that, as it is said to occupy two hours in performance, it will most likely be unique as regards length. May it not be found wanting in the other 'dimensions'—breadth and depth!

HEIDELBERG.

An unique performance of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was given at the last subscription concert of the Bach Society, under Prof. Philip Wolfmum. The great work was presented without a single omission, the two parts being separated by an interval of two hours. Prof. Wolfmum's unusual arrangements for seating the executants—including the sinking of the orchestra in Bayreuth style (the new local concert hall is provided with movable platforms)—helped to produce the mystic 'atmosphere' in which the 'Passion' revealed its sublime beauties to the astonished and deeply-moved audience. Verily, verily, Bach's works are more and more becoming the music of the future in Germany.

LEIPZIG.

Eugen d'Albert scored an emphatic success at the first performance here of his delightful musical comedy 'Flauto solo,' under Arthur Nikisch, at the new theatre on February 23. The gifted composer was called before the curtain a dozen times.

LISBON.

A series of concerts was announced to take place at the Theatre San Carlo between March 18 and April 10, at which 'Moses' and 'The Resurrection,' by Dom Lorenzo Perosi, and 'Isaiah' and 'St. Agnes,' by Luigi Mancinelli, were to be performed. Both composers were advertised to conduct their respective works.

MONTE CARLO.

M. Saint-Saëns's new opera 'L'ancêtre,' was produced here on February 24 and enthusiastically received by an audience which filled the theatre. The libretto is by M. Augé de Lassus, the author of the same composer's opera

'Phryné,' at whose suggestion M. Saint-Saëns last year undertook a journey through Corsica. The present work is the outcome of his impressions of the land of the 'Vendetta,' and, needless to say, it is this Corsican curse of revenge by bloody deeds which forms the foundation of the story. That the score contains a 'Vocero,' like Sir Alexander Mackenzie's 'Colomba,' also goes without saying; it forms the chief number of the second act. There are beautiful pieces in each of the three acts—solos, duets, choruses, instrumental movements, &c.; and a great duet between the lovers, breathing hope and joy, and working up to a splendid orchestral climax, concludes the opera. The performance, under M. Léon Jehin, was first-rate, the soloists, Mesdames Litvinne, Geraldine Farrar, and Charbonel, and Messrs. Rousselière, Renaud and Lequien, orchestra and chorus being of all-round excellence.

MUNICH.

The programme for this year's Mozart and Wagner Festival performances has now been definitely fixed as follows: 'Don Giovanni' (August 2 and 8), 'Figaro' (August 4 and 10), and 'Così fan tutte' (August 6 and 12). The Wagner cycle begins with 'Die Meistersinger' (August 13), the remaining representations of this work taking place on August 16, 25, and 28, and September 6. 'Tannhäuser' is announced for August 14, 26, and September 7, while the two cycles of 'The Nibelung's Ring' are to be unrolled on August 18, 19, 21 and 22, and August 31, September 1, 3 and 4. Amongst the artists engaged are Mesdames Schumann-Heink, Thila Plaichinger, Charlotte Huhn, Ernesta Delsarta, Berta Morena, &c., and Messrs. Van Rooy, Ernst Kraus, Karl Burrian, Heinrich Knotte, &c. Messrs. Felix Mottl and Franz Fischer will conduct the performances.

NICE.

'Sanga' is the title of Mr. Isidor de Lara's new three-act opera, produced here on February 21. The work, which is dedicated to the Princess Alice of Monaco, was very favourably received, and is generally considered a further step toward the high goal which the composer of 'The Garden of Sleep' and other sentimental English ballads has lately set himself. Amongst the numbers which made the greatest impression at the first performance were the very effective Finale to Act I, a 'Song of the Seed'—enthusiastically encored; the symphonic prelude to Act II., built on an impressive leitmotif typifying the mighty mountains in which the drama is placed; and an elaborate dramatic monologue for Sanga, filling the whole of Act II. The third Act is less successful, and, like the conclusions of so many works by even great masters, suggests a certain degree of exhaustion in the composer's creative force.

PARIS.

An important new orchestral work by M. Vincent d'Indy, entitled 'Jour d'été à la Montagne,' was produced at the Colonne Concert of February 18 and well received. It is in three sections, devoted respectively to morning, noon and evening, and seems to be intended to reproduce in tones the impressions created by the contemplation of nature in the mountains. A connection between the first and third sections is formed by their chief themes, that typifying 'Evening' being an inversion of the 'Morning' theme.—At the Lamoureux concert of the same date a symphonic poem by M. J. Jemain (a pupil of César Franck), entitled 'Recits de guerre et d'amour,' made a very favourable impression. At the following concert, on February 25, M. Claude Debussy's 'Nocturnes,' for orchestra, gave rise to a display of violent dissent by a large section of the audience when the others ventured to applaud the strange work.—Yet another new symphonic poem, 'l'Angelus,' was introduced to the frequenters of the Colonne concerts on March 4, and received with marked favour. Its composer is M. Emile Trépard.

PARMA.

'Benvenuto Cellini' is the title of a new opera successfully produced here on February 21, and Angelo Tubis the name of the young composer who, greatly daring, has ventured to choose a subject which has already been touched by the master hand of Hector Berlioz.

PERUGIA.

'Raffaello,' a new opera in three acts, by a new composer, Gisberto di Lunghi, was produced here on February 8. The 'hero' of the work, it is perhaps needless to say, is the great Italian painter. As usual, the local papers speak of an 'enormous success.'

PRESSBURG.

Count Gèza Zichy's new three-act opera 'Nemo,' produced here on February 15, forms the second part of a Rákóczy-trilogy, and has the nameless author (hence the title 'Nemo') of the words of the Rákóczy march for its 'hero.' The music shows many and pronounced national characteristics, as was to be expected in the work of a Hungarian composer dealing with such a 'national' subject.

ST. PETERSBURG.

A monument to Michael Glinka, founder of the Russian School of Music, was unveiled with great pomp and circumstance on February 16, the Grand-duke Constantine delivering the inaugural address. The monument stands on the open space in front of the Imperial Marie Theatre.

WEIMAR.

A new humorous orchestral work, entitled 'Allotria—a carnavalistic-mood picture in the form of an overture'—by Carl Rorich, was produced at the fourth subscription concert of the Grand Ducal Court Orchestra. This very merry work—'Allotria' might be translated 'tomfoolery'—which is based on bright themes, and cleverly suggests the boisterous joie de vivre of a Continental carnival, came as a welcome change from the depressing pessimism so prevalent in modern music, and the composer's success was great in proportion.

MUSIC IN BELFAST.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The season of the Philharmonic Society came to a close on March 9, when a very complete concert performance of Wagner's 'Tannhäuser' was given. The soloists were Miss Lilian Coombes, Miss Ethel Cadman, and Messrs. E. C. Hedmont, Lewys James and Robert Radford, all thoroughly well qualified artists. The chorus work had been most carefully prepared by Dr. Koeller, and the difficult music was sung with much accuracy and spirit. The concert gave very general satisfaction.

The recent Queen's College Chamber Concert was unambitious but interesting. Miss W. Burnett played the Introduction and Adagio religioso from a Violin concerto of Vieuxtemps. Dr. Walker played Schumann's 'Kinderscenen,' and both joined Mr. W. Warburton (a pupil of Herr Fuchs, Manchester) in Brahms's Trio (Op. 40).

The Belfast City Choral Society's second concert took place on March 16 (Mr. Derrick-Large conductor). The principal attraction was the Meister Glee Singers, and minor pieces for the chorus and orchestra were also given.

The Cecilian Ladies' Choir (conductor Mr. F. J. Moffett) gave their annual concert on March 20. No large work was attempted, but a good selection of part-songs was diversified by songs by Miss K. Warwick, and some violoncello solos were cleverly played by Miss Carrodus Taylor.

A series of three subscription chamber concerts, under the direction of Mr. Percy Sharman, has recently been given in the Village Hall, Sundridge, Kent, with such success that we are glad to hear another series is being arranged for next autumn. A correspondent, who is well qualified to report on the matter, writes: 'The concerts have been most successful, with audiences ever increasing in numbers and enthusiasm, the latter being proved by their braving most terrible weather to attend from long distances. It was the first time anything of the kind had been tried in the neighbourhood, and the attempt is very encouraging.' May similar success attend further efforts in the same direction.

The musical competition festival held at Carlisle, February 20 to 22, attracted a large number of competitors. The choirs combined under Mr. Sydney Nicholson to perform Stanford's 'Phauidrig Crohoore,' and Mr. Tertius Noble adjudicated.

At the meeting of the Musical Association held on March 20, the Rev. G. R. Woodward, M.A., read a paper on 'German Hymnody, from the 12th to the middle of the 17th century.' The following is a synopsis of the paper:

Sources: Old Liturgical Hymn Melodies.—Volkslieder.—Minne and Meistersingers.—Foreign Element. Characteristics: Tonality.—Irregular Rhythm.—Peculiar Metres. Authors: Of the Words and Melodies.—Harmonies and Settings. Influence and popularity of the German Chorale.—Causes of Decline (from circa 1660).—Practical considerations.

Illustrations were sung by the Choir of Gray's Inn.

Sir George Martin, Dr. Markham Lee and Mr. Percy Godfrey, the appointed adjudicators by the Worshipful Company of Musicians, have awarded The Gentlewoman £25 prize for an original orchestral composition to Miss Marian Arkwright, Mus. Bac., for a composition entitled 'The winds of the world.' The adjudicators specially commended Miss Edith Sweptstone, Miss Emma Lomax, Miss Susie Spain-Dunk, and Miss Adelaide Thomas, Mus. Bac. Among the twenty-eight competitors was one residing at Montreal, Canada, and also a blind girl.

At Preston, the third competition musical festival was held from February 22 to 24. Many choirs of the best kind came from surrounding districts. The Southport Choir (Mr. W. Tattersall), the Blackpool Female voice section of the Madrigal Society (Mr. H. Whittaker), and the Manchester Orpheus (Mr. Nesbitt), all gained first-prizes in their respective sections. Dr. A. H. Mann and Mr. Dan Price were the adjudicators.

The following awards have been made at the Royal Academy of Music: The Macfarren Scholarship, Composition, to Montague F. Phillips (London); The 'R.A.M. Club' Prize, Composition, to Eleanor C. Rudall (London); The Battison Haynes Prize, Composition, to Ralph Letts (Woodstock); The Goldberg Prize, Baritones and Bases, to Percival F. Driver (Leicester); The Sterndale Bennett Prize to Marjorie Middleton Wigley (Simla, India), Myra Hess being highly commended.

The final competition for Free Open Scholarships at the Royal College of Music resulted in the election of the following candidates:

Pianoforte ..	Adam, Marjorie S. ..	Farnborough.
" ..	Lewis, Idris ..	Swansea.
Singing ..	Kershaw, Dorothea H. ..	Kensington.
" ..	Peach, May A. ..	Sydney, N.S.W.

Flute ..	Murchie, Robert ..	Greenock.
Horn ..	Stephens, Frederick T. ..	Bristol.
Trombone ..	Garvin, Edward T. ..	London.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

ABERDEEN.—The feature of the concert by the Rosemount Parish Church choir on March 16, was a most satisfactory rendering of Coleridge-Taylor's cantata 'The death of Minnehaha.' A small orchestra, led by Mr. J. M. Riach, with Mr. P. Kirby at the pianoforte, played the accompaniments, and the solos were sung by Miss Nellie Millar and Mr. Lewis Middleton. Mr. Alec Hendry conducted.

ASHTON-UNDER-LYNE.—Mr. Albert Fairbairn's third subscription concert was held in the Town Hall on February 27, when Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' and a miscellaneous selection were performed. The latter included the part-songs 'Oh, death, thou art the tranquil night' (Cornelius), 'O happy eyes' (Elgar), and 'Give a rouse,' all of which were excellently rendered by the choir, who likewise sang the choruses in Mendelssohn's cantata with great spirit. The solo vocalists were Miss Mabel Braine, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Charles Bennett. Mr. Fairbairn, who is to be congratulated upon doing good work in the cause of music in this locality, conducted.

BEDFORD.—The Musical Society's concert on February 20 included Stanford's 'Sea Songs,' Dr. Harding's dramatic cantata 'Mucius Scaevola,' and German's Welsh Rhapsody. Under Dr. Harding's direction both chorus and orchestra did their work excellently. Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. William Higley were the solo vocalists.

BOURNEMOUTH.—At the classical concert on March 5 at the Winter Gardens, a new Symphony in E flat, by Mr. William H. Speer, was played for the first time. Laid out in the regulation four movements, it is an able and pleasing work. The programme included Beethoven's 'Leonora' overture No. 3, and the ballet music from the opera of 'Henry VIII.,' by Saint-Saëns. Mr. Dan Godfrey conducted.

CHATBURN.—The newly-formed Chatburn and Downham Choral Society gave their first concert on March 19. The first part of the programme was miscellaneous, and included Dr. Challinor's setting of Tennyson's 'Break, break.' The second part consisted of Elgar's choral ballad 'The banner of St. George,' Mrs. R. C. Assheton taking the solo. The choir acquitted themselves admirably, their tone and phrasing being excellent. Miss Wheeler accompanied, and Mr. F. H. Wood conducted.

COLCHESTER.—Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and Schubert's 'Unfinished Symphony' were rendered in St. James's Church on March 15. The choir of the church sustained the vocal portion admirably, and the Band of the King's Own Scottish Borderers, under the conductorship of Mr. A. J. Wilson, played the instrumental portions. Mr. Charles Wood, organist and choirmaster of the church, presided at the organ.

DUMFRIES.—The Annual Concert of the Dumfries and Maxwelltown Choral Society took place in the Mechanics' Hall on March 14, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from Hiawatha' was performed. The choir gave evidence of careful training by their conductor, Mr. Law Starkey, and displayed excellent tone and expression. They were supported by an efficient local orchestra augmented by members of Mr. W. H. Cole's Glasgow Orchestra. The solo music was, needless to say, admirably sung by Madame Ella Russell, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Charles Tree.

EAGLESCLIFFE.—The Eaglescliffe and District Vocal Society gave its first concert in the Assembly Hall on March 16, when the members gave spirited renderings of Caldicott's 'With horse and hound,' Fanning's 'Song of the Vikings,' Pinsuti's 'We'll gaily sing and play,' and the Bridal Chorus from Cowen's 'Rose Maiden.' The ladies of the choir were also heard in 'Ye banks and braes' and the male voices in 'The three chafers.' Miss Elsie McDermid, Miss Sara James and Mr. S. Hempsall were the solo vocalists, and the Mills-Francis String Quartet also assisted. At the close of the concert Mrs. Whatford, who conducted, and had ably trained the choir, was presented with a purse of gold and an illuminated address, as a token of appreciation by the members.

GUERNSEY.—The annual concerts of the Guille-Allès Choral and Orchestral Associations took place on March 6 and 7. On the first evening Elgar's 'King Olaf' was performed. This fine work had been studied with great enthusiasm by both band and chorus, and was extremely popular with the audience. A good performance of 'Elijah' was given on the second night. Miss Maud Birt, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Harry Death proved most efficient soloists. The concerts were, as usual, conducted by Mr. John David, and the accompaniments were played by Mrs. John Gardner.

HADLEY (Shropshire).—A performance of Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's Wedding Feast' was given on March 9 by the recently-established Philharmonic Society, and the performance of the choir and orchestra (led by Mr. T. E. Clarke) was in every respect satisfactory. The second part included the 'Three Dances' from German's 'Henry VIII.' music, 'There is music by the river' (Pinsuti) and 'The miller's wooing' (Fanning). The principal soloists were Miss H. Molineaux, Mr. D. Ellis, Mr. E. Jones, Mr. T. E. Clarke (violin) and Miss Trevor (pianoforte). Mr. J. Clarke conducted.

LOUGHTON.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Mr. J. H. Adams's cantata 'King Conor' in the Lopping Hall on February 26. A miscellaneous selection included the Pianoforte concerto of Saint-Saëns in G minor (solo, Miss Ethel Mercer). Mr. Henry Riding conducted.

MADELEY.—The Choral Society gave a successful performance of 'St. Paul' on February 26, in the Anstice Memorial Institute, with a band and chorus of over one hundred performers. The principal vocalists were Miss Christine Bywater, Miss Clara Robson, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. W. D. Ineson. The singing of the choir was excellent, and Mr. James Smart (Newport) conducted.

MAIDENHEAD.—The Philharmonic Society's programme, given at the Town Hall on February 27, included Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha,' the solos being sung by Miss Emily Shepherd and Mr. Eaton Cooper. Mr. A. E. Baker conducted.

MALVERN LINK.—The chief attraction of the Musical Society's concert in the Church Institute on February 22 was Elgar's cantata 'The Black Knight,' which was performed for the first time in Malvern, and of which a spirited rendering was given by both choir and orchestra. Mr. E. Harvey conducted.

MATLOCK BANK.—The Matlock and District Choral Union brought a successful season to a close on February 27 in the Victoria Hall, when the first part of their programme consisted of Elgar's 'Banner of St. George.' The choir were assisted by the members of the Matlock Amateur Orchestral Society, and the combined forces, numbering ninety performers, were responsible for an extremely creditable performance. The solo vocalist was Miss May Eaves, and Mr. Carl Ashover conducted.

MERTHYR TYDFIL.—The Merthyr and Dowlais Philharmonic Society gave a performance of Elgar's 'King Olaf' on February 22. This was the first time a work of Elgar's had been done in the district, and it was most gratifying to the Society to note the great appreciation of the cantata by the audience. The choir gave a spirited rendering of the choral music, and the solo parts were sung by Miss Ida Kahn, Mr. William Wild, and Mr. Charles Knowles. A full orchestra selected from Merthyr, Cardiff and Swansea accompanied, and Mr. Harry Evans conducted.

MONMOUTH.—The Monmouthshire Musical Society gave two performances of 'St. Paul' in the Rolls Hall on the evening of the 14th and afternoon of the 15th of March. The choir sang with much intelligence, and both they and the orchestra entered fully into the spirit of the work. The soloists were Madame Siviter, Miss Reid, Mr. Ripley Evans and Mr. Bishop, Mr. Seaton joining in the duet for two basses and in the final quartet. Mr. F. A. Chapple was the organist, and Mr. C. H. Payne conducted.

NEWPORT (MON.).—The Choral Society performed Franco Leoni's cantata 'The gate of life' in the Tredegar Hall on March 22; the work received a sympathetic rendering by the choir and orchestra. The solo vocalists were Madame Alice Esty, Mr. Hamilton Earle and Mr. Gwilym Richards. Mr. Arthur E. Sims conducted.

SCUNTHORPE.—The silver jubilee of the Scunthorpe Choral Society took place in the Public Hall on February 20 and 21. During the twenty-five years of the Society's existence the Rev. E. Mitford Weigall has been president, and, for the first eight years, was conductor. A particularly good performance of the 'Messiah' was given on the first date, the solo vocalists being Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Edith Clegg, Mr. Fred Fallas and Mr. Joseph Lycett. At the second concert the choir achieved considerable success in Parry's 'Blest pair of sirens,' while the orchestra, chiefly local, gave an excellent rendering of German's 'Henry VIII.' music and the overture to 'Carmen.' The same vocalists appeared, and Mr. F. Nicholson conducted.

WELLS.—The Wells Musical Association gave successful performances of Parry's 'Pied Piper' and Stanford's 'Revenge' at their concert on February 27. The choir sang the former work with that enthusiasm which Parry's music always excites, and acquitted themselves admirably; the orchestra, too, though small, did their work in an efficient manner. Equally commendable was the rendering of Stanford's 'Revenge,' in which the choir quite excelled themselves. The soloists in the 'Pied Piper' were Mr. Partridge and Mr. S. Spurrell Groom, and the Rev. Dr. J. H. Davis, Cathedral organist, conducted.

WORTHING.—The Choral Society gave their annual concert on March 14, when Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed. The chorus were very good in attack and precision, the result of careful training by the conductor, Mr. F. D. Carnall. The solo vocalists were Madame Emily Squire, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. Ivor Foster.

Answers to Correspondents.

E. V. S.—Your question is as novel as it is difficult to answer: 'Can you give any quotation in which P.M. (peculiar metre) is used as an abbreviation?' We are afraid we can only say 'No'; but it would be interesting to know who first used this and similar abbreviations in hymn-tune collections. We can trace them back to the 'Psalm Singer's Companion' of Abraham Milner (1751), who therein uses S.M., C.M., L.M. and P.M. On the other hand, Christopher Smart, in his 'Psalms of David' (1765), issued fourteen years later, uses figures only—8, 6, 8, 6; 8, 8, 8, 8, &c. There are many similar things in music of which the origin and earliest uses are little known, and concerning which books of reference, and even histories, &c., are provokingly silent.

E. A. H. C.—Although we have already answered your question (asked by another reader) in a previous issue, we gladly do so again. In Grieg's 'Holberg Suite,' the relative values of the metronomic indications are as follows:

		Ihlengburg.	Maelzel.
Prelude (minim)	...	92	= 76
Rigaudon	...	144	= 126

The 'Holberg Suite,' for string orchestra, in 'ye olden style,' was composed by Grieg in 1884, when the Scandinavians celebrated the 200th birthday of Ludwig Holberg, the founder of modern Danish literature.

G. A. H.—It is not an easy thing to give 'The six most difficult choral works in existence from the point of view of (1) reading and (2) severity of the strain upon the chorus. But with regard to the physical part of your question, Beethoven's Choral Symphony and Mass in D can certainly be named. And the 'difficult' works would probably include Bach's B minor Mass, Brahms's 'Requiem,' Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius,' and Weingartner's eight-part choruses—'The house of dreams' and 'The song of the storm'—produced at the Sheffield Musical Festival of 1905.

S. B. A.—We regret that we are unable to say whether any music publisher would purchase and issue your 'Valse' and 'Prayer and Cradle-song.' As to the 'likely figure of their value, it is equally impossible for us to give even an approximation, and we dare not suggest the 'likely firms' that would be eager to acquire those compositions, even though the Valse has been played (from MS.) at several dances in your neighbourhood. Such a practical appreciation of your muse should, however, encourage you.

H. V. T.—The dates you ask for are as follows:—Théodore Dubois, born at Rosney (Marne), August 24, 1837; César Franck, born at Liège, December 10, 1822, died at Paris, November 8, 1890; Alexandre Guilmant, born at Boulogne, March 12, 1837; Théodore Salomé, born at Paris, January 20, 1834, died at St. Germain, July (or August), 1896.

F. L.—For humorous glees and madrigals suitable for a choir of about thirty voices, see: 'You stole my love' (W. Macfarren); 'To the audience' (Clark); 'The blue-bottle's fate' (Ashworth); 'Three children sliding' (Batson); 'A musical joke' (Horsley); 'A chafer's wedding' (Lewandowski); 'Three merry dwarfs' (Mackenzie) and 'Come, tuneless friends' (Lloyd).

PENDEEN.—Gade has not written any other Trios than Op. 42 and Op. 29 (Novelletten). For Trios of about the same difficulty as Gade's, see those composed by César Franck (four trios), B. Godard (two trios), Sitt, Heubner, Grädener, Frugatta, Kaan, A. Krug, Rheinberger, Rüfer, Smetana, Raff, and Schütt.

A READER.—(1) Schytte's 'Schule des höheren Clavierspiels, Technische Studien bis zur höchsten Ausbildung' is published complete at 10s., or in three books, each 4s., prices net. (2) Have you seen Franklin Taylor's Pianoforte Studies? They are available in two forms. (3) Yes, you may with confidence use Prof. Prout's book on harmony.

EDINA.—Considering your age, it is absolutely necessary to secure, at all costs, a loose and easy method of voice production; all exertion must be wrong. As we do not know anything of your professor, we cannot express an opinion upon the value of his judgment. We hope soon to give a short article on the compass of the contralto voice.

IDOMENEO.—The whereabouts of the prodigy violinist you name is unfortunately unknown to us. No doubt he would be perfectly willing to autographise the portrait of him in your possession. You might perhaps discover his present place of residence by communicating with his concert agent in London (Mr. A. Schulz-Curtius, 44, Piccadilly Circus, W.).

ANJOU.—The professional fees paid to teachers in the 'Pupil Teachers' Centre' which includes candidates for King's Scholarship Examination, vary considerably in different parts of the country, and are fixed by each educational authority.

EDENHALL.—'The Luck of Edenhall' (Uhland's poem, arranged by Hasenclever) has been set to music by Schumann for male voices, soli and chorus and orchestra: it was composed in 1853. The adaptation to English words was made by the late Sir John Stainer.

T. H.—The instrument which 'to all appearance is like a tin funnel and when blown at the neck end produces a musical sound' is unfortunately unknown to us. Does it produce only one sound? and does that one sound resound in its vibrating sweetness?

N. S. K.—You will find the 'Erl-King' information you require in the article 'Schubert's music in England,' which appeared in THE MUSICAL TIMES of February, 1897. Your other question will be answered next month. Thanks for your suggestion.

STUDENT.—As the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians' is being issued at the rate of one volume per annum, the work will probably be completed by the end of 1908. Messrs. Macmillan are the publishers.

HAVICK.—You will find the principles of the Solesmes method of plain-song embodied in 'A Manual of Plain-Song,' edited by Messrs. H. B. Briggs and W. H. Frere (Novello).

W. C. E.—Your full score of the 'Messiah' is not an original edition, as it bears the name of Preston as the publisher: therefore the copy is not of any special intrinsic value.

QUEBEC.—'The Musical Directory,' published annually by Messrs. Rudall, Carte & Co., gives a list of Musical Societies in Great Britain.

E. W. M.—If you feel uncomfortable about the status of the institution you mention, why not prepare for an examination which has an undoubtedly first-rate reputation?

QUAVER.—Bell's chord and ledger line manuscript music paper and the Rapid note-head printing pen for manuscript music are to be obtained from Messrs. Metzler.

J. S. M.—You will probably be able to obtain John Burnham's setting of 'Hosanna' from Messrs. Nicholson & Son, 26, Paternoster Square, E.C.

NAUMANN.—Naumann's 'History of Music' may be read with profit. A note-book type of book is Bonavia Hunt's 'History of Music,' published by Messrs. Bell & Co.

W. E. R.—You would find Stainer's 'Harmony' primer quite suited to your purpose.

G. W.—You would obtain all the necessary information by writing to the bandmaster of the regiment.

J. W. D.—We regret to be unable to trace the publisher of the song entitled 'Muleteer's Evening Song.'

ALFRED R. GAUL'S

PASSION SERVICE

FOR THE SEASON OF
 LENT AND GOOD FRIDAY.

"Scholarly writing, combined with unmistakable talent, and eminently adapted to the purpose for which it was written and composed. The work will probably be largely used, and Mr. Gaul has to be congratulated upon another success."—Sheffield Independent.

"The course of sacred events connected with the Passion is laid out by the writer so as to form a series of six distinct 'scenes.' The subjects of these divisions, each occupied with a particular stage of the Mystery, are respectively—'The Traitor at the Table,' 'The Denial,' 'The Condemnation before Pilate,' 'The Mockery on Calvary,' 'The Shadow of Death,' and 'The Holy Sepulchre.' The style of the composition resembles generally that of Mr. Gaul's previous writings—the same effective, gracefully part-writing, and the same expressive and melodious treatment of the solo voice. In those sections, notably that of the Unjust Condemnation, where the realistic element is predominant, the composer has manifested his ability to write with dramatic force and intensity as well as with lyric charm. In this respect the choral writing distinguished itself in comparison with that in the 'Holy City,' and other of the composer's works. Mr. Gaul has not written new hymn tunes for the author's lyrics; the tunes selected are from among those in ordinary congregational use. Altogether considered, Mr. Gaul's new work will, undoubtedly, greatly enhance his already high reputation in the line of sacred composition."—Musical Standard.

THE COUNCIL SCHOOL HYMN BOOK

A COLLECTION OF HYMNS, WITH PRAYERS,
FOR USE IN COUNCIL SCHOOLS

COMPILED TO MEET THE PARTICULAR NEEDS OF THE NEW EDUCATION
AUTHORITIES ESTABLISHED BY THE ACT OF 1902.

PRICES.

- a.* Words and Tunes with complete Accompaniment, the usual hymnal form, price 2s. 6d.
- b.* The Words with the Melody only (staff and tonic sol-fa notations combined), for the use of the children, price 1s.
- c.* Words only (limp cloth), 6d.

PREFATORY NOTE TO THE MUSIC EDITION.

The music of the Council School Hymn Book has been selected for its melodic interest and general suitability to children's voices. These essentials have been kept steadily in view as regards the new tunes composed expressly for the book, wherein many well-established favourites find a place. It will be observed that some of the tunes appear in lower keys than usual in order that young voices may not be unduly strained.

Every care has been taken to make the music of the book acceptable to teachers as well as children, in the hope that daily hymn-singing may become a specially enjoyable feature of school life.

The Hymns (150) chosen are those of proved value and reputation, including such Hymns as embody principles like the love of country and the duty of good citizenship. New Hymns have been specially written for the book by the Bishop of Durham, Mr. Arthur C. Benson, Dr. T. W. Jex-Blake, and others.

Prayers for the opening and closing of school form an Appendix to the book.

To meet the requirements of Education Authorities the publishers are prepared to issue the book with special name and title for different Councils and localities.

ADDITIONAL HYMNS WITH TUNES

FOR USE WITH

HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN OR ANY OTHER CHURCH HYMNAL.

272 pages, Imperial 16mo. Cloth Boards, price Three Shillings and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Hymns only, Imperial 32mo, Cloth Boards, One Shilling.

Hymns only, medium 32mo, diamond type, cloth, 4d. ; paper, 3d.

Complete edition, bound with HYMNS ANCIENT AND MODERN (Quarto), 7s. 6d. net.

As its name implies, this book is designed for use with, and not in place of, other Church Hymnals.

For this reason the Hymns are numbered from 801, so that the numbers may not interfere with the use of any other hymn book, no other Church hymn book having as many as even seven hundred hymns. Each hymn has its own distinctive tune, and no hymn or tune in this work is found in Hymns Ancient and Modern (Old Edition), so that with the two books no duplication occurs.

NOVELLO'S CHORISTER SERIES OF CHURCH MUSIC.

There are many Churches and some Colleges and Schools where a daily or occasional service is sung by boys only. The "Chorister Series" furnishes the necessary music for such occasions. It includes Responses, Services—Matins, Communion and Evensong, also Wedding and Funeral Services—and Anthems, all specially composed for equal voices. It need hardly be said that the "Chorister Series" meets the requirements of Ladies' Colleges and Schools where a choral service is in vogue.

SCORE-READING EXERCISES

BY
EMILY R. DAYMOND,
D.Mus., Oxon.

THIS book is the outcome of a request made some time ago to the author to write some examples of Exercises in Score-Reading similar to those imposed as tests in the examination for F.R.C.O.

These Exercises (forty-eight in number) comprise two sets of twenty-four examples, each set containing one example in every key, major and minor. The first and easier set is intended to prepare the way for the second, which is of greater complexity.

The author has endeavoured to provide a certain amount of variety both in style and in difficulty, and it is hoped that the Exercises will be of use to candidates for the F.R.C.O. Examination and also to other students who wish to become proficient in Score-Reading.

FRANCESCO BERGER.

(No. 45. Novello's Music Primers and Educational Series.)

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
In Paper Boards, Three Shillings.

The Daily Telegraph says:—"Mr. Francesco Berger has made a useful and therefore valuable contribution to Messrs. Novello's 'Music Primers and Educational Series' in the shape of a manual entitled 'First Steps at the Pianoforte.' Every point is conveyed in the simplest fashion, and every step taken with due care and deliberation, so as to be sure of the ground gained before going another pace ahead. Moreover, typographical devices are employed to force essential facts upon the child's attention. I think this is, on the whole, a very admirable book, calculated to help not only the pupil, but the teacher also."

The Sunday Times says:—"It is more practical, more systematic, more simple for the beginner than any I have yet seen. The exercises and pieces specially prepared are excellent, and the explanation which accompanies every example is written in language that the youngest student may comprehend without further assistance from the teacher."

The Musical Times says:—"Mr. Berger's book is distinctly the best introduction to the pianoforte at present extant."

The Madrigal, one of the highest forms of vocal music, knows no national restrictions—Flanders, Italy, and England making a trio of countries where this art-form brilliantly flourished in the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. The Madrigals by English composers were not only of equal rank with those of other countries, but to England belongs the honour of having produced one of the finest collections ever made, that known as The Triumphs of Oriana, written in praise of Queen Elizabeth, and first published in London in 1601. Although 300 years have come and gone since this rich collection of Madrigals appeared, no modern reprint of the work in a cheap form has hitherto been issued. The present publication therefore attempts to supply this omission, and to place within the reach of all lovers of English choral music these splendid old masterpieces. In addition to The Triumphs of Oriana, other Madrigals by various Foreign and English composers will be included in the series and issued from time to time, thereby forming a large collection that should find acceptance by reason of its artistic worth and practical value.

PREFATORY NOTE.

The Organ Music of the older English composers has for some years been much neglected, owing chiefly to its slight texture and the antiquated character of its registering, which make a literal performance of it unsuited to organs of the present day.

Some of it, however, is too good to be allowed to fall into oblivion. The character of its general outline is in no way destroyed by a judicious modification of details to suit modern requirements.

Probably some of the "filling in" which the thinness of certain passages now seems to demand was actually intended in performance.

The object of the present series is to provide a selection of the best of these pieces, adapted only so far as necessary to make them practicable and effective on modern organs.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

A Modern School for the Violin

BY

AUGUST WILHELMJ AND JAMES BROWN.

THE purpose of this Work is to provide, in one systematic and comprehensive scheme, all that is necessary for the acquirement of the Art of Modern Violin Playing.

"A Modern School for the Violin" will consist of Six Books devoted to Daily Technical Practice, Six Books of Studies for Violin alone, and a large number of Pieces with Pianoforte Accompaniment, the Violin parts being specially edited for the purposes of teaching.

SECTION A.—TECHNICAL PRACTICE. IN SIX BOOKS.

The foundation of "A Modern School for the Violin" is laid by means of a series of Six Books dealing exclusively with the important subject of DAILY TECHNICAL PRACTICE. The First Book of Technical Practice (Book 1A) is limited to the 1st Position; the Second Book (2A) to the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the Third Book (3A) to the first five Positions; and so on. Bowings and other technical devices are introduced in a similarly progressive manner throughout. Each Book of Technical Practice is divided into "Lessons" (or Chapters), and each Lesson contains a number of short repeating Exercises on some definite point of Violin Technique—as Fingering, Bowing, &c., with the needful explanations. Included in each Book will be found a complete set of Scales and Arpeggi, arranged according to the particular stage of advancement reached.

Taken as a whole, this Section is intended to facilitate, and to insist on, a thorough, steady, and continuous progress in the mastery of the Instrument, this being the only possible means of preparing the groundwork for artistic achievement with all its lasting delights.

SECTION B.—STUDIES. IN SIX BOOKS.

Section B is formed of a series of original and selected Studies, in Six Books. Each Book of Studies (Section B) is carefully co-ordinated, in respect of difficulty and range of subject, with the correspondingly numbered Book of Technical Practice (Section A). Thus the First Book of Studies (1B) is written in the 1st Position; the Second Book (2B) in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd Positions; the 3rd Book (3B) in all Positions up to and including the 5th; and so on. It should further be explained that the two Sections are designed to complement one another, and that the "School" must be practised, not in single Books of Technical Practice and Studies alternately, but in pairs. Thus, Books 1A and 1B are to be taken concurrently, then Books 2A and 2B, 3A and 3B, and so on.

FIFTH AND REVISED EDITION.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING 600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists, Member of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, &c.

The scope of this book covers the whole ground of theoretical examinations in music. It supplies an invaluable equipment to candidates entering for the various Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge held periodically throughout the country, and it will be found extremely useful to those who are preparing for the higher grades of Diploma and Degree Examinations.

The book is therefore very comprehensive. Its range includes questions and answers in Theory, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Fugue, Acoustics, Musical History, Organ Construction, and Choir Training.

By no means the least valuable part of the volume is that section, consisting of upwards of one hundred pages, which contains reprints of past examination papers set by the Associated Board, Trinity College, and the Incorporated Society of Musicians; the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, and Durham; The Royal Academy of Music, The Royal College of Music, and The Royal College of Organists. The advantage of having so many specimens of these actual examination papers within one cover is too obvious to need further comment or commendation.

PREFACE TO THE FIFTH EDITION.

In his preface to the revised edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music issued in 1898 the author was indebted to the kindness of Sir L. J. Grant, Bart., B.A., Professor Niecks, Mus. Doc., E. J. Chadfield, Esq., and C. K. Hodgson, Esq., B.A., for the use of the Edinburgh Mus. Bac. Papers, the Literary and Theoretical Paper for candidates in practical subjects for the Professional Grade Examinations of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, and the Optional Music Paper set for the Diploma Examinations of the College of Preceptors. In the 1901 edition he was, through the kindness of Dr. Henry Hiles, enabled to include the Mus. Doc. Papers of the Victoria University, and now, with the issue of the fifth edition of the work, he again desires to express his most sincere obligations to E. J. Chadfield, Esq., for permission to use a selection of the papers of the revised scheme of Local Examination of the Incorporated Society of Musicians; to F. W. Renaut, Esq., for the use of the new paper on Form and Pupil Treatment required of all candidates for the L.R.A.M. Diploma in Pianoforte Playing; to Dr. E. H. Turpin for the use of the new Rudiments of Music paper, and those set on the Art of Teaching for the Higher Theoretical and Practical Examinations of Trinity College (London); and to Dr. H. Frank Heath for permission to give some information regarding the new University of London Examination Scheme.

OLD ENGLISH
VIOLIN MUSIC

EDITED BY

ALFRED MOFFAT.

PREFATORY NOTE.

Although considerable attention has been given to the resuscitation of Church Music, Glee, and Madrigals, Organ and even Harpsichord Music by the older English composers, very little has been done to make known the large mass of music for the Violin written by English musicians from the time of Purcell to the close of the eighteenth century. These works for the most part consist of Suites or Sonatas written for a solo violin with a figured bass, or for two violins and violoncello with a figured bass for the harpsichord or organ; another favourite form was the Concerto grosso.

It is with the object of being known to the public a selection of the best of these compositions that the present series has been undertaken.

MISS EMILY HART

(CONTRALTO).

ROSSINI'S "STABAT MATER."

GRANTHAM PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—"Miss Emily Hart had her opportunity in the cavatina 'Fac ut portem,' which she sang with charming expression and much beauty of tone."—Grantham Journal, March 24, 1906.

LUTON CHORAL SOCIETY.—"Miss Emily Hart proved herself to possess a voice of remarkable range, which enabled her to render her contributions in a manner to which few modern singers usually attain."—Luton Reporter and Beds and Herts News.

"ELIJAH" at LEICESTER (RE-ENGAGEMENT).

"Miss Emily Hart employed a voice of a particularly pleasing quality of tone to excellent effect in several favourite numbers, notably the lovely air, 'O rest in the Lord.'"—Leicester Daily Post, April 3, 1906.

"Miss Emily Hart possesses a rich contralto voice, over which her artistic renderings showed evidence of fine command."—Halifax Courier, Feb. 16, 1906.

Castlegate, Newark-on-Trent.

Of the Royal Choral Society, Queen's Hall Symphony and Promenade Concerts, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace Concerts, Glasgow Choral Union, Belfast Philharmonic Society, &c.

Telegrams—"SOLOIST, LONDON." Telephone—519 (P.O.) HAMPSTEAD.

"EVERYMAN," SHEFFIELD.

"Mr. Borwell was the most satisfying soloist. In tone, phrasing, and interpretation he realized the part, singing with searching point and sincerity."—Sheffield Daily Telegraph, March 28, 1906.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERT.

STRAUSS'S "TAILLEFER" AND BEETHOVEN'S CHORAL SYMPHONY (WITH LEEDS CHOIR).

"The solos in 'Taillefer' were sung by — and Mr. Montague Borwell, the last of whom did full justice to the most important part of the three. In the Choral Symphony the soloists sang in a creditable way, and Mr. Borwell gave the recitative with fine feeling."—The Times (London), March 5, 1906.

"ELIJAH," BUCKHAVEN.

"The star of the evening was, however, Mr. Montague Borwell. He sang independently of the book, and from the very outset delighted the ear and arrested the eye. He was thoroughly at home in the work—a master interpreting a master, but charmingly natural and unaffected. Equally in sympathy with the music in the soft or the fiery and vigorous arias, he rose to the occasion when he reached the solo 'Is not His word,' prolonged applause rewarding the fine effort."—Evening Advertiser, March 22, 1906.

AND

MISS WINIFRED MARWOOD

(Mrs. Montague Borwell—SOPRANO).

Of the Royal Albert Hall, Alexandra Palace, Crystal Palace, and Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, &c.

"MESSIAH," BRIGHTON.

"Miss Marwood's voice has a very pleasing richness of tone. She sang the various numbers that fell to her share in brilliant style; and the air 'Rejoice greatly,' which is generally recognised as a fairly severe test of a vocalist's abilities, was given in a manner which evoked a cordial demonstration."—Brighton Gazette, April 14, 1906.

"Miss Winifred Marwood sang the soprano solos, and won the favour of the audience by the sweet brilliant tone and artistic finish which she imparted to the 'Pastoral' recitatives. Her rendering of the bravura air 'Rejoice greatly' was a stirring piece of vocalization which elicited enthusiastic applause, and she was very impressive in her tender and devotional singing of 'Come unto Him.' In the second part she was no less effective in the air 'I know that my Redeemer liveth,' which she invested with beautiful tone and superb expression."—Southern Weekly News, April 14, 1906.

"BRIDE OF DUNKERRON," LEAMINGTON.

"The other principal vocalist was Miss Winifred Marwood, who possesses a beautiful soprano voice. Amongst her individual efforts the aria 'Our home shall be on this bright isle' was charmingly rendered, while in the duets both vocalists distinguished themselves."—Leamington Spa Courier, December 9, 1905.

"ELIJAH," WESTCLIFF.

"In 'Hear ye, Israel' Miss Winifred Marwood was heard to marked advantage, and her recit. and duet with Mr. Borwell ('What have I to do with thee?') was most effective."—Echo, April 11, 1906.

Address: 48, Dyne Road, Brondesbury, N.W.; or, c/o Daniel Mayer, Chatham House, George Street, Hanover Square, W.

Telephone—519 (P.O.) HAMPSTEAD.

"THE APOSTLES."—BIRMINGHAM FESTIVAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

Artists: Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Madame Marie Brema, Mr. John Coates, Mr. Francis Braun, Mr. James Coleman, and Mr. D. Ffrangcon-Davies.

Of this concert, the Birmingham Daily Mail, April 7, 1906, says: "One of the best performances of the evening was Mr. James Coleman's fine portrayal of St. Peter. His voice told wonderfully well, not a note being lost to the ear; indeed, he has not been heard here to greater advantage."

Daily Post:—"Mr. James Coleman delivered the passages assigned to St. Peter with fine tone and true expression, and was very impressive in the scene of The Denial."

BRHMS'S "REQUIEM."—STOURBRIDGE CONCERT SOCIETY.—"Mr. James Coleman gave a very good account of himself in his solos, being particularly impressive in 'Lord, make me to know.' He has a fine rich voice, which he used with good judgment."—The County Times, April 7, 1906.

"ST. JOHN'S EVE."—NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE POSTAL TELEGRAPH CH. SOC.—"Mr. James Coleman sang the baritone music with considerable ability."—Yorkshire Post, March 30, 1906.

ARTISTIC PIANOFORTE PLAYING.

By means of a simple CORRESPONDENCE COURSE of Pianoforte Technique, I am able to ensure

PERFECT TOUCH AND TONE,

LOOSENESS, STRENGTH AND CONTROL OF FINGERS AND WRISTS,

EASE AND CERTAINTY IN OCTAVE PLAYING.

The following REPORTS prove the value of my METHOD, details of which will be sent upon receipt of a stamped and addressed envelope.

FROM A L.R.A.M. AFTER SIX WEEKS' STUDY.

"Your exercises and apparatus are splendid, and their use is greatly improving my technique. The control exercises are most valuable."

FROM A PUPIL AFTER A FEW WEEKS' STUDY.

"I beg to report great improvement in looseness and control of fingers and wrists, and in the quality of the touch and tone. The ease and certainty with which I can now play octaves is wonderful. The difference in playing has astonished my friends."

HEINRICH BECKER, Room 9, 68, Victoria Street, London, S.W.

(FOUNDED 1741).

THE MADRIGAL SOCIETY offers TWO PRIZES, being the "Molineux Prize" of TEN POUNDS, with the Society's Medal, and the "Society's Prize" of FIVE POUNDS for the best and second best APPROVED MADRIGALS, in not less than four, nor more than six parts, the upper part or parts to be for one or two Treble Voices.

The character of the Composition to be in accordance with that of Madrigals of the best style and form, with imitative part-writing; not a mere Part-Song or harmonised Melody.

The following conditions must be complied with, viz. :—

1. That the Alto and Tenor parts be written in their respective clefs;
2. That the signature be repeated at the head of each page at least;
3. That the intended "Tempo" be clearly indicated;
4. That the words, to be selected by the Composer, be written out in full on a fly-leaf at the beginning; and
5. That not more than one Composition be submitted by each competitor, which must not be in the Composer's autograph.

The Madrigals to be delivered, addressed to the Secretary of the Madrigal Society, Woodside, Caterham, Surrey, on or before October 1, 1906, each Composition having a device or motto affixed thereto, with the Composer's name in a sealed envelope bearing a corresponding mark.

The Award of the Judges will be made known at the meeting of the Society in December, 1906.

ST. JOHN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

In the 16th century a London merchant dreamed a dream in which he saw a tree which should mark the site of a college he intended to bring into existence. Long he searched for it, until one day, as he chanced to ride along Northgate Street (now St. Giles's Street), Oxford, he saw in a great elm, out of whose single root grew three trunks, the tree of his dream. An old man, Triplet by name and a mason by trade, held the bridle while the generous-minded merchant dismounted and gave thanks to God for his discovery. This tradition—and traditions are not to be despised even in this sceptical age—of the origin of St. John's College, Oxford, is recorded by Griffin Higgs, who, early in the 17th century, wrote a biography of the founder, Sir Thomas White, merchant taylor, alderman, and Lord Mayor of the City of London. 'The tree of his dream' stood in front of buildings which had been erected in 1437 by Archbishop Chichele, founder of All Souls' College, and they formed a house for the Cistercian monks, dedicated by Chichele to St. Bernard of Clairvaux. At the dissolution of the monasteries in 1539, St. Bernard's College, with all its buildings, gardens, enclosures, &c.—excepting the bells and lead, which possibly the king sold for his own benefit—was granted by Henry VIII. to his new house of Christ Church, in 1546. 'The new foundation of Christ Church,' says Mr. Hutton, in his interesting history of the College, 'was not sorry to part with a property, probably useless to itself, to the rich merchant who wished to become a patron of learning.* Thus, through the munificence of Sir Thomas White, the old house of the Bernardines became the College of St. John Baptist in the University of Oxford, the date of its foundation being May 1, 1555; on January 18, 1567, the Chancellor incorporated the College in the University.

A connecting link with the past is seen in the statue of St. Bernard placed above the gateway. The chapel and hall are on the north side of the first quadrangle. Built in 1520, the hall retains its original open-work roof. Above the chimney-piece is a painting on scagliola from Raffaele's beautiful picture of St. John preaching, now in the Tribuna of the Uffizi, Florence, executed by Lamberto Gorio and presented in 1759. Portraits of the Founder, Laud, Sir William Paddy, Dr. John Case (of whom more anon), George III. (painted at his coronation by Ramsay), and others adorn the walls. The chapel, of later date (1530), was 'thoroughly grimthorped'—to adopt Mr. Hutton's phraseology—at the early Victorian restoration. The altar was formerly decorated by a piece of tapestry—now in the President's lodgings—'after a picture of Titian, representing our Saviour with His two disciples at Emmaus, attended by a servant. The figures are said to be the portraits of the then Pope, the Kings of France and Spain, and Titian.' 'The curious observer (to quote further from the 'Oxford University and City Guide' of 1781) will not overlook the dog snarling at the cat under the table!' Under the altar rest the remains of the founder (Sir Thomas White) and Archbishop Laud. The Baylie Chapel—built in 1662 by Richard Baylie, a former president—contains the great monument, with its coloured effigies, to Sir William Paddy, a musical benefactor to St. John's.

THE OLD QUADRANGLE, SHOWING, ON THE RIGHT, THE HALL AND CHAPEL.
(Photograph by Mr. J. Soame, Oxford.)

An important and picturesque addition was made to the College buildings between the years 1631 and 1636, by the erection of the second or 'Canterbury' quadrangle. This addition, which has long been considered one of the architectural glories of Oxford, was due to the munificence of Laud, a former member and president, the total cost being £3,208 4s. 3d. In a letter to Laud, the College said: 'If their gratitude were mute, the very stones of their College would, like the statue of Memnon commemorated by Tacitus, give forth music to his glory.' The colonnades, or piazzas, on the west and east sides of this quadrangle, claim special attention. Designed in the style of the Renaissance, these colonnades are decorated with figures representing religion, charity, hope, faith, temperance, fortitude, justice, and truth (on the west side): astronomy, architecture, music, poetry, mathematics, philosophy, rhetoric, and literature (on the east side)—'true religion' face to face with 'sound learning.' Life-size bronze statues of Charles I. and his Queen, by Herbert le Sueur, the most famous sculptor of the day, at a cost of £400, are outstanding features of this quadrangle. And what shall be said of the famous garden front? The photograph on p. 305 will furnish some answer to this question: but this beautiful attribute of St. John's College must be seen to be fully appreciated. And then the charming gardens! 'In these delightful, pleasant groves,' under the varied conditions of spring, summer, and autumn, their verdant loveliness never fails to charm.

The Library of St. John's College is of supreme interest. It consists of two rooms at right-angles—the old library, finished in 1597, which forms the south side of the inner quadrangle, and the new library, a part of Laud's addition, on the east side. The fine, timbered roof of the older portion recalls that of Durham Cathedral library. Any attempt at even an enumeration of the precious tomes here preserved would exceed the limits of this article. The collection is specially strong in Caxtons—e.g., the only perfect copy in existence of Chaucer's 'Canterbury Tales' (2nd edition, 1484?), with the cuts painted, probably by some childish hand; also 'The Chronicles of England' (Folio) 'Emprynted by me William Caxton in the abbey of Westmynstre,' first edition, with short commas, 1480; and 'Curia Sapientiae, or the Court of Sapience,' folio, c. 1481. On the shelves is one of the two known copies of the 'Parvus et Magnus Catho,' by Burgh (3rd edition, 1481?), in addition to the 'Polychronicon' (34 leaves missing), 'Quatuor Sermones' (a perfect Caxton), 'Troilus and Criseide,' &c.

The large copy of the Second Folio Shakespeare was presented to the College in 1637, five years after its publication, and in 1620 Laud gave the 'Liber Hymnorum Secundum Morem et Consuetudinem Ecclesiae Sarum,' with the pricked notes for singing. Here is also a copy of the 'Sarum Processional' printed by J. R. Pynson, at 'signo georgii in Fletestrete,' in 1502;* Wickliffe's Bible in an early revision; the original Prayer-Book of Edward VI. (1549); the 'Whole Law of God, Moral, Ceremonial, and Political, reduced under proper and distinct heads: done at Little Gidding in the county of Huntingdon.' The last-named book—probably presented by Laud—is bound in purple velvet stamped with gold. The illustrations, cut from various prints and engravings, are ingeniously fitted to the text, which is a concordance or arrangement of the Mosaic law, formed of verses pasted on to small folio sheets. Specially worthy of notice are the MS. Bestiaries, with gold leaf and minute illuminations. In regard to bindings, there are fine specimens of Grolier and Stephanos, in addition to the dainty Gascon work of 'The Pourtraiture of His Sacred Majestie in His Solitudes and Sufferings' (Charles I.), the polished morocco covers, mosaicked in different hues, and bearing intricate designs traced in gold, the leaves painted to exactly imitate the binding.

The Laudian relics naturally attract attention—the skull-cap which fell from the Archbishop's head at the scaffold; the ivory and ebony walking-stick he took to his execution; and his neatly-written diary. The last-named—a little octavo book bound in red morocco—lies open at the year 1630, and we read, under date of 'Maij 29, Saturdaye'—

Prince Charles was born at St. James's, Paulō ante horam primam post Meridiem. I was in the house 3 Houres before, and had ye honour and ye happiness to see the Prince before he was full one houre olde.

There is a tradition that on stormy winter nights strange sounds are heard in this Library, and that they are well known to proceed from Charles I. and Laud who, up and down, are playing a game of bowls with their own heads!

A relic of the Stuart days is a cannon-ball fired into the gateway tower of the College during the siege by the rebel forces. Of more peaceful purport are the twelve or more ancient vestments, of which a purple velvet cope woven with gold and richly embroidered with figures of saints, is the chief treasure. Among the portraits in the library is the curious one of Charles I., with the penitential Psalms written in a minute hand in the lines of the hair and face. It is said that Charles II., at his visit to the College in 1663, asked for this picture, a request that could not be refused. But when he thanked the Society for its loyal reception of him, and inquired what he could do for them in return, they requested that he would restore to them the portrait, which never left the building!

And this leads us to refer to the other royal visits that have been paid to St. John's College. The first was that of King James I., his Queen, and Prince Henry, in 1605, on which occasion Dr. Gwynne's comedy 'Vertumnus' was played before his Majesty with somnolent results:

It was acted much better than either of the others that he had seen before, yet the King was so over-wearied [he had had a long day of disputation and feasts] that after a while he distasted it and fell asleep. When he awaked he would have been gone, saying, 'I marvel what they think me to be,' with such other like speeches, showing his dislike thereof. Yet he did tarry till they had ended it, which was after one of the clock.

* Pynson was the first typographical artist to introduce the Roman letter into England.

In 1636 Charles I. inaugurated the new building erected by Laud. After the Convocation the King joined the Queen in her coach 'and they went away to St. John's to dinner, the princes and nobles attending them.' Laud tells us that :

'When they were come to St. John's, they first viewed the new building, and that done, I attended them up the library stairs ; where so soon as they began to ascend, the music began, and they had a fine short song fitted for them as they ascended the stairs. In the library they were welcomed to the college with a short speech made by [Abraham Wright] one of the fellows.' The

St. John's College, Oxford, has long been noted for its dramatic propensities. Three hundred years ago, in the days of good Queen Bess, Christmas plays were performed by those undergraduates who, more or less weather-bound and financially frozen, were unable to go 'down' for the winter vacation. One of these pieces, called 'The Christmas Prince' (the MS. is still preserved), 'describes and records a whole series of revels and plays, depending upon the custom of choosing a lord of misrule from among the undergraduates, who should hold sway during the whole period, often greatly prolonged, of the

THE OLD LIBRARY.

(Photograph by Messrs. Hills and Saunders, Oxford.) said 'short speech'—afterwards published as 'A copy of verses,' &c.—began :

Were they not Angells sang, did not mine eares
Drink in a sacred Anthem from yon spears ?
Was I not blest with Charles and Maries name,
Names wherein dwells all musick ? tis the same.
Hark, I myself now but speak Charles and Mary,
And 'tis a poem, nay 'tis a library.

No record seems to exist of the music sung while the royal party ascended the library stairs : it may sincerely be hoped that it was of better quality than Mr. Abraham Wright's poetry. The visit of Charles II. in 1663 (already referred to) and, later on, of George III., are among those paid by royalty to the College.

Christmas festivities' (Hutton). Thus it was that, in 1602, the College porter, pleading for the admission of players on Twelfth Night, could say :

Christmas is now at the point to bee past ;
'Tis giving vp the ghost and this is the last ;
And shall it passe thus without life or cheere ?
This hath not bene seene this many a yeere.

A much more important display of dramatic talent is associated with the visit of King Charles I. in 1636, already mentioned. A monarch of whom it was said 'plays were still deemed to be the fittest amusement for him,' Charles, on this occasion (the opening of the new building) was sumptuously entertained by Laud at a total expense of £2,666. At the dinner 'the baked meats were so contrived by the cook that there was first the forms of archbishops, then bishops, doctors, &c., seen in order, wherein the King and courtiers took much content: and then followed the Play. To quote Laud's own words:

When dinner was ended, I attended the king and the queen, together with the nobles, into several withdrawing chambers, where they entertained themselves for the space of an hour. And in the meantime I caused the windows of the hall to be shut, the candles lighted, and all things made ready for the play to begin. When these things were fitted, I gave notice to the king and the queen, and attended them into the hall, whither I had the happiness to bring them by a way prepared from the president's lodging to the hall without any the least disturbance; and had the hall kept as fresh and cool, that there was not any one person when the king and queen came into it. The princes, nobles, and ladies entered the same way with the king, and then presently another door was opened below to fill the hall with the better sort of company, which being done, the play was begun and acted. The plot was very good, and the action. It was merry and without offence, and so gave a great deal of content. In the middle of the play, I ordered a short banquet for the king, the queen, and the lords. And the college was at that time so well furnished, as that they did not borrow any one actor from any college in town. The play ended, the king and the queen went to Christ Church, retired and supped privately, and about eight o'clock went into the hall to see another play, which was upon a piece of a Persian story. It was very well penned and acted, and the strangeness of the Persian habits gave great content; so that all men came forth from it very well satisfied. And the queen liked it so well, that she afterwards sent to me to have the apparel sent to Hampton Court, that she might see her own players act it over again, and see whether they could do it as well as it was done in the university. I caused the university to send both the clothes and the perspectives of the stage; and the play was acted at Hampton Court in November following. And by all men's confession the players came short of the university actors. Then I humbly desired of the king and the queen, that neither the play nor clothes nor stage might come into the hands and use of the common players abroad, which was graciously granted.

From College plays to social customs is an easy transition. The Founder evidently thought that quietness and decorum should prevail in college. For instance, 'Cantica in privatis cubiculis' were forbidden, as indeed was football—'pila pedalis prohibita.' In the bedchambers no one should disturb his neighbour by 'immoderate clamour, laughter, noise, song, leaping, or the striking of musical instruments,' though music was not under a ban at feast-days, when 'songs were to be sung.' Each chorister or scholar had to sleep with a Master or bachelor Fellow, 'that he might serve him in all things lawful and honest.' Among the College disbursements of the year 1583 we find:

'Commons' in the year 1769 are shown by the following extract from Mr. Hutton's history of the College:

At 'Fryd. Dinr.' Dr. Henbourn, Dr. Thorp, and Mr. Cure had veal and bacon at 1s. 8d. & roots & butter 4d. On Saturday they had Harslet and apple sauce, which cost 2s. 8d.; on Monday a lamb's head, spinach, and butter for 2s. 10d. It was vacation, and only three undergraduates, Speed, Farraine, & Hall, seem to have been 'up.' They dined well on Sunday on 'roast veal, butter, &c.,' for 3s., a shilling each. Mr. Clare paid for his dinner on Tuesday	£	s.	d.

while others were faring more simply together for 3s. 4d.

In case any reader of THE MUSICAL TIMES may feel disposed to 'try' Harslet for dinner, it may be useful to give Dr. Johnson's description of that comestible: 'the heart, liver, and lights of a hog, with the windpipe and part of the throat to it.' But it might be as well not to forget the apple sauce as an accompaniment to this dainty dish. Among the College stories is one concerning a defence of tandem-driving, 'which,' says Mr. Hutton, 'drew forth from a famous Bishop of Oxford a witty comparison of the difference between placing the hands side by side and stretching one in front of the other, the nose taking the position of the dog-cart behind the tandem horses.'

In addition to Archbishops Laud and Juxon, St. John's claims among its alumni other distinguished men, including the Rev. Dr. Thomas Frognall Dibdin, the eminent bibliographer and a nephew of the famous composer of sea songs. Another name in connection with music must also be mentioned, Dr. John Case, author of a book of which the following is a facsimile of the title-page:

THE GARDEN FRONT.

[Mr. J. Saunt, Oxford.]

This book is dedicated by the printer 'To the Right Worshipful Sir Walter Rawley (Raleigh) Knight': the printer subscribes himself 'From Oxenford, your worship's most humble at commandment, Joseph Barnes,' and calls the book 'an Orphan of one of Lady Musicke's children.' Dr. John Case begins 'The Preface to the Reader' in these words :

True it is, which is reported of poets and musitions, that they are no otherwise affected toward their own devices, than parents toward their children. And surely (gentle reader), I willingly confesse unto thee, that I am glad I have some skill in musicke, which is so sweete, so good, so vertuous, so comely a matrone among other artes. Wherefore I shal not justly blame thee if thou think that love and affection hath prevailed much with me in publishing of this pamphlet : for therein thou shalt give testimonie unto me, that I have performed the part of a kinde and gratefull sonne, in bestowing the best of mine abilitie to the advancing of so gracious a mother. Neither would I have thee so much to stand upon this conceit, as if reason had no place in this action: considering that affection without reason is a blind and unjust judge of any matter. May it therefore please thee, no otherwise to judge of my labour than the reasons therein alleaged shall give thee just occasion : and if it happen thou come to the viewe hereof with a prejudice, yet consider that nature hath therefore given thee two eares, that thou shouldest as well applie the one to the defendent, as the other to the plaintife.

Thomas Watson (1557?-1592), the poet, wrote 'A gratification vnto Mr. John Case, for his learned Booke, lately made in the prayse of Musick.' The first of the four stanzas of his poem reads :

Let others praies what likes them best,
I like his lynes aboue the rest,
Whose pen hath paynted Musick's praies :
By nature's lawe by wisdom's rule,
He soundly blames the scencelesse foole,
And bab'rous Scithian of our dayes.

Moreover, these words were set to music, in the form of a six-voice madrigal, by William Byrd. So far as we have at present discovered, only one part—the Cantus Secundus—is known, and that, printed on a single sheet, is in the University Library, Cambridge. Can any of our readers throw any light upon the whereabouts of the remaining five parts of Byrd's madrigal?

Before he gained a scholarship (in 1564) at St. John's College, John Case was a chorister at New College and Christ Church. He had the reputation of being 'the most noted disputant and philosopher that ever before set foot in the College.' Another product of his pen, but in Latin, is entitled 'Apologia Musices tam vocalis quam instrumentalis et mixtæ' (1588): this little tome, of which there is a copy in the British Museum, was also printed at Oxford. Dr. John Case died January 23, 1600, and his remains were interred in the College.

Coming to our own times, and before referring to matters strictly musical, the place of honour, in regard to distinguished alumni, must be given to the venerable President of the College, the Rev. James Bellamy, D.D., who has held that important office with distinction since the year 1871. A former student and fellow of the College, of which he has been a member for the long period of sixty-nine years, Dr. Bellamy is the most musical Head of any House in Oxford. His library contains such treasures as complete editions in full score of Bach, Handel, Beethoven, Mozart, Haydn, and other composers. Another alumnus who fully deserves mention is the Rev. William Holden Hutton, B.D., Fellow, Tutor, and Precentor, and formerly Librarian of the College. To the outside world Precentor Hutton is best known as a historian—e.g., his Life of Laud, &c.—but, as Dr. Iliffe, organist of the College, says, 'he is one of the most charming men you could come across in a year's march. He is deservedly loved by all the choristers. Every vacation he has the boys at his lovely "Great House" at Burford, where they enjoy fishing, boating, shooting, cricket, &c., to their little hearts' content.'

Three years after the College had been founded, provision was made (in 1558) for six choristers at a salary of £4 6s. 8d. each, and 'three singing men, whereof one to be an organ player,' each of whom received £6 13s. 4d. per annum. In 1577, by reason of the poverty of the College and by 'general consent of the Fellows, the removal of the Quire, chaplain, clerks, and choristers' was ordered; the musical service, however, had a friend in John Lee, who, by his will in 1609, left the sum of £70 towards 'the restoration of the College Quire, whensoever it shall be.' Another St. John's man, Sir William Paddy (1554-1634), 'esteemed one of the prime physicians of his time' and the King's doctor to boot, was a munificent benefactor to the College. He bequeathed upwards of £3,000, which, through investments, provided for 'a skilful organist, with eight singing men and four choristers.' At the present time the services are of cathedral type, with a strong preference for Purcell in the selection of the music. The choir consists of twelve choristers and six lay-clerks: the boys are educated at the High School, Oxford, of which Mr. A. W. Cave, M.A., is the head-master.

The earliest mention of an organ appears in the year 1618, when Sir William Paddy gave 'a pneumatic organ of great cost,' and in the same year the organ loft was built with Dr. Lee's legacy. Nothing is known of the builder or the specification of this instrument, which was placed on the north side of the chapel—presumably where the Baylie chapel now stands—and 'a window was taken down to set it [the organ] up.' In 1766 a new organ was built by John Byfield to the following specification :

The above work to be put into a neat Wainscot case with proper carving, with new soundboard movements, rolling-boards, bellows, and other requisites, with two sets and a half of keys.

The compass from double G, short octaves (sic), up to D; and the swell from G below the middle of the keys to D.

The front pipes to be gilt with the best leaf of gold; to be completed in a workmanlike manner, and to be put up in the Chappell for the sum of Three hundred pounds, allowing £100 for the old organ.

On August 22 of the same year :

It was agreed that the sexquiltera of the old organ should be retained, as being an extreme good one, and y<sup>e</sup> Treble Trumpet made by Mr. Byfield's father should likewise be put into y<sup>e</sup> new organ.

The new organ, which seems to have been completed in the spring of 1769, was regarded as a splendid and 'show' instrument; and so it ought to have been to justify the following testimony to its merits and capabilities as expressed by eight leading organists of the day. This is what they said :

To the President and Fellows of St. John's College, Oxford.

This is to certify that wee, whose names are under written, have Tried and do Approve the New Organ made by Messrs. Byfield & Green to be a Compleat, Sound, and Fine Toned Instrument.

An additional expense was incurred when the organ was erected, as set forth in a London tradesman's little bill, thus made out and duly discharged :

The present organ—located at the west end of the chapel—does not call for detailed remark, the more especially as there is a project on foot to obtain an instrument more worthy of Sir Thomas White's old Foundation, and the services which enter so largely into its daily life.

The first recorded organist of the College was John Firth, Bachelor in Music in the year 1626, when he was required to compose a piece of music in seven parts for the attainment of his degree. As he died in 1644, he is probably the organist who is thus mentioned in the College 'Expences' of 1636:

Mr. John S. Bumpus possesses an old oblong organ-book (MS.), formerly in use at St. John's College, which he has kindly placed at our disposal for this article. The music is written throughout on a six-line stave. On pages 75-91 we find 'Mr. ffriths morning & evening service,' in the key of G, which includes a setting of the 'Lettany,' Creed, and Ferial Responses. Following the 'Lettany' is the direction 'The Creed followes, over ye leafe.'

The next name on the list is Robert Lugg (or Lugge) who took his Bachelor of Music degree in 1638, to obtain which he had to compose a Canticum in five parts 'to be sung in the Music School.' A brother of John Lugg, organist of Exeter Cathedral early in the 17th century, Mr. Robert Lugg, 'changed his religion for that of Rome, and went beyond the seas.' In a letter concerning John Lugg, addressed to Sir Thomas Lake, Secretary to the Privy Council, the then Bishop of Exeter says: 'He [i.e. John Lugg] confesseth that his busy brother (brought up at Lisbon) waded up to the chin in this puddle [i.e., the Roman faith], but as far as I can perceive this Lugg never waded to the arms.' Reference must again be made to Mr. Bumpus's interesting book for further Luggiana. A short anthem by Lugg, beginning 'Lord, we beseech Thee,' is headed 'five notes higher.' A longer anthem begins 'Let my complaint,' while 'Rob. Luggs service'—Morning and Evening and Litany—is superscribed 'four parts altogether,' another form of the word 'full.' There is also a setting by this composer of 'I am ye resurrection,' headed 'a 4 vox.'

A better known name than either of the foregoing is that of William Ellis (Mus.B. in 1639), who had previously been organist of Eton College. He held a similar office at St. John's before and after the Restoration, being expelled at the Rebellion and reinstated in 1660. Ellis, who died in 1674, is represented in the old MS. organ-book by three anthems: 'Almighty God' and 'This is ye record of John,' both 'for St. John the Baptist Day,' the latter composition is 'for a Tennor alone.' Another anthem by him is a setting of 'O Lord our Governour.' It may be convenient at this point to complete Mr. Bumpus's book in regard to matters unconnected with the College. A Te Deum on p. 45 is headed 'Strogers altogether'; a setting, by 'Mr. Hen. Lawes' of 'Zadock ye priest' is inscribed 'as it stands,' in other words 'not to be transposed,' a similar direction being given to an anthem 'Hyde not thou thy face.' There is the Burial Service (in D minor) by 'Mr. Morley'; and a Te Deum and Jubilate (also in D minor) by 'Mr. Wilkes,' or 'Mr. Weelkes, each spelling appearing at the beginning and ending of the service respectively; and there are two anthems, 'Consider and heare me, O Lord' and 'Sing unto ye Lord,' by 'Mr. Robert Pickhaver,' organist successively of New College, Oxford, and Winchester College.

To return to William Ellis, who, in addition to the anthems mentioned above, contributed some rounds and catches to Hilton's collection, 'Catch who catch can' (1652). If we dip into the interesting and informing biography of the antiquary Anthony à Wood (1632-95), we find that 'after cathedrals and organs were put down in the grand Rebellion, Ellis kept up a weekly meeting in his house opposite the place where the Theatre was afterwards built, which kept him and his wife in a comfortable condition. The meeting was much frequented and many Masters of Musick were there, and such as had belonged to choirs, being out of all employ, and therefore to the meeting, as all other musick meetings, did flourish.' Wood, who himself says that he 'had some genuine skill in musick,' has left a full account of these gatherings. He begins by recording the names of those who, like himself, attended them. The first on the list is 'Joh. Cock, M.A., Fellow of New Coll. by the Authority of the Visitors,' as he puts it, who, 'marrying with one of the Woodwards of Woodstock, lived an uncomfortable Life with her.' After referring to other amateurs and their musical accomplishments, but avoiding matters matrimonial, the genial gossipier continues:

The musick masters, who were now in Oxon. and frequented the said meeting, were:

(1) Will. Ellis, bach. of musick, owner of the house wherein the meeting was. He alwaies play'd his part either on the organ or virginal.

(2) Dr. Joh. Wilson, the public professor, the best at the lute in all England. He sometimes play'd on the lute, but mostly presided the consort.

(3) - - - Curteys, a lutinist, lately ejected from some chaire or cath. church. After his majestie's restoration he became gent. or singing-man of Ch. Church in Oxon.

(4) Tho. Jackson, a bass-violist; afterwards one of the chaire of S. John's coll. in Oxon.

(5) Edw. Low, organist lately of Ch. Church. He play'd only on the organ; so when he performed his part, Mr. Ellis would take up a counter-tenor viol, and play, if any person were wanting to performe that part.

(6) Gervace Littleton aliàs Westcot, or Westcot aliàs Littleton, a violist. He was afterwards a singing man of S. John's coll.

(7) Will. Glexney, who had belonged to a chaire before the warr. He was afterwards a gent. or singing-man of Ch. Ch. He playd well upon the bass-viol, and sometimes sung his part. He died 6 Nov. 1692, aged 79 or thereabouts.

(8) - - - Proctor, a yong man and a new commer. He died soon after, as I shall tell you anon.

John Parker, one of the universitie musitians, would be sometimes among them; but Mr. Low, a proud man, could not endure any common musitian to come to the meeting, much less to play among them. Among these I must put Joh. Haselwood an apothecary, a starch'd formal clisterpipe, who usually play'd on the bass-viol, and sometimes on the counter-tenor. He was very conceited of his skil (tho he had but little of it) and therefore would be ever and anon ready to take up a viol before his betters: which being observed by all, they usually call'd him, Handlewood.

A hurried survey of the succeeding organists must be made: for fuller details the reader is referred to Mr. John E. West's book 'Cathedral Organists,' which includes a register of the organists of Colleges. For more than a hundred years pluralism prevailed among the holders of the office, e.g., Thomas Norris, Dr. Philip Hayes, Dr. Crotch, William Cross, Dr. Marshall and Dr. Stephen Elvey, all of whom held, concurrently with St. John's, other appointments in Oxford. Of the foregoing, Dr. Philip Hayes was such a huge man that he gained the nickname of 'Fill chaise,' because his unwieldy person occupied all the seating accommodation in that mode of conveyance; and Dr. Stephen Elvey had a cork leg!

Dr. Frederick Iliffe, the present organist, was born at Smeeton, near Leicester. He studied the pianoforte under G. A. Löhr, and the organ with James Stimpson, organist of Birmingham Town Hall. His theory teachers were Sir George Macfarren and Dr. C. W. Corfe. After holding of Oxford lay-clerks sang for me in those tough eight-part choruses, gratuitously?

In 1883, Dr. Iliffe, on the death of Mr. W. T. H. Allchin, became organist of St. John's College. At that time he held the conductorship of no fewer than four college Musical Societies: Worcester, Keble, Queen's, and St. John's. After the death of Dr. James Taylor (in 1900) he was appointed organist to the University and also to St. Mary's Church, therefore, like several of his predecessors at St. John's, he is a pluralist! As a composer Dr. Iliffe—who is a Master of Arts of his University—is well known by his short Festival Service in the key of G, it being largely used in cathedrals and churches; but he has achieved his greatest fame by his exhaustive primer 'Analysis of Bach's forty-eight preludes and fugues.' Many candidates for musical degrees and diplomas have acknowledged their indebtedness to him for his invaluable contribution to the literature of this great classic.

If ever Dr. Iliffe should be tempted to write a series of variations on a song-tune, he would assuredly select 'Paddle your own canoe,' that aquatic exercise being his favourite recreation.

The thanks of the writer are gratefully tendered to the following for their kind help in the preparation of this article; The Rev. Dr. Burney, Fellow and Librarian, and Dr. Frederick Iliffe, organist of the College; to Mr. John S. Bumpus, for his ever-ready help; and to the photographers whose names are appended to their respective productions.

MUSICAL PRODIGES.

The musical prodigy is a comparatively modern phenomenon, being barely 200 years old. A product of the youngest of the Arts, he did not appear in England until the 18th century. Nor was there any reason why he should. During the 15th and 16th centuries and down to the death of Charles I., music belonged to the life of the whole people, regardless of class distinctions. With the poor as with the rich it was an essential part of everyday life. Few of the poor could read, but most of them could sing the stirring or romantic ballads handed down to them from past generations, or made by the ballad mongers of the period. They sang these to the beautiful melodies of our English folk music, and they accompanied their solo singers with choruses of quaint and harmonious burdens. Many could play on the simple instruments of the time. It was no uncommon thing for servants to be able to play the lute, while it was an absolutely necessary qualification for barbers' assistants.

Among the middle and upper classes a very high standard of musical education prevailed. The majority were well practised performers on the lute, cithern, different kinds of viol and other stringed instruments, virginals, and regals, which last were introduced into England during the 16th century and quickly became fashionable. Nearly everyone the organistship of Kibworth Church, Leicestershire, he, on the united recommendation of Stimpson and Corfe, was appointed to St. Barnabas Church, Oxford, in 1878. In the following year he took his degree of Mus.D. Ouseley was so pleased with his Exercise—an oratorio 'The vision of St. John the Divine'—that he said he would have given him (Dr. Iliffe) a double-first if there had been any class. Dr. Iliffe says: 'I can never imagine how it was that when my Exercise was performed in the Sheldonian, that so many good Oxford musical folk came forward to help me on that occasion, for I was a mere new-comer; but such kindness I shall never forget. Sir Walter Parratt played the organ, Donkin and Cardew played amongst the strings, Canon Shuttleworth was one of the tenors, and a number could sing and read at sight, and the guests at an elegant supper party were expected not only to sing the grace engraved upon the blades of their knives, but also to bear a part at sight in some delicate madrigal, stately canon, or quaint catch after the festive meal was over. Musical children, therefore, were probably the rule rather than the exception, though no doubt there were then, as now, plenty of proud parents who fancied their children could sing or play better than other people's. But we do not hear of any children who showed such phenomenal genius as to deserve the name of Prodigy. The instrumental music of that time was of an elementary kind, neither keyed nor stringed instruments being constructed for elaborate music. A certain standard of execution was demanded of the performer; but in all the studies and lessons for the lute and other instruments that have come down to us the passages are of a very straightforward description, while all the good old dance tunes, jigs, rounds, and country dances were written in the simplest manner and on very well defined lines. It is therefore easy to see that the England of the Tudors and the early Stuarts was a musical England, and that the English were a musical people.

After the death of Charles I. the progress of music in England received a check from which it has never completely recovered, the years of the Commonwealth being a period of depression for all the arts. At the Restoration there was something of a revival. The King encouraged music at Court and reorganized the Royal private band. Our great Purcell arose and flashed along his brief and brilliant course, preceded and followed by lesser luminaries. But speaking generally, and so far as the daily life of the common people went, the sense of music in England, we may say the spirit of English Music, was dead. On the continent, however, things had been growing apace and great advances made. The newly invented opera had begun to alter the style of singing. The harpsichord had supplanted the spinet. The violin had clearly shown its vast superiority to every other stringed instrument, and the art of composition had made very considerable advances. A demand arose for performers of high executive ability, and the music schools of France and Italy were filled to overflowing with eager students. These in their turn becoming masters of their art, poured forth over civilised Europe to teach others and to take direction of the music at the various European Courts both great and small. Some few of these artists found their way to England, and the new style of compositions and the methods employed in their performance began to attract some notice. But this country was then, and for many years after, so torn to pieces by political factions, and the collective mind of the mass of the people so taken up with the great issues at stake, that there was little time to cultivate the polite arts, and less money to pay for the teaching of them. There were, however, a certain number of educated people of the upper and upper middle class who still loved music for its own sake. Some of them even dabbled in it themselves, and they arranged little musical meetings at one another's houses where the best artists, foreign and English, performed the newest compositions. As the troubled 17th century drew to its close, an individual came into notice to whom all English music-lovers owe a debt of gratitude: the famous Thomas Britton, whom we may consider as the father of the concert in England. It is true that the first public concerts were given by John Banister at his own house, in Whitefriars, but these only lasted a few years and were probably on quite a small scale.

Banister died in 1679, and it was in the previous year that Britton took up the good work which his friend had begun, and continued it on a larger and more liberal scale. In a loft over his shop and dwelling place in Clerkenwell he arranged a concert room. Here on Thursday afternoons the music-lovers of the town met together to listen to a 'consort of music by the best performers,' and to regale themselves with 'coffee at a penny a dish'! Banister had charged his listeners one shilling each for admission to his concerts, but Britton, with a generosity and large-mindedness characteristic of the man, took no payment from anyone during the first few years of his enterprise. As time went on he found it necessary to alter this arrangement. Perhaps his expenses increased, or his long room became overcrowded as the fame of his concerts grew, and he wished to limit his audience. At any rate he made a charge of 10s. a year, and the undertaking became really a musical club composed of all the most cultivated people in London. For more than thirty years this club existed, and at its weekly meetings could be heard all that was best in music, chiefly of the newer schools, both foreign and English, rendered by the 'best performers,' also foreign and English.

By the beginning of the 18th century the taste for music had become almost universal among the upper classes, but among them only. Music was the fashion and Italian music in particular. Besides the Opera, some few occasional concerts were given for the benefit of various artists; but the weekly concerts at Thomas Britton's were still considered the best of their kind, and to play or sing at them gave a performer a certain cachet. The most famous artists were always to be heard at those entertainments, including the great Mr. Handel himself during his first visits to England. On a certain Thursday in the year 1711, however, Mr. Britton promised his friends an entirely new sensation, something strange and quite prodigious. He would present to them a little boy, no more than eight years of age, who could already play on the violin with the mastery of a full grown and mature artist. We may be certain the subscribers mustered in full force to hear and see this wonder of nature. Imagine the scene. The long, low room, with the harpsichord at one end, the little group of distinguished artists, and the 'persons of quality' in the gorgeous costume of that period, when men as well as women clothed themselves in warm and brilliant colours. Perhaps Handel was there, and had delighted the company by playing for the first time some of his new compositions, some dainty little pieces of Rameau or Couperin, or a stately galliardo of our own Gibbons. Perhaps Mrs. Elizabeth Hemmings had sung some of the new cantatas she had brought with her from Italy, accompanying herself on the harp. It is also possible that Mrs. Bradshaw may have sung some of the solos from the new opera 'Rinaldo,' and Mr. Holcombe and Mr. Tenoe some great songs by Purcell. But the event of the day is still to come. A tall, oaken joint stool is brought and placed in front of the audience, and on to it is lifted the Infant Prodigy of eight years old, Master Matthew Dubourg. A quaint figure the little creature must have presented, clothed in the long petticoats worn by small children at that time, and with a violin nearly as big as himself. And he plays, not some simple, easy tune suited to his tender years, but one of the solos of the great Signor Corelli. These solos had not very long been introduced into England, and so difficult were they that it was considered impossible for any but the most accomplished artists to play them. The performance therefore of this small child standing on his stool, his tiny left hand darting over the finger-board with precision and certainty, his bow dancing across the strings in difficult arpeggio passages, or firmly and quietly drawing out the sustained notes in the manner of a fully practised player, completely overwhelmed his audience with astonishment. So wonderful a thing had never been known before. It was indeed prodigious, an unexampled wonder of nature. For, as stated above, instrumental music in England was still of a simple character, and the art of violin-playing had not yet gained the full benefit of the new style inaugurated by Corelli. It is not surprising therefore that the little Master Dubourg should have become the rage in London musical circles, delighting and astonishing all who heard him.

Whether Dubourg played again at Britton's concerts we do not know, for the records of the time gave but scanty information on social matters, beyond chronicling the doings of the Court Circle, and some of the great people immediately connected with it. But it is certain that the little boy played at some of the private parties given by the music-lovers of that day, and that he soon appeared at public concerts given by other artists at the Theatres and City Companies' Halls; and this we know, from the advertisements of his first benefit concert, which he gave, when he was eleven years old, on May 27, 1714, in Mr. Hickford's great Dancing Room, over against the Tennis Court in James Street, Haymarket. Here he announces that he will play 'especially the same piece that was performed between him and Mr. Granom on the Theatre; as also a new Concerto and a solo of Corelli.' This notice shows that Dubourg was, even at that tender age, in a position to command the services of the best artists at his own concerts, for Mr. Granom was a trumpet-player of considerable repute, and the advertisement of his name was quite enough to ensure the concert being largely patronised by 'Persons of Quality.' Moreover, the trumpet was a very favourite solo instrument in those days; much elaborate and beautiful music was written for it, and few concerts were reckoned complete without, at least, one solo for it.

It is not known who gave Dubourg his first lessons on the violin; possibly his father, the famous dancing master, Isaacs, whose natural son he was. In 1714, however, there was a considerable influx of foreign musicians into England, and among them came the violinist Geminiani. His great master, Corelli, had died only the year before, and, as Geminiani himself had already acquired some reputation in Italy as a teacher of Corelli's method, and interpreter of his compositions, his arrival in England was a matter of great interest to musicians in general and violinists in particular. Little Dubourg was placed under his care at once, and proved exceedingly apt in profiting by the instruction he received. Indeed, from this time the boy's success was greater than ever, and he held undisputed sway as a youthful prodigy for many years. It was an unprecedented thing that one so young should have acquired complete mastery over the most difficult of instruments, and to emphasize this fact, Dubourg's age is nearly always mentioned in the announcements of concerts at which he played. He is advertised as 'Mr. Matthew Dubourg, the youth of eleven' or 'twelve,' and so on till he was really too old to be considered any longer a boy. He was, however, from 1714 until he went to Ireland in 1728, in enormous request at all the good concerts, where he played solos and concertos by Corelli, duets with the trumpet, and other instruments, concertos and other pieces of his own composition, and, as was the fashion then, improvisations on some well-known air or airs, chosen on the spur of the moment by himself or by one of his audience. Between the ages of eleven and seventeen, Dubourg gave his yearly benefit concerts at Hickford's Great Room. After that, they were given at Drury Lane, or the New Theatre in the Haymarket, but his adult career, brilliant and successful though it was, does not now concern us.

Dubourg was unquestionably the greatest and most remarkable of the early infant prodigies; but he was not quite the first. That rather doubtful honour must be given to an infant of the opposite sex, of whom history has not recorded the name, for she is spoken of merely as 'a Girl, a Scholar of Mr. Tenoe's.' Mr. Tenoe was well known during the early part of the 18th century as an opera and concert singer. He also had a good reputation as a teacher, and it would appear that among his scholars was a little girl with a wonderful voice and considerable facility in using it. At what age she began her studies we do not know; but she was brought out by Mr. Tenoe in 1710, at the age of nine. She made her début in the Music Room in York Buildings (originally belonging to Sir Richard Steele), and appears to have pleased her hearers, singing with ease and fluency several songs out of the current operas of Scarlatti and Handel. This was no easy task, for besides the florid passages written by the composer, the singer was expected to invent and introduce such others as would show off the compass and flexibility of her voice to the best advantage, and this not merely in the form of a cadenza or close at the end of an aria, but during the course of the aria itself. The young lady repeated her performance during the summer of the same year at Hampstead Wells, at a 'Consort of Musick' given by Mr. Tenoe 'at the desire of several Gentlemen and Ladies living in and near Hampstead,' at which concert, as stated in the announcement, 'several of the Opera songs will be performed by a Girl of nine years old, a Scholar of Mr. Tenoe's, who never performed in Publick but once, at York Buildings with very good Success.'

Besides the inhabitants of Hampstead who desired the 'Consort,' a goodly number of persons from town were expected to attend it. During the long days of June and July those of the Quality who could not leave London for Epsom or Tunbridge Wells or other distant holiday resorts, took their pleasure at Hampstead, Greenwich, Richmond, or Islington; green and pleasant places within a comfortable drive from London. Here they drank the waters, ate curds and cream, flirted, gossiped, and destroyed the reputations of their friends with as great or greater enjoyment than in town. Nor was amusement wanting. There were spacious Assembly Rooms at all the Wells, where elderly folk could sit in comfortable corners and talk scandal, while the younger people arranged a country dance, or wandered through the woods and fields in couples and gay little parties. Sometimes there was an 'Entertainment of Conjuring,' or Mr. Clench performed ventriloquial wonders in imitating the sounds made by different animals and birds, old women and the Sham Doctor, besides playing other tricks; and there were occasional concerts at which, as in the instance quoted, the company were sure of the latest novelty that had already diverted them in London during the spring season. Their amusements had to be over in good time, however, to allow for the journey back in the warm summer twilight, before the footpads and other gentlemen of the road came out of their hiding-places in Belsize and elsewhere.

This particular Hampstead concert is advertised as 'Beginning exactly at Five for the Convenience of Gentlemen's Returning.' Five or six o'clock was the usual hour at which these country concerts began, and it was no uncommon thing in advertising them beforehand to state that a certain night had been chosen on account of the moon being at the full. In July, 1711, Mr. Tenoe gave a concert at Richmond, and it was advertised some days beforehand in the Spectator and in the Daily Courant as follows:

In the Great Room at Richmond Wells.

On Saturday being the 21st instant will be performed an Extraordinary Consort of Vocal and Instrumental Musick.

Vocal parts to be performed by Mr. Leveridge, Mr. Tenoe, Mr. Laurence, Mr. Rainton, and a Girl, a Scholar of Mr. Tenoe's.

N.B.—The Consort is undertaken by Mr. Tenoe and Mr. Cuthbert.

Tickets are delivered at the Wells at Half-a-Crown each.

Beginning exactly at Six of the Clock.

Note: The Tide will serve to come back the same evening.

The instrumentalists are not mentioned by name, and the Girl appears to have been the only female performer. She was, however, in the best of company, both Mr. Leveridge and Mr. Laurence being renowned opera singers. The career of this prodigy was a short one, lasting only three years, during which she sang chiefly at Mr. Tenoe's concerts. Her last appearance was at Stationers' Hall in 1713, on the occasion of Mr. Tenoe's benefit, after which no further record of the young lady is to be found.

For some years after this we do not hear much about infant prodigies except young Dubourg who, as stated above, held undisputed possession of the field. Here and there we find little boys singing at concerts, and advertised in such a manner as would lead us to suppose them to have been regarded somewhat as novelties. It is to be remarked that these little creatures are never during this early period mentioned by name. That distinction was reserved for their full-grown fellow artists, and it was not until many years later that childish performers were allowed to have their identity published beforehand.

In January, 1714, a concert of vocal and instrumental music was given at Stationers' Hall for the benefit of Henry Carey, the well-known composer and dramatist, who, however, at this particular time was earning his livelihood by teaching singing. It is stated that the 'Vocal part will be by Mr. Carey, a Gentlewoman, and a Boy his Scholar.' The poor singing-master's concert was remarkable in two ways: All the instrumental music was composed by Pepusch expressly for the occasion, and the advertisement announced that:

The words of the Entertainment are printed and will be given gratis to Each Person on their Entrance.

This is a particularly interesting fact, for it is the first announcement of its kind, and would appear to mark the earliest issue of the 'Book of the words,' now so common a feature of our modern concerts.

Mr. Munro, the well-known organist and harpsichord player, also had a boy to sing for him in 1722, when he gave his benefit concert at Hickford's Room, Pantion Street, on March 16. He states, among other things:

The Harpsichord to be performed by himself. With singing by a little Boy.

In the same year a mysterious advertisement appeared in the Daily Courant as follows:

At the New Theatre over against the Opera House in the Haymarket. This present Day being the 21st Day of June will be presented a Tragedy called the Revenge. By Persons who never appeared on any Stage before. With Several Entertainments of Dancing. And Singing between the Acts by a Boy who never appeared on any Stage before.

This announcement appeared only once, and the names of the 'Persons' and the 'Boy' did not transpire in the newspapers. That the young gentleman whose appearance was a special feature in the performance should be nameless was usual, but that a whole company of actors should advertise a performance without enumerating their names is remarkable and unprecedented. It is possible they may have been amateurs, perhaps persons well known in society who, fearing to become the talk of the town by disclosing their identity beforehand, resolved to stand on their own merits against the sharp-tongued critics of the day.

So far, we have had only prodigies of English birth before us, and all excepting Dubourg were singers. In 1729, however, a new kind of prodigy appeared; a foreigner and an instrumentalist named Charles Adolphe Kuntzen. Born at Wittenberg, where his father was Capellmeister, his musical talent showed itself at an astonishingly early age. By the time he was seven years old he was not only a finished performer on the harpsichord, but an accomplished singer as well, capable of executing the long cantatas of the Italian composers, then so much in fashion. His father, who played the violin, determined to make his son's genius known to the musical world, and, well aware of the fact that foreign musicians were much sought after in England, bent his steps towards this country accompanied by his little boy. They travelled by way of Holland, giving concerts at all the principal towns they passed through with great success, Master Charles exciting the greatest delight and amazement in all who heard him. The travellers arrived in London in January, and lost no time in preparing for a concert, the particulars of which were set forth in the Daily Journal and Daily Post as follows, where his name is spelled 'Kontzen':

For the Benefit of Mr. Kontzen, a Youth of Seven years old, who plays upon the Harpsichord in a Surprising Manner.

At the New Theatre, in the Haymarket, on Tuesday, being the 28th day of January, Will be Performed a Concert of Vocal and Instrumental Musick; particularly several Pieces on the Harpsichord by the Youth, some Sonatas and Concertos by his Father on the Violin, accompanied on the Harpsichord by the Youth. A Cantata to be sung by the Youth, as also a Cantata to be sung by One lately arrived in England, with several other Pieces by the Best Hands.

Boxes, Half-a-Guinea. Pit, 5s. Gallery, 2s. 6d.

It is interesting to note that there still exists a link, totally unsuspected by most people, between this first performance by Kuntzen in England and the present day. The quality who wished to attend this concert were further informed that tickets were to be had 'at Mr. Fribourg's at the Theatre, at Rudd's Coffee House in the Haymarket, and at Tom's Coffee House over against the Royal Exchange in Cornhill.' Mr. Fribourg was a celebrated maker of Rappee snuff, who lived first under the New Theatre and afterwards moved to a shop next door to it. He may possibly have had some interest in the theatre, for during the year 1729 and for several years following he appears to have sold tickets for most of the performances there, and occasionally he was the only person from whom tickets for that theatre could be obtained. He also sold tickets for other concerts, but only when the performers were of the first rank and charged high prices. This firm exists, under the names of Fribourg and Treyer, and still occupies a shop in the Haymarket that alone among all the modern buildings has kept its old-world appearance.

Kuntzen was an enormous success in London. All the town crowded to hear him, and in addition to the entertainment he furnished for the fashionable dilettanti, he created a profound impression among musicians. Even Pepusch, crabbed, fastidious and hard to please, was quite overcome by the boy's playing, and considered him as something unique, a true prodigy; and Burney speaks of the sensation he created as perfectly astonishing. He was engaged by the Company of Comedians for the first performance that season of the favourite tragedy of 'Venice Preserved, Or, a Plot Discovered,' by Otway, which took place at the Theatre Royal, Lincoln's Inn Fields. The bills, after giving the names of the actors, state:

With a Piece of Musick on the Harpsichord by Mr. Kontzen, a Youth of Seven Years of Age lately arrived from Germany, being the first time of his appearance on the Stage.

This also was very successful, and in addition to these great public performances there is no doubt little Charles Adolphe had his time well filled with other engagements of a more private and personal nature, playing frequently at the houses of the rich amateurs and the gatherings of musical artists. But notwithstanding his triumphs on this occasion he did not stay long in England, though he is stated to have paid other visits to London at different times, and to one of these visits, some thirty years later, we shall have reason to refer.

If the next instrumental prodigy was considerably older than Kuntzen, he too created a great sensation in musical circles, for he could play on the harpsichord, German flute and trumpet, the last named being the most difficult instrument of the three. The name of this youth was Burk Thumoth, and he came of an Irish family. His performances on the harpsichord attracted much attention, and gained him the applause of the serious musicians. He finally adopted the German flute as his principal instrument, and some twenty years later his little son became famous as a singing prodigy. From this time onward instrumental prodigies began to increase in number, and by the middle of the century there were several before the public—little girls and little boys.

'I don't think, Sir,' remarked Salomon to Haydn, 'you will ever beat these symphonies.' 'Sir,' replied the composer, 'I never mean to try.'

PRIVATE MUSICAL COLLECTIONS.

I. MR. EDWARD SPEYER.

A few more composers in the 'M' section of Mr. Speyer's collection claim notice before the Mozart treasures are described. Massenet (born 1842) is represented by a letter about his oratorio 'La Vierge,' produced on May 22, 1880, at Tournai. Maurer (1789-1878) is an almost forgotten composer, except by his Sinfonie Concertante for four violins and orchestra, which used to be played at the Philharmonic concerts. Maurer dedicated one of his Violin concertos, that in A minor and dated 'Potsdam, 1820,' to Mr. Speyer, senr., the superbly written autograph of which is now in his son's possession. A Pastorale for three voices beginning, 'Sublime were the blushes of morn,' is by Joseph Mazzinghi (1765-1844), composer of 'The Wreath' and 'When a little farm we keep.' Mazzinghi was a pupil of John Christian Bach and a well-known teacher in London of the pianoforte, for which instrument he composed nearly seventy Sonatas and 'arranged a multitude of pieces.' In addition to the manuscript of an orchestral work by Mehul (1763-1817), there is a touching letter, dated May 15, 1817, addressed by him—then in the last stage of consumption—to the Director of the Paris Conservatoire, asking for an extension of leave, as for twenty-three years he had never absented himself for a single day from his duties as professor. Five months later, the composer of 'Joseph' drew his last breath, at the age of fifty-four. The violinist Molique (1803-69) and the pianist Moscheles (1794-1870) carried on a voluminous correspondence with Mr. Speyer, senr., and the letters from the two musicians have been carefully preserved.

A treasure-corner indeed is that wherein repose the Mozart manuscripts. The gem of the whole collection is the autograph of the song 'Das Veilchen' (The Violet), which is headed :

Das Veilchen vom Goethe. 8 Juni, 1785.

This celebrated manuscript has been in the possession of Mr. Speyer's family for nearly a hundred years. Otto Jahn, who gives a facsimile of the autograph in his monumental 'Life of Mozart,' thus refers to this finished example of the composer's genius :

But the crown of all the songs, by virtue of its touching expression of emotion and its charming perfection of form, is unquestionably Goethe's 'Veilchen' (K. 476). In other songs we discern musical genius divining and bringing to light the poetic germ which lies hidden in the words; here we have the impression made upon Mozart by true poetry. It may seem remarkable that so simple a lyrical poem should have been treated by Mozart as a romance, giving a certain amount of dramatic detail to the little story; and yet it must not be overlooked that the masterly touch which repeats the closing words: 'Das arme Veilchen! es war ein herziges Veilchen!' fully reasserts a genuine lyric element. A tendency to dramatic effect was inherent in Mozart's nature as an artist, and Goethe's clear and plastic presentation of a simple image, true in every feature, could not fail to impress him deeply.

Here we are further privileged to handle the autograph of the Fugue in C minor for Two Pianofortes (Köchel 426), a beautiful manuscript headed :

Fuga a Due Cembali di Wolfgango Amadeo Mozart mp. Vienna li 29 di Decembre 1783.

Except the last four bars, the left-hand part of the first player is written in the tenor clef. This manuscript was given by Mr. Speyer, senr., to Spohr, in whose possession it remained for about forty years: at the death of the latter it was generously given back to its former owner by Spohr's widow. In 1788 Mozart prefixed a short Adagio to this fugue for two pianofortes and arranged it for a quartet of strings: the autograph of this is in the British Museum. Beethoven copied the fugue in score, and the autograph of this is in the Artaria collection at Vienna. Other Mozart treasures are the Cadenza to the first movement of the Sinfonie Concertante in E flat major for Violin and Viola (K. 364), composed in 1780, written on the back page of a horn part of the Contratanz in B flat for orchestra (K. 123) composed in 1771, when Mozart was fifteen and during his sojourn in Italy. Then we have in Mozart's handwriting: Act I., 1st and 2nd Scene of the libretto of 'Die Entführung aus dem Serail' ('Il Seraglio'), with Belmonte's first Aria, and the amusing Duet between Osmín and Belmonte, evidently extracted from the text-book in the summer of 1781, when he was busy with the composing of the opera. Here is also a copy of the interesting Thematic Catalogue made by Mozart himself of his works composed between February 9, 1784 and November 15, 1791: this, the very first publication printed by the then newly-invented process of lithography, was issued by Joh. André at Offenbach in 1805.

A document of the highest pathetic and historical interest is the Marriage Contract of Mozart, dated Vienna, Aug. 3, 1782, signed, sealed, and settled in due legal form. The principal personages mentioned therein are Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, the bridegroom, Maria Costanza Weber, the bride, Maria Caecilia Weber the bride's mother (widow), and three witnesses, friends of both parties. The six clauses of the contract may be summarised thus :

1. He will take her.
2. Bride brings a dowry of £40 (500 florins).
3. Bridegroom promises £120 (1500 florins).
4. Community of property.
5. Right of bequest.
6. Duplicate copy of contract for bridegroom (this was deposited and is preserved in the archives of the Law Courts at Vienna).

The place of honour in the Mozart Letters belongs to a communication from Mozart to Michael Puchberg, a wealthy merchant of Vienna, and, like the composer, a Freemason, who proved his true and always helpful friend. Mozart—who, unfortunately, had frequently to go to Puchberg for pecuniary assistance—says, in a postscript (really the main point of the letter): 'I must ask for forgiveness in that I have not remitted to you the certain thing [ℒ s. d.] in accordance with my promise; but Stadler [a clarinettist] who went to the bank for me because I had so much to do, completely forgot the 20th of April, consequently I must ask for a further respite of eight days.' This read-between-the-lines letter was given, in 1818, to Mr. Speyer, senr., by Carl Mozart, the composer's elder son. The latter, then in the Austrian State Service, at Milan, was very friendly with Mr. Speyer's father, whom he allowed to make copies of a number of letters written by Mozart in 1777 and 1778, chiefly from Mannheim, to his cousin, Maria Anna, a young girl of nineteen; these letters have not been published and probably never will be.

A New Year's letter of Leopold Mozart (1719-87), dated 'Salzburg, 29 Dec., 1780,' written to his genius son Wolfgang, concludes thus: 'We all kiss you with all our hearts, and I am your old honest Father.' To this letter is a long addition penned by Nannerl (Marianne Mozart, 1751-1829), the composer's gifted sister. There are letters written by Carl Mozart and Wolfgang Mozart, junr., and the autographs of five Lieder composed by the latter: also a letter from Mozart's widow, Madame von Nissen, to Madame Spontini, dated 'Salzburg, 16 March, 1830.' It will be remembered that eighteen years after the death of her husband, Mozart's widow married the Danish Councillor of State, G. N. von Nissen, who wrote the earliest biography of Mozart. When this gentleman had his portrait engraved, he subscribed himself as 'Husband of the widow of Mozart'! Mr. Speyer possesses letters written by all the members of the Mozart family except from the mother of the composer, her letters being extremely rare.

In the printed copy of the first text-book of 'Don Giovanni' (Vienna, 1788), the composer is given as 'Sig. Wolfango Mozart, Maestro di Cap. all' attual servizio della Corte Imperiale.' Of letters from persons intimately connected with Mozart, there is one dated 'Paris, 17 April, 1783,' from Beaumarchais (1732-99)—author of 'Le Barbier de Séville' and 'Les Noces de Figaro'—written to the Comte de Vergennes (celebrated French statesman and Minister of Finance to Louis XVI.); three letters written from Vienna by Süssmayer (1766-1803), the pupil of Mozart and who completed the 'Requiem'; Padre Martini (1706-84), the great friend and musical adviser of the master, is represented by a letter, dated 'Bologna, 24 May, 1777,' written to Giuseppe Santarelli, the celebrated Papal soprano singer; and lastly there is a letter, dated 'New York, 30 January, 1830,' from the Abbate Lorenzo da Ponte (1749-1838), the librettist of 'Figaro,' 'Don Giovanni,' and 'Cosi fan tutte,' this communication being in his beautiful, characteristic handwriting, though at that time he was in his eighty-second year.

From Mozart to Jacques Offenbach (1819-80) is a wide jump, but each has his own particular niche in the temple of fame. The composer of 'Orphée aux enfers' gives vent to his humour in a letter written from the Théâtre des Bouffes Parisiens, and addressed to M. Delsame, editor of one of the Paris newspapers. He says:

My dear friend,—Your young and handsome singer is neither young nor handsome. Do try, therefore, to find me what I want, but for goodness' sake put on your spectacles. You know that in my little theatre the public are not very artistic, and consequently the women must be prettier than anywhere else. Don't bring me your artist to-morrow, but get hold of another one for some other day.

Of special interest is a letter to M. Chadeuil, the Parisian musical critic, in which the composer expresses his nervous fear that his chef d'œuvre would not be a success. Writing on October 19, 1858, Offenbach says:

My dear Chadeuil,—I count upon all your friendship for my Orphée. I don't know what will come of it: I hope a success; but you know that at the theatre one is never certain of these things. As just now this is a business of the very greatest importance to me, I more than ever appeal to your excellent pen in order to push me into the way of good results.

It should not be forgotten that Offenbach came to England in 1844 as a violoncello player, in the same year that Joachim and Piatti made their first appearances in this country. Concerning his début here—at Madame Puzzi's concert, May 15, 1844—The Dramatic and Musical Review said:

The principal novelty was a solo on the violoncello by Mr. Offenbach, who made his first appearance in England. Though this gentleman is very young, he is already a perfect master of his instrument; his tone has all the sweetness of the veteran Lindley, whilst his execution (especially the use of the harmonics) is little short of the marvellous. He is on the violoncello what Paganini was on the violin. Mr. Offenbach will be a leading feature of this prolific musical season.

The prolific but almost forgotten composer George Onslow (1784-1813) is recalled by the score of the Finale vivace of his Symphony in A, dated '28 June, 1830,' a work that was first performed in London at the Philharmonic concert of February 27, 1837. Ferdinand Paer (1771-1839) achieved a reputation as an opera composer, but Mr. Speyer possesses an unpublished cantata by him, 'Fede, Speranza e Amor Divino,' for soli, chorus and orchestra, also a letter dated 'Paris, Sept. 1, 1811.' A letter, dated 1831 and written to Mr. Speyer, senr., and the autograph of a 'Capriccio Paganini' ('Paris, 24 Mai, 1837'), are relics of Niccolò Paganini (1784-1840), the great and weird violinist. Philidor (1726-95), famous both as a composer of operas and as a chess-player, wrote to Bartolozzi a letter ('London, April 23, 1790) about his (Philidor's) portrait, asking 'In what state is the original plate?' as he wished to insert it in a new edition of his book 'Analyse du jeu des échecs,' which first appeared in 1749 and met with great and well deserved success; this letter is in the Speyer collection. Philidor, who received a regular pension from the Chess Club in London, was the first to introduce on the stage the 'air descriptif' ('Le Maréchal') and the unaccompanied quartet ('Tom Jones'), and to form a duet of two independent and apparently incongruous melodies. Piccini (1728-1800), the rival of Gluck, is represented by the manuscript of a vocal aria inscribed 'Ecrit de la propre main du célèbre Piccini pour son ami J. B. Viotti, à Paris, 1783': here is also a letter from Piccini, written during the time of the Great Republic, dated 'Paris, 4 Thermidor,' and addressed 'Au Citoyen Genguené.' J. F. Reichardt (1752-1814) and F. J. Rochlitz (1769-1842) find a place: the former by a letter addressed to George Joachim Götschen, grandfather of Viscount Goschen, and Rochlitz—a well-known writer on music and the librettist of Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and 'Calvary'—by letters to Neukomm and others. The composer of 'The song of the bell,' violinist, and the friend of the youth of Beethoven, Andreas Romberg (1767-1821), is recalled by a letter (Sept. 28, 1819) addressed to Herr Peters, the well-known music-publisher; and his cousin, Bernhard Romberg (1767-1841), the celebrated violoncellist, by letters addressed to Spohr.

Jean Jacques Rousseau (1712-78) and Anton Rubinstein (1830-94) appear in the collection, the former by a letter to his publisher dated 'Montmorenci, Feb. 5, 1764,' the latter by a telegram to his wife announcing the death of his brother Nicholas, also a letter addressed to Messrs. Breitkopf & Haertel. Here are an orchestral score and a miniature portrait of Sacchini (1734-86). Of Antonio Salieri (1750-1825), the friend of Haydn and Beethoven and for many years 'Maestro di Capella' of the Imperial Court at Vienna, Mr. Speyer possesses two curious compositions: (1) 'Piccolo Terzetto,' written for a church commemoration service held at Liechtenthal on Sept. 25, 1814; and (2) a delightfully humorous joke, a trio for two men's voices and a woman's, entitled, 'Lo Spirito di Contraddizione.' The 'Spirit of Contradiction' is personified in the soprano. Bass and tenor sing: 'Viva la celebre B— amabila, viva il suo metodo di canto angelico,' &c. The soprano interrupts with ejaculations: 'Che amabila? Che metodo? Diabolico, Insoportabile,' &c.

Franz Schubert (1797-1828). What sweet delights the name recalls! And then to handle some of his precious compositions just as he wrote them, and wrote them so neatly at the time of their creation. In the year 1824, Schubert lived for six months with the Esterhazys at Zselész, in Hungary. There he gave pianoforte lessons to the young Countesses of the house, aged nineteen and seventeen respectively, with the younger of whom, Caroline, he is said to have fallen in love. For these fair damsels he composed his Pianoforte sonata for four hands—now known as the 'Grand Duo in C' (Op. 140). This beautifully written autograph of 140 folios—headed 'Sonate fürs Pianoforte zu vier Händen, Franz Schubert, mp., Zselész, Juny, 1824'—was given by Anton Diabelli, the publisher, to Clara Schumann during her visit to Vienna in the year 1837. She presented it to her bridegroom, Robert Schumann, in whose possession it remained till his death. Schumann, misled no doubt by the obviously symphonic character of the work, wrote to his bride from Leipzig, Feb. 6, 1838: 'I have revelled in the Duo; cannot, however, believe it to be a pianoforte composition, even after inspecting your original MS., which I had fetched from your mother's.' But the 'Grand Duo' is not an arrangement; it is an original composition for pianoforte duet. The work has been effectively orchestrated by Dr. Joachim, in which form it was first performed at the Crystal Palace Concert of March 4, 1876, under the direction of Sir (then Mr.) August Manns. In the programme-book of that concert, Sir George Grove said:

Zselész was the country seat of a member of the Esterhazy family, and Schubert paid two visits there: the first as music-master to the family in 1816, and the second probably in the same capacity—for the rigid etiquette of the time would hardly have allowed him to go in any relation of equality—in 1824. He seems to have been perfectly happy there, making love and music—a great deal more of the latter than the former—wandering about and generally enjoying himself. The place was in Hungary, on the Waag, sixty or seventy miles east of Vienna, and the melodies which he heard from the peasants on the property, or the wandering gipsies, and the peculiar sound of their bands, have left their mark on the pieces which are known to have been composed there, and on others which, though written elsewhere, have fortunately caught the impress of that time. Conspicuous among these are the unfinished symphony in B minor, the Grand symphony in C, the Quartetts in A minor and D minor, the E flat Trio, the Divertissement à la Hongroise (Op. 54) for four hands on the pianoforte, and the Sonata before us, usually known by the name of the 'Grand Duo in C,' attached to it by the publishers on its appearance in 1838.

Other Schubert relics are a leaf of the Variations for Pianoforte duet in E minor (Op. 10), dedicated to Beethoven, and the song 'An die untergehende Sonne' (Op. 44), dated 'Vienna, May, 1817': on the back of the latter manuscript is a sketch of a song, the completion of which cannot be traced.

Mr. Speyer has also a large collection of portraits. One of these he has kindly allowed to appear as the special supplement of the present issue of THE MUSICAL TIMES. It is a representation of Marianne ('Nannerl') Mozart, sister of the composer, who accompanied him to London as a fellow prodigy in the year 1764. The original oil-painting—the representation of which Mr. Speyer assures us has not hitherto been published—is by Mignard and now the property of Dr. Hoch's Conservatorium at Frankfurt-am-Main.

(To be continued.)

An old-time relic, in the form of Handel's watch, recently found its way into the law courts. In 1879 Mrs. Shearer, its former owner, bought the watch at Messrs. Puttick & Simpson's for the sum of £4 2s. 6d. Time had so increased the value of this time-keeper that Dr. Cummings gave £50 for it a year ago, he having purchased the treasure from an agent of Mrs. Shearer, named, curiously enough, Stafford Smith. The lady sought to recover possession of the watch on the ground that Mr. Stafford Smith had no authority from her to sell. However, the case was eventually settled out of court, and Dr. Cummings retains the watch and its case. Perchance the relic has ere this set its face against Handel's Will. 'Where there's a will there's a way,' as the lawyer said who took the will for the deed; but in Dr. Cummings's case—not the law case, but that in which he keeps his Handel treasures—may we not say 'Where there's a will there's a watch'? May time deal gently with its minutiae and the hands upon which Handel often looked.

Occasional Notes.

A work of art—whether we are to consider it as a created production, or, as in our own art [of music] more than any other, the representative performance of another's production—is the putting into fact some important idea. Let us see of what this idea consists, and the fact into which it is moulded. There must be feeling, let me say passion, condensed into representation. One cannot represent what has not been experienced. This passion that we experience let it be supposed the summer heat of an ardent spirit. Then must come the reflection, which is the dew, the condensation of the aqueous vapour that suffuses the air of a summer's day. The plant is quickened by the glow of our passion, and enriched by the dew of our reflection, and then its flower is the blossom that opens to the world.—G. A. MACFARREN.

As a sequel to the biographical sketch of John Day, the celebrated music-printer of the 16th century, we give a photograph, specially taken for the purpose of this reproduction, of the memorial window to him in Little Bradley Church, Suffolk, where his remains are interred. The church is a Norman flint building, with a circular embattled Western tower. The Day window, which owes its insertion to the Rev. Herbert Alston, a former rector of Little Bradley, is from the studio of Messrs. Heaton, Butler, & Bayne, and bears the following inscription:

To the Glory of God, this window is dedicated by the Stationers' Company in 1880, in memory of John Daye the printer of Foxe's Book of Martyrs and master of their Company in 1580.

Its three figures, one in each light, are St. Andrew, St. Stephen and St. Paul, a trio of martyrs, thus typifying the famous book which was first issued from the printing press of John Day.

It seems a strange anomaly that pianist-composers should be so fond of writing concertos for the violoncello. The latest in a fairly long list is Herr Ernst von Dohnányi, whose new work of this kind was produced by Prof. Hugo Becker at the last of the Philharmonic concerts at Budapest. It met with quite exceptional success, and is regarded as one of the very few concertos for the instrument which can be considered equally effective for the soloist and the orchestra. Moreover, it is the work of a composer who happens to be a real musician by the grace of God. It proved by far the most valuable of the Philharmonic season's novelties, and is bound to make the tour of the world's concert rooms.

The recent welcome performance by the Bach Choir of Bach's great Mass in B minor recalls the fact that three movements of this stupendous creation were sung in London nearly seventy years ago, certainly before any portion of the work was heard at the Gewandhaus, Leipzig! At the Ancient Concert of May 23, 1838, a 'Selection from a Service,' as the Mass was called, consisted of the Gloria, Qui sedes, and Quoniam tu solus. Concerning the interpretation of these excerpts the Musical World said:

The chorus is accompanied, we believe, by three obligati trumpets, the alto tromba extending to E [D] in alt. This part of course Mr. Harper could not play, nor indeed could anybody, with the instrument now in use in our orchestras. The aria 'Qui sedes' has an obligato accompaniment for the tenoroon or oboe d'amore, an instrument which extended below [sic] the Corno Inglese. This Mr. Grattan Cooke attempted on the common oboe, and of course stopped at the very outset of his exertions. The bass solo, 'Quoniam tu solus,' is accompanied by a corno [da caccia] and two fagotti. The passages for the horn were next to impracticable, and Mr. Denman was furnished with a fagotti part which appeared greatly incorrect. Of course [the selection was slaughtered, the soli players retiring in dismay, and leaving Mr. Knyvett to play their parts on the organ, which he did most manfully, after the fashion of the men of the last generation, 'Solo on the Cornet stop.'

The Examiner—a high-class journal of that day—expressed its opinion of the music in these terms:

How far more pleasing, for instance, the glee we allude to, than the extract from a Mass by Sebastian Bach! in which we could discover nothing except the industry and dry science of the composer.

The glee 'we allude to' was Jackson's 'Go, gentle tyrant,' a command which might appropriately have been addressed to that Examiner critic. Earlier in the month—on May Day, 1838—the Choral Harmonists opened their music-making with the following item (we quote from a copy of the programme now before us):

CREDO (from the 1st Grand Mass) ... Sebastian Bach.
For Words, see Novello's Collection, Page 1.

A foot-note states that 'J. A. Novello's Collection of Words of Classical Sacred Music may be had of the Waiters, price One Shilling.' It may be assumed that the above Credo was that of the great B minor Mass: anyhow, there were genuine Bach enthusiasts in London at the beginning of the Victorian era.

It would seem as if masterful Master Mischa Elman was so turning the heads of the musical critics as to cause their pens to run in the wilds of inaccuracy. An evening contemporary, in recording the gifted boy's performance at the Philharmonic concert, says (the italics are ours):

Yesterday Tchaikovsky's piano concerto, a few years since considered unplayable by the most brilliant violinist, was the chief work in which he was heard, and the way in which he romped through the solo part therein bordered on the miraculous.

No doubt. The other 'off the line' is probably due to flights of 'high falutin,' when the writer, in a musical journal, refers to 'that little Prince from Genius-land, Mischa Elfin.' As a distinctive Elman characteristic, Elfin is decidedly good.

The Beethoven House at Bonn has been enriched by the purchased acquisition of a precious document, viz., the original manuscript of the 'Coriolan' overture. This treasure is at present exhibited in the manuscript room of the House.

In the course of some strictures passed upon a paragraph which appeared in a London daily newspaper, a weekly musical periodical makes two erroneous statements concerning the baton in England. They are contained in the following extract:

Its [the baton's] revival in this country is due to Spohr, who conducted a Philharmonic concert with a baton in London in 1820; and from that occasion until now the baton has invariably been used. Mendelssohn made his first appearance in England at a Philharmonic Society concert on the 25th of May, 1829, when he conducted his C minor Symphony, using the baton provided by the Society. The story about a special baton with a crown on the tip of it is a—well moonshine, or a pretty invention.

While it is perfectly true that Spohr conducted with a baton a Philharmonic concert in London in 1820—if we may be allowed to put it in that way—it was not until the year 1832 that the baton came into general use in England. This was duly set forth, supported by documentary evidence of absolute certainty, in THE MUSICAL TIMES of June, 1896, p. 372, and moreover the substance of that article will be found in the new edition of Grove's 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' vol. i., p. 206. In regard to misstatement No. 2, it so happens that on May 26, 1829, the day after the Philharmonic concert, Mendelssohn wrote from London to his parents a letter which contains this sentence apropos of his conducting experiences:

I mounted the orchestra and pulled out my white stick, which I have had made on purpose (the maker took me for an alderman, and would insist on decorating it with a crown).

Where is the 'well moonshine'? The moonshine must surely be at the bottom of our contemporary's 'well.'

The Berlin Philharmonic choir, under Prof. Siegfried Ochs, gave its seventh and grandest performance of Bach's stupendous B minor Mass on April 9, and impressed the thrilled audience as never before. The German Emperor and his Consort were present, and after paying the closest attention throughout the concert his Majesty confessed to Prof. Ochs that he had no idea that there existed anything so sublime in music: to him, a mere amateur, Handel had hitherto been the embodiment of sublimity. The Bach Mass had, however, convinced his Majesty that therein a far vaster, deeper mind revealed itself, and he was grateful for such an experience.

According to the Augsburger Abendzeitung, one of the best South German newspapers, there are still to be found eight bearers of the name of Mozart in the Augsburg Directory. Amongst them are some descendants of Mozart's father and uncle. These Augsburg Mozarts followed the trade of bookbinders, and only a few years ago there lived in the old Bavarian town a master-bookbinder bearing the famous name to which the world of music is endeavouring to do homage in this present year of grace.

The latest musical sensation in Berlin is a Spanish boy, aged eight, Pepito Arriola by name, a protégé of Arthur Nikisch, who, on March 28, made his first public appearance at a concert conducted by Herr Eduard von Strauss. The young gentleman played the solo part in Beethoven's C minor Pianoforte concerto, accompanied by the Philharmonic Orchestra, and gave proof of quite exceptional gifts. He is at present studying with Herr Mayer-Mahr, and great things are expected of him.

The progress of music in China is a subject upon which little is known and therefore less is said; but we have recently had evidence that progress is really being made. Writing to a friend, on March 2, 1906, Mr. Berthold G. Tours, H.B.M. Consul at Chin-kiang and a son of the late Mr. Berthold Tours, says:

I was in Nanking last week, and heard the Viceroy of Nanking's band play European music. The performance was almost as weird as the programme. The latter so impressed me that I am enclosing it to you in the hope that it may be useful to the Editor of THE MUSICAL TIMES whenever he writes an article on China's progress musically.

We give, in full-sized facsimile, the programme so kindly sent by Mr. Tours; it may serve as the first instalment of the article to which he refers.

Ignaz Brüll's charming opera 'The Golden Cross' was revived at Leipzig on March 25, and the performance deserves special notice in that it was conducted by a young Englishman, Mr. Albert Coates, who has lately been appointed assistant-conductor at the municipal theatre. It is pleasant to learn that Mr. Coates's interpretation of the score has met with general appreciation and commendation.

Felix Weingartner has definitely resigned his position as conductor of the Royal Orchestra, and this time his decision is irrevocable. His loss to Berlin musical life can scarcely be gauged yet, for it will be all but impossible to find a worthy successor to this real master-conductor.

Another resignation! Herr Arthur Nikisch as conductor at the Municipal theatre, Leipzig. Overwork is said to be the reason; but the undoubted financial non-success in connection with the Opera is cited as probably a weighty argument in favour of his taking this serious step.

An ecclesiastical journal, in a preliminary announcement paragraph, refers to a 'full-dress organ recital.' As, however, the term 'full-dress' appears in a Presbyterian periodical, it may be assumed that the recitalist had previously performed in kilts, and that on the occasion in question he would put on the garments known as nether.

To celebrate the tercentenary of the foundation of Giessen University, a prize competition for the best festival (student) song has been arranged. The poem must be suited to a well-known popular melody, and the three prizes are to consist of—30, 20, and 10 bottles respectively of wine of 'noble' vintage! How very German!

Theodor Leschetizky has achieved such well-earned fame as a teacher of the pianoforte, as to more or less blot out the memory of his public performances. In this connection it may not be without interest to recall his first visit to England, by way of supplementing the information given by Miss Annette Hullah in her Life of the famous professor, reviewed in another column. In his chit-chat programme of the Musical Union matinée of May 17, 1864, the Director, gossiping John Ella, says :

M. & MME. LESCHETIZKY.

The lady, a contralto vocalist, highly esteemed in the musical circles of St. Petersburg, is shortly expected in London with her husband, a pianist of very great renown. The Russian capital has long numbered among its resident composers and pianists a remarkable triad—Henselt, Rubinstein and Leschetizky. Our diary in Vienna, 1845, contains the following entry : ‘Heard young Leschetizky play wonderfully well on the pianoforte. Shall be surprised if he do not become a very great artist.’—J. E.

The lady—a beautiful singer, and formerly one of the Maids of Honour to the Grand Duchess Helen, sister of the Emperor Nicholas—appeared at the Musical Union matinée of June 14, 1864, when she sang one of Rubinstein’s ‘Persisches Lied’ and Schubert’s ‘Ungeduld,’ accompanied by Herr Jaell. A week later (June 21, 1864), at the next matinée, the eminent pianist made his first appearance in England and played three pieces of his own composition. We quote from a copy of the programme now before us :

- |                              |                    |
|------------------------------|--------------------|
| a. Chanson des Pêcheurs ...  | } ... Leschetizky. |
| b. Les Alouettes (Impromptu) |                    |
| c. Mazurka ... ..            |                    |

From among a very numerous collection of Morceaux de Salon, some of which are of enormous difficulty and grand dimensions, have been selected the above group of characteristic solos. The first, a simple, pleasing melody, charmingly varied with tasteful harmony ; the second, a theme, employing both hands, in florid figures delicately treated in imitations ; and the third, a spirited and strikingly original mazurka.

The programme included Schumann’s Pianoforte quintet, in which Leschetizky had for his colleagues Joachim and Ries (violins), Webb and Hann (violas), and Davidoff (violinocello). In his programme of ‘The Director’s Grand Matinée,’ Ella has the following note concerning the new-comer :

LESCHETIZKY.

It is long since we have witnessed a more successful début at the Musical Union than that of the above pianist. His execution is extraordinary, combining power, rhythmical accent, delicacy, and taste. In addition to the solos in the programme, he favoured us with a Waltz, which for originality and variety of interest, coupled with his own inimitable playing, fairly enraptured his hearers.

The Athenæum concluded a very brief notice of the concert with ‘M. Leschetizky was the pianist.’

A posthumous two-act opéra-bouffe by Georges Bizet, entitled ‘Don Procopio,’ was produced at Monte Carlo on March 10, forty-eight years after its completion, and thirty-one years after the death of its gifted composer ! The work was written in 1858, when Bizet—then a youth of twenty-one and the fortunate winner of the greatly-coveted Prix de Rome—was living at the Villa Medici, near Rome. He sent his score to Auber, Director of the Paris Conservatoire, who took such great care of the manuscript that it could not be discovered when Bizet found a manager willing to produce the work. After the composer’s death the manuscript found its way to the Conservatoire library, where it was lost once more until a few years ago, when Madame Bizet and M. Jacques Bizet obtained permission to make a copy of the score. Finally a publisher was found (M. Choudens) who offered it to the Grand Opéra, though in vain. That it has at last been given to the world—and in as excellent a first performance as even its author could have desired—is to the great credit of the Prince of Monaco and of M. Raoul Gunsbourg, the very enterprising director of the Monte Carlo opera ; and that it was worth the trouble was the opinion of the delighted first-night audience no less than that of the critics, who have hailed the little work as a gem of its kind.

The libretto is based on an Italian poem of the 18th century, which Bizet found in the Library of Naples. To supply music suitable for such an Italian subject, the composer purposely imitated the sparkling style of Italian comic opera. In fact, he wrote to Paris on January 11, 1859, from Rome : ‘Sur des paroles italiennes il faut faire italien ; je n’ai pas cherché à me dérober à cette influence,’ a sentence, by-the-way, which the publisher has printed at the head of the vocal score to disarm unfavourable criticism. Hence the influence of Rossini, and even Bellini, is traced on many pages, though we can recognise the future composer of ‘Carmen’ (ex pede Herculem !) in occasional characteristic turns, and especially in a very delightful Intermezzo leading into a Serenade for tenor solo, accompanied by mandolines. There, and in a fascinating Trio, ‘D’avance le projet me tente,’ the real, but as yet immature Bizet, speaks to us. On the whole, the production, though so tragic in its tardiness, seems likely to add fresh laurels to the wreath which a grateful world has wound for the unfortunate composer, cut off in the full flush of his early manhood.

The first English work on the subject of dancing and, moreover, one that contained the first general collection of the popular dance and ballad tunes of England, is one that arouses peculiar interest. Its title-page reads :

THE ENGLISH DANCING MASTER, or Plaine and Easie rules for the dancing of Country Dances, with the tunes to each dance, printed by Thomas Harper, and are now to be sold by JOHN PLAYFORD, at his shop in the Inner Temple, neere the Church doore. 1651.

The preface to this book may be quoted in full, if only by reason of its quaint naïveté :

To the Ingenious Reader.

The Art of Dancing called by the Ancient Greeks Orchestice, and Orchestis, is a commendable and rare Quality fit for yong Gentlemen, if opportunely and civilly used. And Plato, that Famous Philosopher, thought it meet, that yong Ingenious Children be taught to dance. It is a quality that has been formerly honoured in the Courts of Princes, when performed by the most Noble Heroes of the Times ! The Gentlemen of the Innes of Court, whose sweet and ayyr Activity has crowned their Grand Solemnities with Admiration to all Spectators. This Art has been anciently handled by

Athenæus, Julius Pollux, Cælius Rhodiginus, and others, and much commend it to be Excellent for Recreation, after more serious Studies, making the body active and strong, gratefull in deportment, and a quality very much be seeming a Gentleman. Yet all this should not have been an Incitement to me for publication of this Worke (knowing these Times and the Nature of it do not agree), But that there was a false and surreptitious Copy at the Printing Presse, which if it had been published, would have been a disparagement to the quality and the Professors thereof, and a hinderance to the Learner: Therefore for prevention of all which, having an Excellent Copy by me, and the assistance of a knowing Friend; I ventured to put forth this ensuing Worke to the view, and gentle censure of all ingenious Gentlemen lovers of this Quality; not doubting but their goodnes will pardon what may be amisse, and accept of the honest Intention of him that is a faithful honourer of your Virtues, and

Your servant to command

J. P.

'The English Dancing Master,' which contains 104 dances, is said to have been John Playford's first musical publication; and although it is dated 1651, the book was entered at Stationers' Hall on November 7, 1650.

In his analysis of Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony (which appeared in our April issue), Sir George Grove referred to two criticisms passed upon the work at its first performance in England. Here they are, from the Harmonicon and Athenæum respectively:

M. Mendelssohn's symphony, composed in pursuance of a resolution of this [Philharmonic] Society, by which he was requested to write a symphony, overture, and vocal piece, on liberal terms, is a composition that will endure for ages, if we may presume to judge such a work on a single performance. The first movement, an Allegro vivace in A, without any slow opening, speaks at once the highly excited state of the author's imagination and the fine flow of his animal spirits, when he wrote it: so full of brilliant conceptions is this, and so rapid their succession, that it would be a hopeless attempt to analyse it without either having heard it several times, or having the score to refer to. We may say the same of the Finale, which has this peculiarity—that it is in the minor of the key in which the symphony commences. The slow movement in D minor is not less distinguished by ingenuity of a very rare description, and beauty of the most discernible kind, than by its undisputed, unquestionable originality: this was loudly eulogized. The Scherzo, in A, and Trio, in E, shew genius of a high order in every bar. And, to be brief, the manner in which the whole work was received by the most critical, the best qualified audience that London (now full of eminent foreign musicians) could assemble, bears us out in what we have said, and would justify us were we to add still more in praise of this masterly production.—Harmonicon, June, 1833.

In the latter composition [a grand Sinfonia by F. Mendelssohn] a Romance, in D minor, received an encore; the Trio was admired for the beauty of its instrumentation and simplicity of subject, and the last Allegro, abounding with skilful and very intricate passages for the orchestra, was effective and original.—Athenæum, May 18, 1833.

The first performance in France of Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius'—under its French title 'Le Songe de Gerontius'—is announced to be given at the Trocadero, Paris, on May 17, under the direction of M. Chevallard, who will conduct a band and chorus of 300 performers.

EIGHTEENTH-CENTURY MUSICIANS IN THE HISTORICAL PORTRAITS EXHIBITION AT OXFORD.

A picture which cannot fail to attract the attention of the observer of human nature, no less than the artist, in the Loan Collection of Portraits—the third of the series—now being exhibited at Oxford, is No. 170, Dr. Charles Burney, painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds. The picture has more colour than is usual with Reynolds, but the rose-red of the robes is so toned down as not to distract the eye from the keen, clean-shaven face, which in no single point suggests the typical musician. It is the face of an acute lawyer, a shrewd man of the world, and the spectator can well believe that the subject was 'continually invited to all the great Tables and parties to meet the Wits and Grandees, without the least reference to music,' an apt quotation from Crisp given in the catalogue. The picture was painted in 1781, when Dr. Burney was fifty-five years old, and he presented it to the Music School at Oxford a few years later. A similar picture, painted for the famous series of Mr. Thrale, at Streatham, and exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1781, cost the sitter £35, according to his accounts for the year.

The pictures are catalogued according to the date of death of the subject; and the first musician amongst these 18th century academic celebrities is Dr. Thomas Tudway, who, as a boy, was a chorister at the Chapel Royal, in 1664 became a tenor lay-clerk at St. George's, Windsor, six years later organist at King's College, Cambridge, and then Professor at that University, and Composer in Ordinary to Queen Anne. Amidst the duties of these positions he found time to make the well-known valuable manuscript collection of ancient church music. The portrait shows a long, thin, kindly face which, however, presents a curiously weird appearance to the modern eye from the heavy, close-fitting black cap which obscures every trace of hair. In his hand he holds a roll of music paper, with the opening of an anthem 'on the occasion of Her Majesty's presence in King's College Chappell, Cambridge, April ye 16th, 1705.' The portrait, painted by an unknown artist, was given to the Music School by Dr. Richard Rawlinson, an eminent traveller, and benefactor to St. John's College.

Beside Dr. Tudway, and in striking contrast as regards appearance, hangs a portrait of the celebrated Dr. Croft, painted by Thomas Murray, a Scotch artist who went to London and achieved some reputation there. The composer of 'God is gone up' is represented with a full, oval face and an expression which indicates a droll turn of mind. The red of his robes is distinctly scarlet; he wears a long white periwig, and has drawn an end of his lace cravat through one of his buttonholes in an ingenious way to keep the other end in place. Dr. Croft, as everybody knows, was first organist of St. Anne's, Soho, then of Westminster Abbey, and Master of the Children and Composer to the Chapel Royal. What is even more to his credit—we have it on the testimony of a brother musician, the aforementioned Dr. Burney—he 'went through life in one even tenor of professional activity and propriety of conduct.' The portrait, which has been engraved by Vertue, was given to the Music School by a Mrs. Whyrley.

The next musician is Dr. John Christopher Pepusch (No. 57), a German who settled in London in 1688 and took an active part in founding the Academy of Antient Music in 1710, and in 1737 became organist of the Charterhouse. He was also elected a Fellow of the Royal Society, an unusual distinction for a musician, which suggests scientific tendencies. His best known composition is the overture to the 'Beggars' Opera,' but that Dr. Pepusch should have composed anything seems inconsistent with Burney's description of him: 'He had a spirit so truly antiquarian that he allowed no composition to be music but what was old and obscure.' The unknown painter has given Pepusch a soft, engaging face, clean-shaven, with a fair periwig falling over his shoulders in the fashion of the time. The picture, like many of those to be described, was the gift of the famous Dr. Philip Hayes.

Dr. Philip Hayes also gave the portrait of James Heseltine (No. 74), organist of Durham Cathedral, 1711-63, and a composer of anthems. The picture, attributed to an artist named Taylor, represents a thin, clean-shaven man in a faded greenish coat, and the usual periwig and cravat.

Next in order comes Dr. William Hayes (No. 88), the father of Philip, also dutifully given by that generous musician to the Music School. The portrait was painted by John Cornish, and if the artist was truthful, William Hayes was a remarkably well-fed man, with a pronounced double-chin and painfully small, even pig-like eyes. It is hardly necessary to mention, perhaps, that he was successively organist of Worcester Cathedral and Magdalen College, Oxford, and became Professor of Music at Oxford in 1742.

No. 140 represents the great Philip—great in more senses than one—the famous 'monopolist of organs,' who is alluded to in the article on St. John's College in the present issue. Who painted this picture is not known, neither is any mention made of the giver. It depicts the subject as a slim young man of twenty years of age, and it is almost impossible to believe that this delicate, dapper youth, with a conventional type of face, grew in later life to be the largest man in England.

In No. 96 we see Bernard Gates, a self-satisfied looking personage, who was connected with the Chapel Royal, first as chorister and finally as master, most of his life, and was also 'Tuner of the Regals' to the Court, a sinecure now abolished. He was much associated with Handel, and 'Esther' was acted at his house by the children of the Chapel Royal on February 23, 1732, and afterwards at the King's Theatre, Haymarket. The portrait, attributed to John Russell, was given to the Music School by Thomas Saunders Dupuis, one of Gates's pupils, 'the boy' of Handel's oratorio productions, and later a famous organist.

No. 105 depicts Karl Friedrich Abel, a famous performer on the viol da gamba. According to the oft-quoted Burney, he 'had a hand which no difficulties could embarrass, a taste so correct and delicate as never to let a single note escape him without meaning; the umpire in all musical controversies.' The face is youthful and refined; it is by an unknown artist, and once more the Music School is indebted to Philip Hayes.

The famous musical historian, Sir John Hawkins (No. 126), is a very old man with rather a pinched mouth—'a matter-of-fact man so exceedingly religious as to abhor mirth except it is printed in the old black letter,' according to Walpole; 'a most unclubbable man' is Dr. Johnson's milder verdict. The picture, which has as a background a book-case, holding volumes of the famous 'History,' was painted by James Roberts, and given by him.

A magnificent gift of Dr. Philip Hayes is No. 136, a full-length portrait of Dr. William Boyce, attributed to Thomas Hudson. The face and attitude, and the whole atmosphere of the picture, give point to Burney's description of the man, 'one of the most honest of our composers, and one of the few who neither pillage from Handel nor servilely imitate him. In the picture Boyce holds in his right hand a book bearing the words 'Solomon-Serenata,' out of compliance to his most ambitious composition.

The last two musicians, like the first two in the catalogue, are placed together. They are Johann Peter Salomon, No. 175, and Sir William Parsons, No. 176. Salomon was a German violinist who settled in England as leader of the orchestra at Covent Garden Theatre in 1781, and subsequently organized subscription concerts in which Haydn took part, and which form an epoch in musical history, since they led to the production of the twelve grand symphonies by Haydn 'composed for Salomon's concerts.' The portrait shows a distinguished-looking man in a white wig, with a handsome lace cravat and ruffles; it was painted by Sir William Beechey.

Sir William Parsons, painted by Charles Wilkins, is a cherry-cheeked old gentleman wearing heavy, horn spectacles, a model of propriety, and therefore eminently fitted to be Master of the King's Music and Instructor in Music to the Princesses, an appointment he received in 1796. Later he became a stipendiary magistrate at Worship Street, for which also his appearance was, no doubt, abundant qualification. As is fitting, this brief account of the portraits of 18th century musicians must be brought to a close with the name of the man to whom Oxford is indebted for so many of them—these last two pictures are the gift of Dr. Philip Hayes.

MR. J. W. DAVISON'S ANAGRAMS.

Among the various journalistic interests of the late Mr. J. W. Davison—the redoubtable musical critic of The Times—was his editorship of the Musical Examiner. Like other ventures of its kind, this weekly periodical was short-lived, a little over two years; but if brief, its career was a merry one, resulting from the quips and fun of its editor. Subjoined is a specimen of an anagrammatic criticism, from the pen of 'J. W. D.,' which appeared in the aforesaid journal of June 17, 1843. We give the extract literatim et verbatim from a bound volume of the periodical which formerly belonged to Sir George Smart.

FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE.

From our own Correspondent.

EL DORADO, July 4, 1842.

Dear Mr. Examiner,

I have reached this outlandish place at last, and proceed at once to give you the musical intelligence of most interest; and first as to concerts, of which we have many here. The following was the programme of the eighth Mihphnacrol, or harmony-loving concert, one of the best of the season:—

PART I.

Sinfonia	-	-	-	-	-	-	Zormta.
Scena, Uneige	-	-	-	-	-	-	Vhtebneeo.
Concerto, (Peitaroofn,)	Lemodsehsnn	-	-	-	-	-	Lemodsehsnn.
Duo, Mbiirsch and Soigrnaomr	-	-	-	-	-	-	Mreeyeabr.
Overture, "Iofselnigal"	-	-	-	-	-	-	Lemodsehsnn.

PART II.

Sinfonia	-	-	-	-	-	-	Vhtebneeo.
Romance, Soigrnaomr, ("Hsutgoun")	-	-	-	-	-	-	Mreeyeabr.
vailo obligato, Mtrlrmoa	-	-	-	-	-	-	Mreeyeabr.
Concerto, (Vniol) Mervbolrag	-	-	-	-	-	-	Maruer.
Scena, Mbiirsch	-	-	-	-	-	-	Zormta.
Overture, "Jeuebli"	-	-	-	-	-	-	Rweeb.
Leader, Rmerdlo.	-	-	-	-	-	-	Conductor, Grismrtasgroee.

Zormta's symphony—the perfection of gentle loveliness—was marred throughout by the painful inefficiency of the conductor, who has no control whatever over the orchestra. The opening allegro was too slow. The charming andante in A flat, the very essence of feminine beauty, which, to distinguish it from all other andantes, should be called UNEIGEE, (for was it not the love-dream of the great composer?—the laying bare the inmost recesses of his passionate soul?—the opening of his all expansive heart?) was ruined by the pointless, indifferent, tardy, feelingless, and slovenly manner of its execution. The minuetto and trio, which the band have been a quarter of a century in the habit of playing, and the conductor nearly half a century endeavouring to understand—the very simplest of simplicities—was tamed down to nothingness by the unappreciation of all concerned. The finale, the acme of graceful coquetry—the spirit of prettiest playfulness—an April day of sunshine and showers—many-coloured as the rainbow—sparkling as a fountain sporting with the sunshine—beaming with endless variety of expression as the starry eyes of Uneigee, now suffused in tears, now dancing in the light of their own loveliness—was almost vulgarised by the utter absence of accentuation, the great secret in the performance of orchestral music, which should be taught by the conductor, but which can never be taught at the Mihpihnacrol, with its multiplicity of conductors of every degree of merit, from Lemodsehsnn, and Tnenbte, down to Aetne and Grismrtasgroee. And all this mangling and murdering of Zormta's fine symphony took place absolutely under the nose of the great Lemodsehsnn, the king of the orchestra, who was condemned to listen, and to writhe under the infliction. Alas! for the Mihpihnacrol! When will it be taught wisdom? Why was not Tnenbte asked to conduct on such an occasion? Only, we presume, because he is a young man, and decrepit twaddlers abominate the springy elasticity of youth. The superb scena of Vhtebe neo, notwithstanding the disadvantage under which it laboured of being transposed from E flat to C, in order to come within scope of the rich contralto voice of Uneigee—every note of which is a passion translated into sound—produced its wonted effect. The singing of Uneigee was all but perfect—a shade more of confidence in her own unerring impulses—a modicum more of the abandon which such music as that of Vhtebe neo imperatively demands, and we should not have a fault to find. Her delivery of the recitativo was impressive and classical, a thought perhaps too tranquil, but still beautifully intonated, and in the best declamatory style. Her aria was most impassioned. At the words

Per pietà non dirmi addio
 Di te privò che farò?

her manner was most eloquent. Who could have forsaken her?—who would not have remained in her presence to eternity? At the words

Tu lo sai, bell' idol mio
 Io d' affanno morirò.

her evident emotion spoke volumes in proof of her entire feeling of the infinite meaning of the music; but when she came to these lines—

Ah crudel! tu vuoi ch' io mora,
 Tu non hai pietà di me.

(Pity on the pitiless!)

Perchè rendi a chi t' adora.
 Così barbara mercè.

I was fairly beside myself—fairly in a heaven considerably higher than the highest of Mahomet's—the united influences of Vhtebe neo, the Shakspeare of music—and Uneigee, the Queen of song—had well nigh proved more than my organs of sensation could endure—the words of a chi t' adora—the living melody to which they are married—and the voice of the beautiful songstress——like the voice of one's own soul,

 Heard in the calm of thought; its music long,
 Like woven sounds of streams and breezes—rang in my ears with such intense reality, that it was not till the shouts of delight—which, from every part of the room, welcomed the great Lemodsehsnn, as he took his seat at the peitaroofn—aroused me from my trance—which,

"Like a dark flood suspended in its course," stood still to listen to the "many a voice of one delight"—loudly proclaiming the great composer's presence—that I knew I was in the Hsragnoouoamurser,* amidst a crowded audience, who perhaps shared not one iota of my sensations.—A chi t' adora!! oh! what infinite words—when springing from the lips of Uneigee!—like a living fountain of hope—of hope for which the heart panteth,

"As the hind at noon for the brooks"— or as the parched lips of Diverus in torment, for the drop of water which Lazarus in bliss denied him!

As I prepared to listen to the magic of sound which Lemodsehsnn was going to pour out—like wine from an enchanted cup—a spirit flitted by me—whose presence felt, not seen, for my looks were fixed on Lemodsehsnn—was as a fragrant summer breeze, and fanned my fevered cheeks with its balmy influence—I knew, though I saw not, that UNEIGEE had entered the room—for even Uneigee can listen with ecstasy to the eloquence of Lemodsehsnn—and I was happy. To describe in words the effect of Lemodsehsnn's performance of his own concerto—requires at least that I should be Lyslhee—and as I am not Lyslhee, I shall not attempt it. Suffice it, the concerto itself—especially the final movement—a coruscation of sparkling and delicate beauties—was everything I could wish, and the execution of it a veritable marvel. The cadence (extemporaneous) at the end of the first movement was masterly and splendid—and the entire performance excited the audience to a tumultuous pitch of enthusiasm so great, indeed, that Lemodsehsnn—after leaving the orchestra, was compelled to return and receive the long continued plaudits which did homage to his genius. As a clever young musician remarked to me at the moment—"The right star was in the ascendant"—our party triumphed—music had mounted the pedestal and kicked down charlatanism with a kick of scorn, to grovel in the mire, which is its birthplace. Mreeyeer's duet is a succession of vapid roulades, winding up with a tasteless quadrille tune. The astonishing overture to the "Iofsfeiniga" which Lemodsehsnn composed on the spot, under the influence of the wild and rugged scenery in which Iofsfeiniga's cavern is buried—was welcomed by a loud and general encore. It was most gratifying to me to witness the delight playing on the intelligent faces of so many of our young El Doradian composers, as they gazed with admiration at the great musician, who, fired with an inward fire, presided over the orchestra which was giving a voice to the whirlwind of sound that his imaginative mind had pre-conceived—his noble countenance flashing with the light of genius—animated with the unearthly excitement he had himself created, for himself—a veritable young Faust, dreaming of the love his newly-acquired power had placed within his grasp—his soul flying to his "Gretchen"—

Rapidly as comets run
 To the embraces of the sun.

Of the second act I have little or nothing to say. What was good (Vhtebe neo's stupendous symphony for instance) was rendered utterly null by the unsentiment and unpower of the orchestra, which having resumed its labours under the direction of Grismrtasgroee, seemed to have lost all its fire—all its energy—all its soul; in fact, it was utterly put out—a veritable extinguisher was Grismrtasgroee—an awkward candle-snuffer, snuffing out the light. We must except from the general censure Mbiirsch's (a few alterations in the text excepted) almost perfect singing of Zormta's delicious scena, and we must protest in detail against the absurd, mock sentiment of Mgecroatktean, the obsoi, who, in Vhtebe neo's first movement, holds on a G till one is sick of the sound of it, plainly showing that he thinks more of the oeob part (Oh! fly on a wheel! how quickly we go along!) than of the score of Vhtebe neo. Nor can we permit to pass without animadversion the absurd exhibition of the principal vailo (in the Mihpihnacrol band!!!) in the trumpy romance from the "Hsulgouna." Maruer's concerto was as dry as a chip, and the "Jeuebli" overture is all rant and fustian (one or two passages excepted), the very weakest of Rweeb's orchestral compositions.

I cannot dismiss this concert without expressing my utter contempt for the exhibition which took place at the rehearsal on Saturday, when some of the menials of the orchestra (a few third vniiols and life guard band's men), had the gross impertinence to insult (by means of hissing) one of the most distinguished artists of El Dorado, merely because he had displayed (at the last concert but one) an independence in expressing his disapproval of a certain disgraceful part of the performance, which spoke volumes in his favour to all rightly constituted minds. Who ever heard of a band of strolling violinists rising up to hiss the audience?—Adieu for a space—

Your's,
GALAOR.

Some of our readers may find amusement in deciphering the above anagrams of 'J. W. D.' Next month we shall furnish a complete clue to this outspoken criticism; in the meantime we will only say that 'Unegee' was a distinguished vocalist with whom the great critic was at that time desperately in love!

Church and Organ Music.

THE CHURCH CANTATA.

Like many good things that have enriched the world, the Church Cantata reached its full fruition through the process of evolution. It is true enough that one man—a giant of the art, John Sebastian Bach—perfected the form, but previous workers in the same field must not be forgotten. Before digging down to the roots, so to speak, of Bach's masterful achievements; it is no less interesting than important to emphasise the fact that the Church Cantata is essentially a people's heritage. The claim to this possession may be traced to two causes—firstly, that this art-form is deeply impregnated with those religious instincts common to all sorts and conditions of men; and secondly, that as it is indissolubly bound up, or welded together, with the choral or hymn-tune, it essentially belongs to the church song of the great congregation. Its prototype, the oratorio, is not only painted on a larger canvas, but relies for its strength and vivifying force upon a dramatic environment. Not so the smaller and more devotional genre, the Church Cantata, which consists mostly of Biblical truths presented in a musical form which the common people hear gladly, and in which they are enabled to take their own part to their Godly solace and comfort.

Spitta tells us that 'the Church Cantata sprang from a juxtaposition of separate passages of scripture and of verses from congregational or devotional hymns.' This form, however, alone predominated until the dawn of the 18th century: 'it was after that date,' says Spitta, 'that the recitative and the Italian form of aria began to be introduced into it,' as is so abundantly evidenced in the works of Bach. Three 17th century musicians had much to do with the evolution of the Church Cantata. The first of these in the order of seniority is Andreas Hammerschmidt, a little-known Bohemian musician born in the year 1612. For thirty-six years (1639-1675) he was organist at Zittau, where he died in 1675. His epitaph describes him as 'that noble swan who has ceased to sing here below, but now increases the choir of angels round God's throne; the Amphion of Germany, Zittau's Orpheus.' A modest man, who led an uneventful life, Hammerschmidt through his compositions achieved fame throughout Northern Germany: moreover, he was on terms of intimacy with the leading musicians of his day. He drank deeply from the life-giving well of Heinrich Schütz, one of the great fathers of church music and twenty-seven years his senior; but he struck out a line of his own without the consciousness that his simple methods were to be the foundation upon which other men were to erect their imperishable temples. In his 'Dialogi oder Gespräche zwischen Gott und einer gläubigen Seele' (Dialogues between God and a faithful soul), published at Dresden in 1645, Hammerschmidt 'opened a new vein in sacred composition.' To quote further from the Rev. J. R. Milne's article on the composer in Grove's 'Dictionary' (new edition): 'Bible or chorale texts are so chosen as to give occasion to a certain dramatic contrast of the voices; thus for instance, texts of prayer or complaint, sung by one or two voices, are immediately followed or accompanied by answering texts of promise or comfort, sung by another voice.' Hammerschmidt had a strong love for chorales—of which he composed some that are still in use in the Lutheran Church—and by introducing them into his compositions he has every claim to be regarded as one of the chief progenitors of the Church Cantata.

Another and less familiar name even than Hammerschmidt—it is not to be found in Grove's Dictionary—is that of Franz Tunder (1614-1667), a pupil of Frescobaldi's and the immediate predecessor of Buxtehude in the organistship of the Marienkirche at Lübeck. Sir Hubert Parry ('The music of the 17th century, Oxford History of Music') says that Tunder's compositions 'comprise elaborate and lengthily developed solos and duets with instrumental accompaniment, motets, settings of psalms, dialogues to both Latin and German words, settings of chorales and works on a large scale based on chorales. . . . But the most notable of all are his remarkable works on chorales, which show in an exceptional manner the tendencies which culminated in the methods of J. S. Bach.'

The last of these three progenitors is the famous Dietrich Buxtehude (1637-1707), of whom it is well and truly said that the best testimony to his greatness is the fact that J. S. Bach made a journey on foot of 250 miles to Lübeck in order that he might become acquainted with the 'Abendmusiken,' given in the Marienkirche during Buxtehude's organistship. These 'Abendmusiken' were very enjoyable music-makings, not unlike those so successfully given at some of our Cathedrals once a month on week-days. Begun in 1673, these performances, then peculiar to Lübeck, took place before Christmas, on the last two Sundays of Trinity, and the second, third and fourth Sundays in Advent; they immediately followed the afternoon service and lasted one hour, from four to five. Spitta says that Buxtehude must not be regarded as having instituted these 'Abendmusiken,' since he himself has recorded in a church register (which still exists) that they were customary of old. 'As to where they originated,' records Spitta, 'and on what occasion, only the vaguest guesses were rife, strangely enough, even in the 18th century. What, however, remains certain is that Buxtehude raised them to greater importance. On these evenings concerted sacred music especially was performed, both longer and shorter pieces; but of course it must be understood that Buxtehude was to be heard between the pieces as an accomplished organist.'

The zeal of Buxtehude in the discharge of his duties as director of the music at the Marienkirche is thus referred to by Spitta ('Life of Bach,' Eng. trans. i, 259):

'In 1680 he organised a grand performance, in which an orchestra of nearly 40 persons were engaged besides the singers and the organ. For this purpose the indefatigably zealous musician had himself written out about four hundred sheets, and as the profits did not answer to the outlay, the church allowed him an additional sum of one hundred marks. It might seem from this that the 'Abendmusiken' were regular church concerts, to which admission was by payment.

This, however, certainly was not the case; entrance was always free, as if to Divine service. But it was the custom to have the books of the words of all five concerts neatly bound together, and to send them to the houses of the well-to-do citizens of Lübeck; and it was a matter of honour on the part of the recipients to send back an adequate honorarium. The impresario of the concerts was thus reimbursed for his outlay, and paid himself with the possible surplus. What Buxtehude developed out of the 'Abendmusik' proved to be an institution which struck deep root in the life of the citizens of Lübeck, was kept up throughout the whole of the 18th century, and was even carried on during part of the nineteenth.

Buxtehude's influence upon Bach in his instrumental compositions can also be traced in the choral works, though perhaps in a lesser degree. For the 'Abendmusiken' Buxtehude composed several church cantatas. In these compositions are to be found some foreshadowings of Bach's methods, for the details of which the reader is referred to Spitta's Life of the great Cantor.

It would be interesting to know Handel's treatment of the church cantata. Speaking of the music in the Halle churches about the year 1700, Chrysander, in his 'Life of Handel' (vol. i., p. 63) says: 'What he [Handel] composed was at once performed. His first-fruits at Halle, among which there were certainly several hundred church cantatas, he never thought worth the keeping, and the libraries of his native town were too full of tracts and polemical theological treatises to allow of space for the productions of the organists of the town.' To think of 'several hundred church cantatas' by Handel that are irrecoverable! But may not he have used up some of this material in his imperishable oratorios?

Whatever pleasure and satisfaction may be gained by looking into and estimating the value of the older church cantatas, everything pales under the radiance of John Sebastian Bach. 'We feel the same ground beneath our feet,' says Spitta, 'but all around us is transformed as with the wand of a magician. An undreamt-of wealth of new phenomena meets our gaze on all sides; grand tone-pictures in new, strange and diversified forms, single ideas of stalwart growth, and of free and noble birth; poetic inspirations of such unspeakable depth, that we are impressed with an unearthly awe.' This may appear strong language and savouring of the hyper-eulogistic, but those who have studied these masterly creations of Bach's will be prepared to stand by every word of the great magician's biographer. It may not be assumed that every one of the two hundred church cantatas that Bach composed attains the same level of exalted creativeness; but the more they are studied, the more their bed-rock strength, and their earnest and devotional characteristics, are realized. Until within recent years these products of Bach's genius were as sealed books to English musicians; now, however, through English versions of the German texts, they have become available to those who can appreciate, and are not afraid to wrestle with apparent difficulties in music so noble, so true, and so divinely conceived.

The attention of those who are interested in the higher education of choir-boys of cathedrals and churches is directed to the Goss Scholarship, tenable at the Royal Academy of Music for three years, of which the next election will take place at the Royal College of Organists on June 9, the Council of that institution having the bestowal of the scholarship. Full particulars can be obtained at the Royal College of Organists, Kensington Gore, S.W.

OBITUARY.

The death took place at Doncaster, on April 2, of Mr. R. M. Rogers, for twenty-five years organist of the parish church (1879-1904), to which office he succeeded his father 'Jerry' Rogers, father and son having held that important post for seventy years. As a mark of respect to the deceased musician, the organ at the parish church was silenced on the Sunday following his death, all the services being sung without accompaniment under the direction of the present organist, Mr. Wilfrid E. Sanderson.

The death has also to be recorded of the Rev. Alfred C. Herrman, Chaplain, Precentor, and Hebrew Lecturer of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, who died at the early age of forty-three. He did excellent work for the cause of music in Cambridge, especially among choir-boys.

Mr. W. J. Ineson, a lay-clerk of Hereford Cathedral and a well-known singer, died, we regret to say, on April 20: he occupied his accustomed place in the cathedral on Easter Sunday.

LENTEN SERVICES.

Among many special Lenten musical services the following call for notice:

At St. Paul's Cathedral, on April 10, Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was, as heretofore, reverently performed under Sir George Martin's direction.

The eighteenth annual Service of Praise of the Presbyterian Church of England Association of North London Choirs was held at Highbury Presbyterian Church on March 27, when Stainer's 'Crucifixion' was sung under the conductorship of Mr. Hulbert L. Fulkerson. The soloists were Mr. Alexander Webster and Mr. W. Daniel Richards, while the organ accompaniments were played by Mr. Charles F. Carter.

At St. George's Presbyterian Church, Brondesbury, on April 6, a new sacred cantata, entitled 'The Holy Trinity,' was performed under the direction of the composer, Mr. J. Somerled Macdonald, who is organist of the church. The work—of which the words have been selected and arranged by Mr. W. Y. Harkness—is devotional in spirit and the product of a thoughtful mind. Mr. K. Torquil Macdonald was at the organ, and the choir of the church sang the cantata.

A performance of Haydn's 'Seven Words' was given in St. Stephen's Church, Hampstead, by the St. Stephen's Choral Society, on April 11. The soloists were Miss Grace Angus, Miss E. Pearce, Mr. E. A. Pearce, and Mr. W. J. Wheatland. Mr. A. Kennedy presided at the organ, and Mr. G. A. Hardesty, organist and choirmaster of the church, conducted.

'The Song of the Passion' (according to St. John), composed by Mr. William S. Vinning, was performed at St. Mark's Church, Old Street, on Palm Sunday, the composer presiding at the organ.

The 'Crucifixion' was performed at Holloway Congregational Church on April 5, under the direction of the organist, Mr. W. Alpe, the soloists being Mr. Percy Hewkin and Mr. Bevan Cowley.

Brahms's 'German Requiem' was given in the Church of St. John-the-Evangelist, Leeds, on March 23, under the direction of the organist, Mr. Albert Jowett. The solos were taken by Miss Emilie Green and Mr. S. Ramsden, and Mr. W. H. L. Jackson undertook the difficult task of accompanying on the organ.

LENTEN SERVICES—(continued).

On April 9 the annual performance of Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion took place at the Leeds Parish Church. It has been given almost every Lent for many years past, but this was the first occasion under the direction of Dr. Bairstow, the new organist.

On April 11, a 'Passion Music' selected from the various Passions of Heinrich Schütz was sung at St. Chad's church, Leeds, under the direction of Mr. Percy Richardson, who has already introduced the little-heard Passions of Graun and Handel.

Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion was given in Ripon Cathedral on April 11 under untoward circumstances. The singer who was to have been 'Narrator' was ill, a substitute could not be procured, so at a moment's notice the narration, which is in a sense the backbone of the work, had to be taken by a choir-boy, an unprepared tenor, and a volunteer baritone, in turn. Mr. C. H. Moody conducted.

At Huddersfield Parish Church the Oratorio Society—chorus of 100 voices and full band and organ—performed Spohr's oratorio 'Calvary' on April 4. The unusually large number of solo parts was sung by thirteen members of the choir, with Madame Emily Berry in the part of Mary, the trio being taken by three of the choirboys. Dr. A. Eaglefield Hull, organist and choirmaster of the church, conducted, and Mr. Reginald Dixon was at the organ.

Gounod's 'Gallia' was sung in St. Peter's Church, Harrogate, on Sunday afternoon, April 1, under the direction of Mr. John Pullein, who was at the organ.

At a special Lenten Service held in Belfast Cathedral on March 30, the choir rendered some very beautiful specimens of ancient church music in addition to Wesley's 'Wilderness' and Martin's 'Ho, every one that thirsteth.' The two hymn-tunes were a Choral by Luther and an arrangement of Arcadelt's 'Ave Maria.' The chant was Purcell's, and the Service by Orlando Gibbons. The remaining music that was sung consisted of Allegri's 'Miserere' and Morale's 'Lamentation of Jacob' (both unaccompanied), Stradella's 'Righteous art Thou' (solo, 'Pieta Signore,' from 'St. John the Baptist'), Purcell's 'Thou knowest, Lord,' Bach's 'Into Thine hand' (solo from the cantata 'Gottes Zeit'), and the motet 'I wrestle and pray.' The organ voluntaries were a Ricercare on the 1st Tone (Palestrina), and a Toccata (Frescobaldi). The music of this service, in every way a memorable one for Belfast, was under the direction of Mr. C. J. Brennan, organist of the cathedral.

Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater,' in the English version of Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, was sung at St. George's United Free Church, Edinburgh, on April 10, with Mr. Alfred Hollins, organist of the church, at the organ. The soloists were Miss J. Black Thomson, Miss M'Kisack, Miss Robina Grant, Mr. G. L. Ross and Mr. Alfred C. Young. The choruses were sung by the Musical Association of the church, and Dr. Harold Ballantyne conducted.

The sacred cantata 'Olivet to Calvary,' by Mr. J. H. Maunders, was given on Good Friday evening in the British Embassy Church, Paris, by a special choir of fifty voices, under the direction of the organist and choirmaster, Mr. Percy J. Vincent. The soloists were Miss G. Claire Tunstall, Miss Bennett, Mr. Arthur Plamondon, and Mr. G. Nelson Holt. Miss Sheppard (sub-organist) played the organ accompaniments.

On Good Friday evening Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Hummel's 'Alma Virgo' were impressively performed at Willenhall Parish Church, with Mr. A. A. Nicholls at the organ, and Mr. H. C. Perks as conductor.

HANDEL'S 'JUDAS MACCABÆUS.'

TO THE EDITOR OF 'THE MUSICAL TIMES.'

DEAR SIR,—The interesting article on 'Judas Maccabæus' in THE MUSICAL TIMES for April induces me to offer a few remarks which I hope you will favour me by inserting.

No. 49, 'Ye worshippers of God! Down with the polluted altars,' leads properly into No. 51, 'Oh! never, never bow we down to the rude stock or sculptur'd stone'; but the connection is quite destroyed by the interpolated air, 'Wise men flatter,' which would be more suitable in E flat.

No. 56, 'So shall the lute,' is in B flat. This is followed by No. 57, 'From Capharsalama,' in C, one of Handel's finest recitatives, and usually sung by a contralto. If transposed a fourth higher, commencing with the chord of F on the sixth, and sung by a tenor with good declamatory power, it would be vastly improved, and produce a great effect. The termination in the key of D would then appropriately lead to No. 58, 'See the conquer'ing,' in G. I believe that Sir Frederick Bridge had the recitative thus sung at the last performance of 'Judas' by the Royal Choral Society. I wonder how it stands in Handel's MS. score?

Truly yours,
SAMUEL SMITH.

Reviews.

Antoinette Sterling and other celebrities: stories and impressions of artistic circles. By M. Sterling Mackinlay, M.A. Oxon. With 16 portraits and facsimiles.

[Hutchinson & Co.]

With commendable filial affection Mr. Sterling Mackinlay gives his mother, Madame Antoinette Sterling, the place of honour in his somewhat discursive book of 340 pages. From a strictly biographical point of view he disarms criticism when he says (p. 145): 'It is not for him to undertake anything in the nature of a proper memoir of her life.' As a matter of fact the dates of neither Madame Sterling's birth nor death are to be found in the volume, which, in regard to its main theme, 'claims to be no more than a very slight sketch of the career and personality of one who was ever the truest of friends and the kindest and best of mothers,' as her son so truthfully records. Mr. Mackinlay gives November 5, 1873 (Rivière's Promenade Concerts), as the date of his mother's first public appearance in England, forgetful of the fact—as was pointed out in THE MUSICAL TIMES of February, 1904 (p. 114)—that, as a young girl, she sang at several concerts in the West of England and elsewhere during the autumn of 1868. The author's memory has also slightly failed him in the statement (on p. 187), 'When Brahms came over to England,' &c. Now it is a notorious fact that the composer never set foot on these shores; therefore the tin-of-sardines story, with which he associates Brahms on the page referred to, must belong to some other gentleman, who 'raised the sardine-tin to his lips and drank down the oil which was left.'

As the sub-title of this attractive volume implies, Mr. Mackinlay covers a wide field in his anecdotal gleanings, the chapter headings following those devoted to Madame Sterling, being the Garcia family and the lesson-giving of the famous centenarian teacher (three chapters), 'The St. James's Hall Ballad Concerts,' 'More musicians,' 'Leighton and his contemporaries,' 'The Academy,' 'The Lyceum Theatre,' 'Theatrical thoughts,' and 'Some writers and clerics.' In all of these the author gossips pleasantly and genially enough, with the result that his book is distinctly readable and, moreover, valuable in the home-light it tenderly throws upon the strong and magnetic personality of a distinguished singer. The well reproduced portraits and facsimiles add to the attractiveness of the volume.

Suite in F. By C. H. H. Parry. Arranged for pianoforte solo by Emily R. Daymond.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

This Suite was specially written by Sir Hubert Parry for the amateur string band conducted by Helen Countess of Radnor; consequently it is known as 'Lady Radnor's Suite.' The work consists of a Prelude, Allemande, Sarabande, Bourrée, Slow Minuet, and Gigue. The composer breaks away from the early suite in adopting different keys for the movements, but with this exception the music is modelled on the old form, of which so much was made by our forefathers. In their general character Sir Hubert's strains are genial, even at times merging into the jovial, and, the numbers being well contrasted, the Suite is interesting and effective. The pianoforte arrangement has not only been cleverly done, but it presents a series of short and distinctive solos, some of which are very easy to play and none exceptionally difficult of execution and, moreover, they produce considerable effect on the instrument.

Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy. Von Ernst Wolff.

[Verlag 'Harmonie,' Berlin.]

The author of this interesting book notes the strange fact that no worthy biography of the composer has hitherto appeared in Germany. As regards the volume under notice, Dr. Wolff, being limited as to space, makes no pretence of having furnished a comprehensive life. He has relied to a large extent on the late Sir George Grove's 'Mendelssohn' article in the 'Dictionary of Music and Musicians,' which he describes as a 'remarkably erudite piece of work, of genuine English thoroughness and keen artistic judgment,' and he further remarks that 'as it is buried in a comprehensive and expensive encyclopedia, and up to now remains untranslated, it scarcely counts so far as the general German reading public is concerned.' In addition to this Grove article our author has had access to many hitherto unpublished letters. These, and many other communications written by Mendelssohn, says our biographer, are the principal source for an account of his life; but Dr. Wolff notes two other well-springs which for the present are dry, or in other words, not available, viz., the composer's diaries; also the manuscript literary remains bequeathed by Ferdinand Hiller to the municipal archives of Cologne, which are not to be opened until thirty years after his death, i.e., until 1915, and these, he presumes, will throw much light on many points in Mendelssohn's life and art-work.

And now for a few words respecting Dr. Wolff's volume. He has treated the early years of the composer at greater length than the later ones, and for the good reasons that the development period of a genius is of great historical interest, and also that Mendelssohn's is less fully known than that of his maturity. Many interesting details are given of the composer's home-life, of his visits to Goethe at Weimar, and of his masters Zelter and Berger. Mendelssohn's mother was his first teacher, and his love for Bach came from her, but Zelter's influence later on was very strong. Mendelssohn's revival of the 'St. Matthew' Passion in 1829 is justly accounted one of his noblest deeds; but Dr. Wolff brings out very clearly the fact that Mendelssohn before 1823 had heard excerpts from the work at Zelter's Friday musical evenings; and in the same year a copy of the score made by Eduard Rietz at the request of the composer's grandmother was presented by her to her grandson as a Christmas gift. With regard to the performance in 1829, our biographer notes the fact that Mendelssohn was so thoroughly acquainted with the work that he conducted all the rehearsals without book. Again, in that same year he performed Beethoven's E flat Pianoforte concerto at the London Philharmonic Society without music, a work which Dr. Wolff declares 'no one up to then had ventured to play in public.' This, however, is a mistake, as is proved by the 'Occasional Note' which appeared in the April issue this year of THE MUSICAL TIMES, p. 241. Playing without music is often supposed to have originated with Hans von Bülow; anyhow, there was much talk about it when he gave his recitals in London. One would have thought that he had acquired the habit from Liszt, yet we are told presumably on good authority that the latter almost invariably played from book.

There are many interesting facts and comments in the volume under notice; but space forbids, and we must confine ourselves to brief mention of the biographer's appreciation of Mendelssohn's art-work. Of the Octet, the 'Midsummer night's dream' and 'Hebrides' overtures, the 'Scotch' symphony, and other notable compositions the usual and well-justified admiration is expressed, but Dr. Wolff points out that the composer's strong lyrical nature was against his ever achieving success on the stage, and that although he wrote many delightful songs they lacked the depth of feeling displayed in those of Schumann and other composers. He also states that in the course of over half-a-century the tooth of time has gnawed (genagt) at Mendelssohn's works, but consoles himself with the fact that such is the fate of all who are great in the kingdom of art.

There are many attractive portraits, pictures (drawings by Mendelssohn), and facsimiles, among the latter a letter, hitherto unpublished, addressed to the composer by Wagner in 1845, requesting him to give a concert to help the fund for the erection of a monument to Weber. In addition to an appendix, there are many valuable notes and a bibliography.

Theodor Leschetizky. By Annette Hullah.

[John Lane.]

No one could object to the inclusion of Theodor Leschetizky in Mr. John Lane's attractive series 'Living masters of music,' for is he not the master of Paderewski, Slivinski, Gabrilowitch, Hambourg, Buhlig, Frank Merrick, Essipoff, Katherine Goodson, and a host of other pianists? Born nearly seventy-six years ago, at Lancut (Austrian Poland), he was a pianoforte pupil of his father and Carl Czerny, and of Sechter (composition). He began to teach at the age of fourteen, and for twenty-six years lived at St. Petersburg, gaining a great reputation as a teacher. In 1878 he removed to Vienna, where he has since resided, and exercised his magnetic power of imparting pianoforte technique and firing young pianists with his own artistic zeal. In the early part of his career, Leschetizky obtained fame as a public performer in various countries, including England; to his first appearance in London we refer on p. 320. Miss Annette Hullah has discharged her task with commendable skill. Not the least interesting part of her narrative is that devoted to the Leschetizky 'method,' whereby so many pupils of the master have benefited, and through them the works they have interpreted have given pleasure to countless listeners. The anecdotes in the book may be sampled in the following extract:

While Leschetizky was staying in London, Mr. Kuhe gave one of these lengthy concerts [then in vogue] at Brighton, and the former went down to hear it. But when he arrived he was tired after the journey and in the mood for a quiet evening; the armchair was comfortable; it began to rain—he did not go. Next morning he was walking about the parade enjoying the sunshine and the sea air, quite happy and entirely oblivious of the concert for the moment, when up came Mr. Kuhe, weary and reproachful: 'Why did you not come to my concert last night?' Leschetizky stared at him, apparently horror-struck, 'The concert! Good heavens,' he exclaimed, 'You don't mean to say it is over already!'

The statement (on p. 21) that in 1882 Leschetizky's second opera 'Die erste Falte' was brought out at Mannheim is liable to cause confusion, as the work was first performed at Prague fifteen years earlier, in 1867; and Bartolozzi's caricature of Dr. Arne—one of the nine illustrations in the book—can scarcely be accepted as literally representing the 'old style of playing,' any more than a caricature of Leschetizky could be taken seriously as the 'new style.' These handy little biographies would be improved by the addition of an index.

The Orphan. Dramatic poem by Carmen Sylva. With pianoforte accompaniment by Stanley Hawley.

I love thee. Song. Words by Thomas Hood. Music by John Pointer.

[Novello & Co., Ltd.]

Mr. Stanley Hawley has musically illustrated a considerable number of well-known poems for recitation, and 'The Orphan' is one that comes within that category. The effectiveness of this device very largely depends upon judicious playing by the pianist, for if the music be permitted to overpower the speaker, it distracts the attention of the listener instead of deepening the significance of the words. A great deal also depends upon the character of the poem. In the present instance the musical accompaniment is certainly justified, and, in the hands of an adept pianist, Mr. Hawley's strains would heighten the suggestion of the supernatural conveyed by the poet's lines.

Mr. Pointer's setting of Hood's amorous lyric is duly impassioned. The pulsating beat in the accompaniment and the frequent boldness of the harmonies heighten the impatient and yearning sentiment of the song, which may be recommended to tenor vocalists.

Sleeping. Words by Alfred Hyatt. Awaking. Words by Francis Strangeways. Music by S. Gatty Sellars.

Crossing the Bar. Words by Tennyson. Music by Dyson Williams.

[Charles Woolhouse.]

Mr. Sellars has put graceful and expressive music to lines of poetic character severally by Mr. Hyatt and Mr. Strangeways. 'Sleeping' deals with weariness of mind which can only find consolation in quiescence. To this 'Awaking' forms an effective contrast. It is, perhaps, the more acceptable of the two songs.

Lord Tennyson's 'Crossing the Bar' seems to have an irresistible attraction to composers. Mr. Dyson Williams's setting has the merit of being unpretentious, and the principal theme is sympathetic and melodious.

BACH CHOIR.

QUEEN'S HALL, April 2 and 4.

The Bach Choir, founded thirty years ago under the conductorship of Mr. Otto Goldschmidt, and now under the direction of Dr. Walford Davies, furnished every evidence of renewed vitality at the two concerts, designated 'Bach Festival, 1906,' given on the above dates. The first of the pair of enjoyable music-makings consisted of selections from the great Cantor's rich store of genuine music. Two church cantatas afforded the Choir an opportunity of showing that they can sing with spirit and a due regard to light and shade, though they have still some leeway to make up in regard to attack and grip. Unlike former concerts of the Bach Choir, the word-book on this occasion contained no annotations whatever, otherwise some interesting information might have been obtained from Spitta concerning the two cantatas 'Erschallet ihr Lieder' (composed for Whitsuntide) and 'Liebster Gott, wann werd' ich sterben?' ('When will God recall my spirit?') The gem of the selection was perhaps the solo cantata 'Schlage doch gewünschte Stunde' (very beautifully sung by Miss Ada Crossley), in which Bach introduces the passing-bell with exquisite charm. The remainder of the programme included the Concerto in D minor for two violins, artistically interpreted by the Misses Isabel and Eldreda Watt, and two organ solos—the Prelude and Fugue in E minor and the Chorale 'O Mensch, bewein' dein' Sünde gross'—played in masterly style by Dr. H. P. Allen, organist of New College, Oxford. The vocal soloists, in addition to Miss Ada Crossley, were Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Gervase Elwes and Mr. W. Forington.

On April 4 the great B minor Mass was performed, and drew a large audience. The Choir sang remarkably well. It was not that the tone had much resonance, but it was always musical, and the attack was often good, although it never thrilled. The Choir was familiar with the music, and one could, therefore, always trace the complicated texture of Bach's marvellous part-writing. The splendid Sanctus was impressively sung, and the expression obtained in the 'Qui tollis,' 'Et incarnatus,' and 'Crucifixus,' exemplified the control Dr. Walford Davies has obtained over his resources, and the care with which he has studied the work. It seemed to us that the frequent use of rallentando at the ends of movements was unsatisfactory. The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Ada Crossley, Mr. Gervase Elwes (who gave a fine performance of the Benedictus) and Mr. Forington. It may be hoped that the Mass will now be performed every year by this Society. The number of musical people who confess that they have never heard this stupendous masterpiece is astonishing.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

The third concert of the season—Queen's Hall, April 5—brought forward a novelty, so far as London audiences are concerned, in Dr. Cowen's 'Suite of Old English Dances' (Second set). This consists of a quartet of pleasant and wholesome strains typical of the simple life of England in days gone by. The first is a Maypole Dance in A, 6-8 rhythm, which might well have as its motto 'Trip it lightly here and there.' To this succeeds an attractive Peasants' Dance in G minor, with a second section in the tonic major key. A 'Lovers' Minuet' is a movement which, by reason of its melodic beauty and dainty orchestration, is sure to charm by reason of its sweet simplicity. For the last Dance the composer has chosen the variation form, and in the carrying out of his design he has rounded off a composition which not only adds to his reputation but is sure to find favour whenever it is performed. The work, conducted by the composer, was very warmly received.

The remainder of the programme included the 'Zauberflöte' overture, a selection from Berlioz's 'Romeo and Juliet,' and Liszt's Symphonic Poem 'Tasso,' in addition to Tchaikovsky's Violin concerto. In regard to the rendering of the last named and some pieces by Bach, need anything be said? The great artist interpreter was youthful Mischa Elman!

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The Easter term orchestral concert took place at Queen's Hall on April 3, and was conducted by Sir Alexander Mackenzie, under whose experienced guidance the young instrumentalists did themselves and their teachers great credit. The works composed by students comprised an orchestral Idyll by Mr. Montague F. Phillips, and 'Two Poetic Illustrations' by Miss Eleanor C. Rudall. Both compositions showed aptitude and commendable desire to give true expression of independent ideas, combined with considerable skill in part-writing. The solo instrumentalists included Miss F. Margaret Bennett, who gave a fluent reading of the solo part of Saint-Saëns's Pianoforte concerto in C minor (Op. 44); Mr. B. Walton O'Donnell, who showed executive facility in the first movement of Dvorák's Violoncello concerto; and Miss Hilda F. M. Barnes, whose playing in the first movement, and Miss Jessie Bowater, whose rendering of the second and third movements of Mendelssohn's Violin concerto, were full of promise. Of the vocalists, Miss Edith Kirk was specially successful in her reading of the air 'O love, from thy power,' from Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah'; Miss Clara Smith sang commendably 'Mignon's Song,' from Goring Thomas's opera 'Mignon'; Mr. Thomas Gibbs gave a refined interpretation of 'Salve dimora,' from Gounod's 'Faust'; and Mr. F. Percival Driver was heard in 'I fain would hide,' from Weber's 'Euryanthe.'

The following awards have been made: The Charles Mortimer Prize (composition) to Susan Spain-Dunk (Folkestone); the Louisa Hopkins Memorial Prize (pianoforte) to Hilda Rekas (West Horsley).

LONDON CHORAL SOCIETY.

'THE PIED PIPER' AND 'SAMSON AND DELILAH.'

Once again Londoners are indebted to this persevering Society for the chances it gives them of hearing novelties or works rarely performed. Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied Piper' was such an immediate and unqualified success on the occasion of its first performance at the Norwich Festival last year, that there was a widespread, natural desire to make its acquaintance. No doubt the work will soon be in the repertory of every self-respecting society in this country. We need not again point out how admirably Parry's dainty, piquant and humorous music fits the immortal theme as told by Browning. We have now only to record that this performance was a very good one, especially in view of the fact that the work was new. No doubt greater ease, point and resiliency of rhythm will come at a later performance. Saint-Saëns's 'Samson and Delilah' was, on the whole, even better performed by the chorus; the expression was often excellent. The soloists were Miss Rosa Olitzka, Mr. Arthur Winckworth, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. Ffrangcon-Davies. Mr. Arthur Fagge conducted.

The Middlesbrough Musical Union performed Gounod's 'Redemption' in the Town Hall on April 4, under the usual able direction of Mr. N. Kilburn. The solo vocalists were Miss Perceval Allen, Miss Florence Bulleid, Mr. Philip Newbury and Mr. Robert Burnett. Mr. Felix Corbett presided at the organ.

London Concerts.

GUILDHALL SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

The concert given by the students at the City of London School, on March 28, testified to individual talent and good training. Under the direction of the Principal, Dr. W. H. Cummings, the orchestra gave good interpretations of works by Schumann and Weber, and rendered efficient support to Mr. Cecil Montague, who neatly performed the solo part of Hiller's Pianoforte concerto in F sharp minor. Of the vocalists, Miss Winifred Johnson sang with dramatic intelligence Elizabeth's 'Greeting' from the second act of 'Tannhäuser,' and Mr. F. H. Blamey, the possessor of a real tenor voice, delivered 'Salve dimora' from Gounod's 'Faust' with appropriate amorous fervour.

HAYDN'S 'PASSIONE INSTRUMENTALE.'

The chief feature of Miss Grace Sunderland and Mr. Frank Thistleton's chamber concert, on March 29, at Messrs. Broadwood's, was Haydn's rarely-heard 'Passione Instrumentale,' a series of sonatas—really short movements for string quartet—having for their basis 'The seven last words of our Saviour on the Cross.' The quartet was composed in 1785 in answer to a request from the Chapter of the Cathedral in Cadiz for a work suitable for performance in Lent. With the exception of one movement the music does not suggest that Haydn was deeply inspired by his theme, and the Finale, representing the earthquake, is more curious as an early example of programme music than impressive. Another interesting performance was that of a Sonata in D minor for violin solo by Henry Eccles, the English member of the French King's band, in 1720. W. F. Bach's little-known Fugue in F minor, with the introduction written by Mozart, was also played. For these and other works the concert-givers secured the able assistance of Messrs. Allen, Dorling, Krall and Underhill.

VARIOUS CONCERTS AND RECITALS.

Mr. Viggo Kihl, a young Danish pianist, made an excellent impression at his first recital in London on March 26 at Æolian Hall. Greater breadth and boldness were required in his interpretation of Beethoven's 'Waldstein' sonata, but his reading of Bach's Prelude and Fugue in C sharp was admirable, and his renderings of Schumann's 'Nachtstück' in F and pieces by Chopin were instinct with poetical feeling. His finished and refined style gave manifest pleasure to his listeners, who exacted two extra pieces from the young artist.

Miss Vivien Chartres is still full young to claim public attention, but a few lines of encouragement are due to this clever little violinist by reason of the taste and intelligence of her playing at her recital at Queen's Hall on March 27, and because of the satisfactory proofs afforded of her progress. She was most sympathetically accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Hamilton Harty, whose restraint in preserving balance of tone calls for unqualified praise.

Record is merited of Miss Betty Booker and Mr. Francis Harford's second concert at Æolian Hall on March 27, because of the inclusion of Bach's cantata 'Ich geh' und suche mit Verlangen,' and Dr. Vaughan Williams's musicianly setting of Rossetti's 'House of Life.' Both works were excellently rendered.

Supported by Mr. Henry J. Wood and his Orchestra, Mr. Aldo Antonietti afforded much enjoyment by the refined character of his violin playing to a numerous audience at Queen's Hall on March 28. He was assisted by Miss Elsa Reiss, a dramatic soprano.

Miss May Winifred, who gave her first recital on March 29 at Bechstein Hall, is another young violinist who promises to make the future bright with dulcet sounds. Associated with Mr. Percy Grainger she gave a clear and sensitive reading of César Franck's Sonata in A, and also played pieces by Ries, Cui and Wieniawski with executive facility and artistic feeling.

It was good to see a large audience at Madame Irma Saenger-Sethe's second violin recital at Bechstein Hall on March 30, for this lady is a violinist of the first rank, reflecting in notable manner the style of her teacher, M. Ysaye. The gifted lady's programme included Vieuxtemps's Concerto in A minor, Beethoven's Romance in F, and Max Bruch's Concerto in G minor. In all these Madame Sethe played with convincing expression and power. Pleasing variety was contributed by the singing of Mr. Hamilton Earle.

Assisted by the clever pianist Mdlle. Hanka-Schjelderup, and with Mr. Hamilton Harty as accompanist, the Misses Rhoda and Lilla von Glehn gave a concert largely consisting of modern music at Æolian Hall on March 30. Miss Rhoda von Glehn is to be commended for her varied selection of songs, which included examples by Dr. Vaughan Williams, Mr. Quilter and Mr. Cyril Scott, and for her tasteful use of a pleasing, light soprano voice. Miss Lilla von Glehn, who plays the violin neatly, was most successful in Nardini's Sonata in D.

Miss Kathleen Chabôt is one of our most promising young pianists, and her playing at the orchestral concert she gave at Queen's Hall on April 3 may be said to have given her an honourable position in the artistic world. There is an ingenuousness in her readings which, combined with an excellent technique, invest her performances with animation and charm. These qualities were specially evidenced in her playing of Mendelssohn's Concerto in G minor and Eugen d'Albert's brilliant Scherzo in F sharp. A feature of the concert was the performance by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Mr. Henry J. Wood's direction, of a Suite entitled 'Pelleas and Mélisande' by Jean Sibelius. It consists of nine tone-pictures—the third of which was omitted by the desire of the composer—which are distinguished by poetic delicacy and refined feeling. The most striking numbers are a vivacious Entr'acte and the 'Death of Mélisande.' The work should be heard again at an early date.

Mr. Frederic Austin made artistic use of his rich baritone voice at his recital on April 3 at Æolian Hall, and moreover his choice of songs was admirable in bearing witness to a commendable desire to break fresh ground. Mr. Hamilton Harty played the accompaniments most sympathetically, and the brightly-rendered pianoforte solos contributed by Miss Norah Drewett added to the enjoyment of the afternoon.

Few young pianists have more quickly won favour in our concert rooms than Miss Irene Scharrer, and her recital, with Mr. Howard Wilson as colleague, attracted a large audience to Æolian Hall on April 4. The young artist played with captivating vivacity, and Mr. Wilson sang with good intention a remarkably varied selection of songs.

Miss Russell-Graham, a young Scotch violinist and pupil of Sevcík, made her début in London at an orchestral concert, conducted by Mr. Arthur W. Payne, on April 6 at Queen's Hall. The young artist has acquired a fluent technique, but her playing in Tchaikovsky's Concerto indicated that she can yet make more of her abilities, particularly in the important matter of expression. Her début, however, was very promising.

Miss Marie Hall's style is now so well known that little more than record is required of her violin recital at Queen's Hall on April 7. It should be said, however, that this gifted artist gave proof of increasing power of expression—a matter of vital importance with regard to her future—and that the large audience was quick to show its appreciation of this fact. Mr. Hamilton Harty played the accompaniments entirely without music throughout the afternoon, probably an unprecedented feat.

M. Louis Abbate included in his violoncello recital, at Æolian Hall on April 7, Widor's Concerto in E minor and Servais's 'Concerto Militaire'—little-known works and, truth to tell, of small musical value to-day; but M. Abbate imparted considerable interest by the beauty of his tone and finished playing. M. Abbate was assisted by the British Symphony Orchestra, conducted with conspicuous skill by Mr. Julian Clifford.

Record is due of the following performances:—Miss Marie Scherer and Mr. A. J. Slocombe's historical pianoforte and violin recital, Queen's (Small) Hall, March 28; Miss Ethel Nettleship's second violoncello recital, Bechstein Hall, March 28: the Stock Exchange concert, April 3, Queen's Hall; Miss Winifred Christie's pianoforte recital, April 5, Æolian Hall; Mr. Denis O'Sullivan's vocal recital, April 6, Æolian Hall; Miss Jessie Field and Mr. Denis Byndon-Ayres's pianoforte and vocal recital, April 6, Æolian Hall; Strolling Players' orchestral concert, April 9, Queen's Hall; Miss Evelyn Rolfe's vocal recital, April 9, Æolian Hall; Miss Rosina Elston's vocal recital, April 10, Æolian Hall; Mischa Elman's violin recital, April 21, Queen's Hall; Mr. John Dunn's concert, April 21, Æolian Hall; Miss Iona Robertson's concert and dramatic recital, April 24, Bechstein Hall.

The Good Friday concerts included the usual performance of the 'Messiah' by the Royal Choral Society at the Royal Albert Hall, conducted by Sir Frederick Bridge; the sacred concert at the Crystal Palace, at which Mr. Walter Hedgcock ably discharged the duties of conductor; and at Queen's Hall, by the Queen's Hall Orchestra (under Mr. Henry J. Wood's direction), at which was sung a setting by Dr. Walford Davies of Psalm 13 for tenor solo (Mr. Gregory Hast), strings and harps.

Suburban Concerts.

The Nonconformist Choir Union (N.E. London Branch) gave a concert at Clapton Park Congregational Church on April 4, when Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise' and selections from 'Elijah' and the 'Creation' were performed by the choir and orchestra (the latter led by Mr. Edward O'Brien). The solo vocalists were Miss Winifred Marwood, Mrs. Edward Dean, Mr. James Davis, and Mr. Edward Dean. Mr. Edgar Smith presided at the organ and Mr. W. C. Webb conducted.

The Twickenham Choral and Orchestral Society performed Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' on March 29 in the Town Hall, under the direction of Mr. C. T. Weigall. The solo vocalists were Madame Anna Shergold, Miss M. Collinge, Mr. F. H. Blamey and Mr. Walter Ivey.

Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was performed in the Railton Road (Herne Hill) Methodist Free Church on March 28. The chorus and orchestra did capable work, and the principal solo vocalists were Miss Teresa Blamy, Miss Margaret Stone, Mr. Thomas Edgar, and Mr. Bertram Mills. Mr. Henry F. Hall (organist and choir-master of the church) conducted.

At the meeting of The Musical Association held on April 17, Mr. H. Heathcote Statham read a paper on 'The Function of the Organ in accompanying Choral and Orchestral Works. The following is a synopsis of the paper:

Organ and orchestra first considered.—Difficulty of employing them effectively in combination.—The position altered in the case of choral works with orchestral accompaniment.—Use of the organ in such cases (1) As an obligato instrument with a special part written for it; (2) As an ad libitum addition to the total effect.—Three different principles which may govern its use in the latter case.—Æsthetic motives for introduction or suppression of the organ as a colouring effect.—Suggestions for use of the organ in the 'Messiah,' as a typical example.—Relations of organist and conductor.

Musical Competitions.

The springtime is a favourite period for the holding of the musical competitions now organized in numerous districts of the country. Below we give reports that have reached us up to the time of our going to press. More detailed accounts of the junior and school choir sections will be found in the current issue of The School Music Review.

SOUTH LONDON MUSICAL FESTIVAL

(March 19, 21, 23).

This is a new festival, organized by Mr. T. Lester Jones, and its first gathering was a conspicuous success. There were 300 entries and upwards of 800 performers. The meetings were held at the Royal Victoria Hall, Waterloo Road. 'The Lady Palmer' competition for choral societies was won by the St. John's, Paddington, Temperance choir (conductor, Mr. G. F. E. Bartlett). The Gentlewoman contest for ladies' choirs (five entries) provided an excellent competition and really fine singing. Mr. T. Maskell Hardy won a prize with his Stockwell L.C.C. Pupil Teachers' Centre choir, and certificates of merit were awarded to Mrs. Mary Layton's choir, conducted by Mr. Wilfred Layton (owing to the illness of Mrs. Layton), and to Aristotle Road, Clapham, choir (Mr. A. G. Gibbs). For church choirs of mixed voices the Markham Square (Chelsea) Congregational Church gained the first-prize (Miss Margaret Layton), and a competition for choirs from elementary schools (four entries) was won by the Aristotle Road School, Clapham (Mr. A. G. Gibbs). Two concerts were given by prize-winners, the first by juniors in the afternoon (March 29), when Lady Walter Palmer distributed the prizes. Not the least interesting feature of this concert was the excellent singing by the massed choirs from elementary schools, who sang the test-piece 'Lift thine eyes,' under the conductorship of Dr. G. F. Huntley. There was a large attendance at the evening concert given by the senior prize-winners, when Lord Alverstone presented the prizes. He said that the movement had his heartiest approval.

The massed choirs of ladies' voices brought out some fine singing. Dr. Richardson conducted. The violin playing of Miss Constance With, of Norwood, and the singing of Mr. Percy Triggs (bass), of Camberwell, winner of the gold medal for vocalists, deserve special mention. The adjudicators were Mr. Oscar Beringer, Mr. Alfred Gibson, Dr. G. F. Huntley, Mr. Dan Price, and Dr. A. Madeley Richardson.

DOUGLAS, ISLE OF MAN (March 27, 28, 29).

The fifteenth annual festival organized by the Isle of Man Fine Arts and Industrial Guild eclipsed all the former festivals in the magnitude of the entries. There were 2,015 competitors in the thirty-seven classes. A novel class was that for memory pianoforte playing. Douglas Orpheus (Miss Wood) was first in the male-voice choir section, and Castletown (Mr. J. C. Qualtrough) in the chief mixed-voice choir section. Ballasalla (Mr. G. Bates) gained the village choir prize and one in the female-voice choir section, and Ramsey (Miss Wood) the prize in another female-voice choir section.

In the junior classes there were thirty-seven entries for ear-tests, twenty-nine entries for sight-singing, eight Sunday school choirs, and thirteen school choirs. Four choirs of Girls' Friendly Societies sang. The adjudicators were Dr. Sinclair, of Hereford Cathedral, and Dr. J. C. Bridge, of Chester. A concert was given on the evening of March 29. Dr. Bridge conducted the combined choirs, and Mr. Harry Wood directed his orchestra. Spohr's 'God, Thou art great' was one of the works performed. Mrs. Laughton is the devoted and indefatigable honorary secretary of the competitions. The programme book of twenty-eight pages was one of the best got-up we have seen in connection with competition festivals. It was adorned with many apt quotations.

STRATFORD (March 28 to 31).

This long-established Festival continues to make progress. The competitors this year numbered 1,800. Pianoforte playing in all forms and grades is particularly encouraged and there are numerous classes for vocal music.

In the Elementary School Choirs section, Goodwin Road, Forest Gate (Mr. H. T. Earle), and Farmer Road, Leyton, Council School (Miss K. Baker), gained first-prizes.

In the Commercial Choir section the Caxton Choral Society was first. Other successes were Mrs. Grace Day-Winter's Ladies' choir, the Stratford Corporation choir (Mr. Alfred Sears), the London Gleemen (Mr. Seemer Betts), and the Clarinco Choral Society (Mr. T. H. Warner). The pianoforte sections brought forward many excellent performers. Miss Mabel Ford was a chief prize-winner. Miss Agnes Zimmermann, Mr. Oscar Beringer, Mr. Geo. Oakey, Dr. Huntley, Mr. Betjemann, Mr. J. Bates, Mr. Dan Price and Mr. D. W. Rootham adjudicated.

OAKHAM (March 28, 29).

This is a new Festival, and its success was almost embarrassing to the promoters, the chief of whom was the Hon. Mrs. Charles Fitzwilliam, of Oakham. The whole scheme was well prepared, first by a public meeting held last October, at which most of the social powers-that-be in Rutlandshire were represented, and next by the devising of a schedule and classification that met the local situation to a nicety. The main difficulty was the provision of an arena, there being no large hall available. This was got over by dividing the competitors into two sets, and spreading the Festival over two days. Only residents in the county were allowed to compete. Thirty-six centres contributed adult or children's choirs, and in many cases both kinds. Altogether there were about seven or eight hundred competitors. In the Anthem class, in which nineteen choirs sang, Exton, under Lady N. Noel, was first. Twenty-seven choirs sang in the Part-song and Madrigal Class, Mr. Nicholson's Oakham choir gaining successes; Empingham (Miss Trollope) and others coming very close behind. Fifteen female-voice choirs sang, and Mr. Nicholson's choir was again first.

The school classes were equally successful. School teachers are often shy of competitions because of the work they impose. But the other side of the matter is that competition schemes of this kind help a school teacher materially in an important section of his work, and moreover they bring him into pleasant association with the community for whom he labours, and in many cases enable him to display considerable ability that would otherwise have been unappreciated because unknown. The characteristic features of all the school singing were good intonation, musical and sometimes refined tone and tastefulness. The performances of the Wing children, under Mr. Canham, and of the Oakham children, under Mr. Kernick, deserve special mention. Dr. McNaught adjudicated. Concerts were given on each night by the combined adult choirs, under Mr. W. H. Wing. Plain, straightforward part-songs were performed, and nearly everything was encoed each night. The expressive singing of Mr. Chigsall (Royal College of Music) was a feature. General satisfaction, enthusiasm, and great enjoyment seemed to permeate all the proceedings. Mrs. Fitzwilliam and her numerous co-workers made many personal sacrifices to ensure the success of the Festival. It must have been a great satisfaction to them to find that their efforts were so well appreciated by all classes of the community.

KENSINGTON CHORAL AND ORCHESTRAL

COMPETITION (March 30).

In this competition there are four choral sections. Class I. for church choirs, Class II. for sight reading (compulsory), Class III. for three-part singing, and Class IV. for four-part singing. Each section has a separate award. All the choirs combined to sing the motet, 'O praise the Lord' (Mendelssohn), under the direction of Dr. McNaught, who adjudicated.

The church choirs sang 'Jesu, Heavenly Master' (Spohr). There were four entries, and St. John's, Wilton Road, gained the premier position. In the other classes the tests were (three-part), 'In these delightful, pleasant groves' (Purcell), and (four-part) 'A March night' (Brahms). Five choirs sang, and nearly all displayed considerable capacity and fine training. Mrs. Layton's choir excelled in every point. Their full, rich tone, beautiful blend, clear enunciation, dainty rhythm, and fine expression were remarkable, and their sight-singing power, so far as it was tested by the two-part piece submitted, was perfect.

A competition for string orchestras was arranged for this year. It was divided into two sections: (a) One for orchestras composed of ladies, and (b) another for those including both sexes. Mr. Joseph Ivimey adjudicated. The following was the result:

SECTION A.

Test-piece, 'Serenade' (Elgar).

	Maximum—40	Sight.
Mr. Wilfred Barnes .. .. .	31	8
Ladies' Diocesan (Miss Margaret Haweis) ..	40	8
East Essex Ladies (Amateurs only)
(Rev. E. P. Luard) .. .. .	19	7

SECTION B.

Test-piece 'Suite for Strings' (Purcell).

West London (Amateurs only) (Mr. W. Holmes)	19	4
Church Orchestral (Dr. G. F. Huntley) ..	38	8

The prizes consisted of challenge banners and certificates for sight-singing or playing.

LONDON GIRLS' CLUBS (April 7).

The nineteenth annual singing competition of the London Working Girls' Club Union was held on April 7, at the City of London Schools. The clubs were divided into Class I. (advanced) and Class II. (elementary). In Class I. each choir had to prepare four pieces—the motet 'O praise the Lord' (Mendelssohn), 'He in tears that soweth' (Hiller), 'Gipsy Life' (Schumann), and 'Fly, singing bird' (Elgar)—for combined performance. Five clubs entered in this class. The performance of the four pieces, under the Rev. Jocelyn Perkins, was excellent. It was very evident that the drill of each choir separately, with a view to the competition, had enforced close attention to the details of choir training. The solos in the selection were admirably sung by various members of the choirs. Mrs. Baker accompanied.

One important and valuable feature of this competition is that all choirs are required to sing a sight-test—in Class I. in two parts, and in Class II. in one part. All the choirs in both classes sang from the tonic sol-fa notation. The tests were sung first to sol-fa and a second time to laa. In Class II. six clubs competed. The stipulated test-piece was 'O boatman, haste' (Balfé). The St. Edward's Club in Class I., and the Passmore Edwards Club in Class II., both under Mr. W. Holmes, gained the first positions. There are no money prizes; all the awards are pictures. It is evident that no other stimulus is needed, for enthusiasm is abundant. The Hon. Miss Maude Stanley is the secretary. Dr. McNaught adjudicated.

BRISTOL (April 16 to 19, and 21).

This Festival is now in its fourth year, and continues to make progress, although as yet it does not command the support of many choral societies. The strength of the scheme is in the solo-singing and pianoforte-playing sections, in which the entries this year were very numerous, and the standard of performance high. There were 140 solo-singing entries, most of which were heard by Dr. McNaught, who also adjudicated in the choral sections, and there were 120 pianoforte candidates in numerous graded classes, who were judged by Dr. Percy Buck, Mr. R. O. Beachcroft and Mr. Ernest A. Dicks. A pianoforte offered by Messrs. Milsom was won by Miss Olive K. Harris. Brass bands formed a new section, and were heard by Mr. Ord Hume. In all classes there were 345 entries and nearly 1,500 performers. In the male-voice choir section the test-piece was 'The rising storm' (Neumann), and the first place was won by the Bristol Harmonic Choir (Mr. J. Jenkins). In the mixed-voice choir section the St. George Glee Singers gained one more mark than the Helicon choir. In a junior-chor section the Children's Choral Society (Mr. R. E. Simmons) was placed first, and in the school-choir section, in which there were six entries, the Fishponds College Practising School won the challenge shield for the second time. Dr. Buck, who adjudicated in these sections, said that he was agreeably surprised to find so high a quality of singing in elementary schools, and that he did not think he had ever before met such refinement as that shown by the Fishponds choir. In the violin classes Mr. Hans Wessely was the adjudicator. Recitations were a feature, and were judged by Mrs. Tobias Matthay, who also gave an elocutionary entertainment. Mr. W. G. Fowler, a local professor, is the chief promoter.

CHESTER EISTEDDFOD (April 16).

This event was largely attended. The Lord Mayor (the Right Hon. W. Vaughan Morgan) and the Sheriffs of London honoured the gathering with their presence, and lent picturesqueness to the occasion by appearing in all the paraphernalia of office. The Warrington Male-voice choir (Mr. Nesbitt) won the prize in their section, and the Stretford Glee Society won the mixed-voice choir prize.

MUSIC IN TORONTO.

(FROM A CORRESPONDENT.)

The concert season just closing has been in many respects the most brilliant in the history of this city. An unusually large number of excellent concerts has been given, and the liberal patronage extended, particularly to the undertakings of local choral bodies, is a certain indication of rapid development of music in this part of the country. Foremost among our local musical societies, both as regards the number of concerts given, the immense audiences which are attracted to the performances from all parts of this province, and from some of the larger cities of the neighbouring Republic, and more particularly the high standard of efficiency of the chorus, stands the Mendelssohn Choir, under the able direction of Mr. A. S. Vogt, a native-born Canadian of European education. The four concerts given by this Society last February, in conjunction with the Pittsburgh Orchestra, attracted audiences estimated in the aggregate at about 14,000 persons. An additional concert given in Buffalo, N.Y., was attended by over 4,000 people, many hundreds having been turned away who were unable to secure sitting or even standing room. The remarkably refined and virile singing of this admirable chorus in a capella compositions by Tchaikovsky, Cornelius, Gounod, and Brahms, no less than their brilliant work in Beethoven's Choral Symphony, Mendelssohn's 'Walpurgis Night' and 98th Psalm, Grieg's 'Olaf Trygvasson,' and excerpts from the works of Bizet, Elgar, and others, created a profound impression. Several bond fide propositions have been received from New York for an early appearance of the Choir in that Metropolitan centre, and efforts are being made to secure their services in other American cities.

In the sphere of oratorio the principal works given here this year have been 'The Messiah' and the 'Redemption' by the Festival Chorus, under Dr. Torrington. The performances attracted large audiences in each case, and the choir acquitted itself admirably.

'Samson' was given by the Sherlock Oratorio Society, under Mr. J. M. Sherlock; and Bridge's 'Flag of England' was the principal work of Dr. Albert Ham's National Chorus in a concert given in conjunction with the New York Symphony Orchestra (under Mr. Walter Damrosch) in January.

Mr. H. M. Fletcher's Schubert Choir and the same conductor's People's Choral Union gave two excellent concerts, in which Stanford's 'Last Post' and Mendelssohn's 'Lorelei' were the principal choral numbers.

The Male Chorus Club, under Mr. J. D. A. Tripp's conductorship, which has ceased activities for this season, is announced to take up work again next autumn. The concerts of this excellent men's choir have been for many years past among the most enjoyable of local musical events.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.

(FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

Vienna, April 14.

The small French Society for the performance of old music which, under the direction of Casadesus, has been giving concerts all over Germany and Austria during the last two years, has now a rival in a small society hailing from Munich of which Dr. E. Bodenstein is director. Their performances are as refined as those of the French players; moreover their programmes are more trustworthy from an historical point of view, and also more varied. They present no arrangements, only works in their original form; they make use of the pianoforte as well as the harpsichord, and give vocal as well as instrumental music. Certain works by Stamitz proved specially charming.

At the Philharmonic concerts the Prussian Court capellmeister, Dr. Carl Muck, distinguished himself as conductor; he was particularly successful with the 'Variations on a merry theme' by Georg Schumann, conductor of the Berlin Singakademie. The rendering of this brilliant orchestral piece was admirable and riveted the attention of the audience from beginning to end.

Bach's 'St. Matthew' Passion has been exceedingly well performed by the Gesellschaft der Musikfreunde under the direction of Franz Schalk. The excellent soloists were Frl. Kappel (from Frankfurt-on-Main), Frau de Haan-Manifarges (from Rotterdam), and MM. Urlus (from Leipzig) and Zalsman (from Rotterdam). The musical Union of school teachers—'Schubertbund'—which devotes itself specially to Schubert's music, arranged a concert to raise a fund for erecting to his memory a fountain in the parish of Vienna in which the composer died in 1828. The programme consisted of the B minor (Unfinished) symphony, the 'Salve regina' for male voices, and the Mass in E flat; and for the last-named work a special choir was formed, as the Union only has male voices at its disposal. This choir consisted of 500 singers, ladies and gentlemen, the voices in the various sections being admirably balanced. The beauty and fulness of vocal tone were almost overpowering, and the success of the concert was so great that it had to be repeated.

The performance of Beethoven's G major Pianoforte concerto by Backhaus at the Concert Society created marked interest. This pianist, who won the Rubinstein prize last year, proved himself a mature artist. Sureness, both technical and musical, and purity of style are the chief points of his playing; deep feeling may come in time. Among the novelties produced by this Society, an orchestral Suite by E. Bossi deserves mention: if not exactly an original, well rounded-off work, it displays ability. The pianist, Gabrilowitsch, gave a recital of Russian music, the programme consisting of Rimsky-Korsakoff's well-known 'Sheherazade,' Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Concerto, Glinka's 'Jota Aragonese' and an Overture-Rhapsodie composed by the recitalist. At the Orchestral Society Professor Peters, of the Conservatorium, gave a fine performance of Mozart's C minor Pianoforte concerto. As a last performance, in honour of the 150th anniversary of Mozart's birth, 'Figaro'—re-staged and most carefully rehearsed by Gustav Mahler—was given at the Hofoper. The new scenery met with only moderate approval, but on the musical side everything was truly magnificent.

MANDYCZEWSKI.

MUSIC IN BIRMINGHAM.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The last of the Halford concerts for the present season took place in the Town Hall on March 27. The programme comprised Beethoven's 'Egmont' overture and Symphony in C minor, and a selection of pieces arranged from the 'Ring of the Nibelung' and the 'Tannhäuser' overture. Everything was finely given, and Mr. Halford was accorded a great ovation at the close. A new Society, the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, was inaugurated on April 4 with a concert in the Town Hall, Mr. Henry J. Wood conducting. The Society is in its objects akin to its London namesake, but time will prove whether it will be permanently successful. At present the band numbers some seventy performers. The programme of the concert was familiar, the principal number being Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony. Some magnificent playing was heard, Mr. Wood infusing his own spirit into the performers. Mr. Dalton Baker gave Elgar's 'The Pipes of Pan' and two of William Wallace's 'Freebooter Songs' with fine effect. There was a large audience, and great enthusiasm prevailed.

The City Choral Society's season closed on March 29 with one of the finest performances of Gounod's 'Redemption' since its production at the Birmingham Festival of 1882. The chorus sang superbly, and the band brought out all the beauty of the score. Mr. D. Ffrangcon-Davies doubled the parts of the bass Narrator and Jesus, and gave distinction to each; Mr. John Harrison made a successful first appearance here as the tenor Narrator; Mesdames Agnes Nicholls and Alice Lakin undertook the soprano and contralto solos; Miss D. Louie Hunt assisted in the trios; and Mr. Fred. W. Beard ably conducted. The Town Hall was crowded, and the performance was warmly applauded.

A week later, April 5, the forty-sixth Subscription Series of the Festival Choral Society's concerts terminated with a grand performance of Elgar's 'The Apostles.' The vocal principals were Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Madame Marie Brema and Messrs. John Coates, James Coleman, Francis Braun and Ffrangcon-Davies. The band was augmented, and the work was practically given on festival scale, and Dr. Sinclair's conducting was masterly. There was a crowded, attentive and most appreciative audience.

On the evening of Good Friday the Midland Musical Society gave its annual concert, the programme consisting of Sullivan's early oratorio 'The Prodigal Son' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.' The principal vocalists were Miss Amy Kendal, Miss Eva Dickenson, Mr. Henry Plevy and Mr. William Evans. The chorus sang well, the band was efficient, and Mr. A. J. Cotton skilfully conducted.

At the last Oratory Musical Evening, March 26, Mozart's 'Pignus futurae gloriae' and Brahms's 'Beati qui habitant' formed the chief choral pieces. Bishop's 'Spirits, advance!' and 'O, by rivers' were given in the second part. Mr. Theodor Werner and Mr. J. A. Beard were the soloists in Mozart's rarely-heard Concertante Symphonie for violin and viola.

The Students' Orchestral concert of the Midland Institute School of Music was held on April 7. The band was almost exclusively composed of students and teachers, only seven outside engagements having been made; and as the numbers reached to nearly sixty performers, this fact speaks volumes for the work of a provincial institution. The programme included Cherubini's 'Medea' overture, two Entr'actes from 'Pelleas and Mélisande,' by Sibelius, and Haydn's 'Salomon' symphony in C, No. 5. Mr. A. H. Wayne was the soloist in Bach's 'Clavier' concerto in D minor, and Miss D. L. Hunt and Miss Chatterley Ingram contributed vocal numbers by Wagner and Handel.

The musical matinées at the Royal Society of Artists' Rooms were started the same afternoon, under the direction of Mr. Oscar Pollack. The last of the Saturday evening popular concerts in the Town Hall took place on March 24, when Mr. Joseph H. Adams conducted a recital of Gounod's 'Faust,' with Miss Amy Kendal, Miss Marguerite Gell, Mr. Alexander Webster and Mr. John Ridding as soloists, and the band and chorus of the Birmingham Association.

MUSIC IN BRISTOL.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

There was a large attendance at the Victoria Rooms on March 28, when the Society of Bristol Gleemen had their Ladies' Night. Under the direction of Mr. W. J. Kidner, the choir afforded an admirable rendering of a programme in which there were seven pieces given by the Society for the first time. There were two absolute novelties, one a setting of 'Break, break, break,' by Mr. Cyril B. Rootham, dedicated to Mr. Kidner and the Gleemen (conducted by the composer), and the other a quartet, an 'Indian lullaby,' composed by the conductor. Both compositions were favourably received. At intervals songs were effectively rendered by Madame Hilda Wilson.

Bristol North Choral Society gave a highly successful concert on March 31 at the Victoria Rooms, when the scheme included Parts 1 and 2 of 'The Creation,' with Madame Siviter, Mr. Henry Plevy and Mr. Arthur Trowbridge (Wells Cathedral) as soloists, a band led by Mr. F. S. Gardner, with Mr. C. W. Stear at the organ. The performers numbered about 300 and Mr. James Bending conducted with ability.

The Bristol Choral Society brought its season to a close by a concert given at Colston Hall on April 7. The works performed were Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' and Mendelssohn's 'Hymn of Praise,' and these were excellently interpreted under the direction of Mr. George Riseley. Choir and band numbered 500, the leader of the orchestra being Mr. H. Lewis, with Mr. G. Herbert Riseley at the organ. The principal vocalists were Miss Amy Castles, Miss Mabel Braine, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Robert Radford.

At a performance held in the Bristol Grammar School on April 7 a large audience was present. Mr. C. W. Stear gave a recital upon the organ, Miss Celia Dampier, a young Australian, tastefully executed violin solos, and some songs were agreeably rendered by Miss Violet Herbert.

The sixty-second annual 'Ladies' Night' of the Bristol Royal Orpheus Glee Society—which took place on February 22 and inadvertently omitted to be noticed in our last issue—was attended with its customary success and éclat. A delighted audience of some 1300 to 1400 people foregathered in Colston Hall to listen to a charming selection of glees, sung under the direction of Mr. George Riseley. The glees 'Mopsa' and 'Tally Ho!' by Mr. C. Lee Williams, and conducted by the composer, proved to be enjoyable features of the evening's music. Mr. Henry Beaumont was the soloist.

MUSIC IN DUBLIN.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

On March 29 the University of Dublin Choral Society gave a performance of Mozart's Mass in C minor, with full orchestral accompaniment, conducted by Mr. Charles Marchant. Considerable interest was aroused by this, the first performance of this fine work in Dublin. All the solos were sung by members of the Society.

The Orpheus Choral Society gave its third and last concert for this season on April 3. Dr. Culwick presented a fine programme, including 'Cynthia, thy song' (Croce); 'Come, let us join the roundelay' (Beale); 'All hail! thou queen of night' (G. W. Martin)—in which the quartet was well sung by Miss Ruby McConnell, Miss Nora Carty, Mr. W. A. Page and Mr. F. Moore Mease—'Lullaby' (Elgar), and 'Now tramp o'er moss and fell' (Bishop); the last-named proved to be most effective, the solo being brilliantly sung by Miss Kate Cherry. Mr. E. K. Figgis sang songs by Sullivan and Mendelssohn; Mr. Henri Verbrugghen was the solo violinist, and Mr. Arthur Oulton played the accompaniments extremely well.

On April 9 the Dublin Orchestral Society gave one of the most successful concerts it has ever yet given. Dr. Esposito conducted a fine interpretation of Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony, while Mendelssohn's 'Midsummer night's dream' music, 'The entrance of the gods into Walhalla,' 'Waldweben,' 'Die Meistersinger' overture and Esposito's Fairy Music from Dr. Douglas Hyde's 'The tinker and the fairy' completed a most attractive programme; the last-named piece is written for three female voices, six violins and harp. The vocalists were Miss Rafter, Miss Eaton and Miss Edwards; they acquitted themselves well in the Fairy Music (sung in Gaelic) and also in 'The Entrance of the gods.'

On the first four days of Holy Week, Bach's 'Passion' (St. John) was given at St. Patrick's Cathedral, the outstanding feature of these performances being, as for many years past, the artistic singing of the tenor recitatives by Mr. Walter Bapty.

The Feis Ceoil is announced to be held on May 14 and following days. The Festival promises to be most interesting and successful. No fewer than forty-seven choirs have entered for the various choral competitions, and in the solo and concerted competitions, both vocal and instrumental, the entries have been well up to the average of former years.

MUSIC IN EDINBURGH.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The most important concert of the month was that of Mr. Kirkhope's choir on April 3. Two works so opposite in style as Spohr's 'Last Judgment' and Goring Thomas's 'The swan and the skylark' form an admirable test of the quality of any choral body, and on this occasion the choir fully maintained its high reputation, singing with both solidity and brilliancy. The band, led by M. Siegl, was also very good, and the soloists—Madame Agnes Nicholls, Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. William Green and Mr. Charles Knowles—were admirable. Mr. Kirkhope conducted to the admiration of all.

The last concert of the Amateur Orchestral Society, which took place on April 9, proved one of the best the Society has hitherto given. The band showed the results of Mr. Collinson's careful training in steady renderings of such contrasted works as Mozart's 'Prague' symphony, the 'Leonora' (No. 1) and 'Ruy Blas' overtures, the 'Siegfried Idyll,' and Saint-Saëns's 'Coronation March.' The soloists were Miss Eveline Hyde (soprano), and Miss Eleanor Ramsay (harpist).

With the waning season comes a rush of concerts by the smaller choral societies, and these are by no means the least interesting to whomsoever has the progress of music at heart. On March 16 the Southern Choral Society (Mr. Edward W. Winning, conductor) performed Parts I. and II. of the 'Creation.' On March 23 the 'Creation' was also given by the East End Choral Society (Mr. David Blair, conductor); and the Western Choral Society (Mr. Gavin Godfrey, conductor) performed the 'Messiah' on March 28.

An interesting first performance was that of the 'Ode to the Passions,' composed by Dr. W. B. Ross, given by the choir of Broughton Place Church on March 29, the composer conducting. This was the diploma work for the Oxford degree of Mus. Doc. recently conferred upon Dr. Ross, and proved to be not a mere technical exercise but a sound and excellent composition, one that shows the composer to possess an inventive skill and a melodic faculty of a high order. On the same evening the choir of North Morningside Church gave an excellent performance of the 'Last Judgment,' under the able conductorship of Mr. Scott Jupp, and on April 10 the choir of Morningside United Free Church, skillfully led by Mr. R. McLeod, sang very successfully Mendelssohn's 'Christus' and Bridge's 'Hymn to the Creator.' It is noteworthy that at all these concerts there was orchestral accompaniment of a more or less excellent kind; and it is also noteworthy that the bass soloist at almost all was Mr. George Campbell, a local artist whose success this season has been most remarkable.

The only chamber concert to notice is that (on March 20) of the recently organized Edinburgh String Quartet—Messrs. Colin McKenzie, James H. Hartley, R. de la Haye, and D. Millar Craig—who have quite caught the ear of the public and have evidently come to stay. The quartets chosen for performance were Mozart in G minor, Schubert in A minor, and Haydn in G, each of which received a most enjoyable reading.

MUSIC IN LIVERPOOL AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The Liverpool Welsh Choral Union gave the second local performance of Elgar's 'The Dream of Gerontius' on March 31 with notable success. The chorus-singing was throughout admirable, and the Union deserves the warmest praise for its enterprise. The soloists were Miss Marie Brema, Mr. Evan Williams and Mr. Charles Tree, and Mr. Harry Evans conducted.

The Societa Armonica concert on April 4 was chiefly interesting by a very careful performance of Mendelssohn's 'Italian' symphony. Tchaikovsky's overture 'Romeo and Juliet' was also included in the programme.

The Symphony Orchestra performed Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony and 'Casse Noisette' suite at their last concert of this season on April 9.

MUSIC IN MANCHESTER.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The most interesting of our remainder-feast of music is the important course the Brodsky Quartet provided on April 5. Their programme included Tchaikovsky's String quartet in E flat, No. 3 (Op. 30), César Franck's Sonata for pianoforte and violin, and Beethoven's posthumous Quartet in F (Op. 135). The sonata, given for the first time here, was played by Dr. Brodsky and Mr. Egon Petri. The popular support secured by these concerts is remarkable. They have already contributed more than £1,000 to the Sustentation Fund of the Royal Manchester College of Music. The students of the College, by-the-way, following their annual custom, gave a platform performance, on April 2, of Weber's 'Der Freischütz.' The principal, Dr. Brodsky, conducted, and there was some excellent singing by the six principal soloists.—The students of Mr. A. J. Cross's school of music have also made a venture—their sixth—in opera, giving two adequately-staged performances of Hérold's 'Le Pré aux Clercs,' on March 30 and 31. Their efforts were in every way commendable, under Mr. Cross's capable conductorship.—Our further experiences of opera have included a visit by the Carl Rosa Company.—The performances of Signor Creatore and his band excited critical interest, but attracted only small audiences.—The Vocal Society brought its season to a close, on March 28, with a concert of old English music, which gave great delight to the subscribers, who were present in record numbers. Dr. Henry Watson, the director, presided at the harpsichord; there was a full chest (five) of genuine viols, in very capable hands; and the intimate character of the ballets, ayres, madrigals, ditties, and vocal and instrumental solos rendered was emphasised by Dr. Watson, who played the part of genial host, and offered running comments upon the various pieces in the programme.

The sixth and last of the season's Promenade Concerts took place on March 31. The members of the Hallé Orchestra, fifty in number, who have founded the concerts, are so satisfied with the public support they have received that they announce the renewal of the concerts next season with an enlarged series of ten.—Mr. Isidor Cohn gave one of his interesting pianoforte recitals on March 26. He has a fine repertory, and his programmes are always representative, with not even a mole's eye to mere popular attractiveness. On this occasion he confined himself to Brahms and Schumann, in the interpretation of which his executive ability was abundantly manifest.—Recitals of an introductory character have also been given with promise of future success by Miss Dorothea Shepherd-Walwyn (violin), a pupil of Miss Edith Robinson; and by Miss Dorothy Kenyon (pianoforte), a pupil of Mr. T. W. Britton.

MUSIC IN NEWCASTLE AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A fine performance of Cowen's 'Ruth' was given by the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union and the Hallé Orchestra on March 21. The soloists were Misses Nannie Tout, E. Lister, F. Richardson, and Messrs. John Coates and Ivor Foster. The chorus-singing was, as usual, very fine. It is with much regret that I have to chronicle the resignation, through ill-health, of the extremely able conductor of the Society, Mr. J. M. Preston, who has guided its fortunes from its birth in 1888. A musician of great ability, of enormous personal popularity, of a retiring and self-denying disposition, of unflinching high ideals, and a chorus-master of power and skill, he has raised the Society to a pitch of efficiency which, according to experienced critics of repute, ranks it among the three or four leading choral bodies in the kingdom. It is rumoured that Dr. Coward, of Sheffield, will succeed him.

On March 22 the Northumberland Amateur Orchestral Society (Mr. C. Horsley) showed an advance in interpretative excellence. The chief items were Mendelssohn's 'Italian' symphony and Bizet's 'Suite L'Arlésienne.'—The Newcastle Amateur Vocal Society gave a performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' on March 27. The soloists were Misses F. Chetham and L. Milburn, and Messrs. A. Heather and C. Knowles; Mr. J. E. Jeffries conducted.

On the following evening the Classical Concert Society, a new organization formed with the intention of supplementing the two chamber music societies of the city by recitals and other concerts with coherent educational programmes, held its inaugural gathering, at which Mdlle. Antonia Dolores and Mr. Leonard Borwick gave a delightful vocal and pianoforte recital of works ranging from Caccini to Beethoven, but with Mozart as the central figure.

On the same evening the South Shields Choral Society (conductor Mr. M. Fairs) performed, with orchestra, Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives' and Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha.'

The Newcastle Postal Telegraph Choral Society, under Mr. J. E. Hutchinson's direction, exhibited improved expressive qualities in Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' on March 29. Mrs. G. F. Huntley and Madame Newbold Thorpe (both formerly of this city), and Messrs. H. Beaumont and J. Coleman were the soloists. A large audience assembled at the Tyne Theatre the next night to hear the first performance here of Tchaikovsky's dainty opera 'Eugene Onegin,' given by the Moody-Manners Opera Company.

The recent death of the Russian composer Arensky caused the inclusion of his Pianoforte trio in the programme of the Newcastle Musical Society's concert on April 6 to be of especial interest. The work was brilliantly played by Miss Page and Messrs. A. Wall and A. Proctor. Beethoven's String quintet headed the programme, and Miss Mary Wyatt sang.

A newly-formed Teachers' Musical Society gave its first concert on April 5 in the Rutherford College Hall. Gounod's 'Gallia,' Mendelssohn's '95th Psalm,' and two of Brahms's 'Marienlieder' were sung. Misses M. Wyatt, M. Hunter and B. Buckley, and Mr. G. D. Gibson were the vocalists, Miss A. Welton was the violinist, Mr. J. Gloag accompanied. Mr. W. G. Whittaker conducted.

MUSIC IN NOTTINGHAM AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

A good many societies finished their season's work too late to be mentioned in my last letter. The Grantham Philharmonic Society gave Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Spohr's 'Last Judgment,' on March 22. The principals were Miss Maggie Jacques, Miss Emily Hart, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Joseph Lycett, and Mr. H. P. Dickenson conducted.

The Derby Choral Union concluded its fortieth season on March 27 with Schubert's 'Song of Miriam' and the 'Spring' section of Haydn's 'Seasons.' The solos were taken by Miss Eva Rich, Mr. Ripley Evans and Mr. H. G. Coulson. Mr. Norman Hibbert was organist; Mr. Neville Cox, pianist; Mr. W. Daltry, leader; and Mr. Charles Hancock conducted.

The Wirksworth Choral Society finished its twenty-eighth season with a performance of 'Elijah' on March 23. The solos were undertaken by Madame Aston, Miss Gertrude Pegg, Mr. S. Mason and Mr. James Coleman, and the orchestra and chorus were conducted by Mr. Carl Ashover.

'Judas Maccabeus' was given by Long Eaton Choral Society on March 27, the principals being Madame Annie Norledge, Miss Eva Turgoose, Mr. C. W. Fredericks and Mr. R. R. Morris. Mr. George Spencer conducted, and Mr. John Munks presided at the organ.

In Nottingham a performance of 'Elijah' took place at the Canaan Church, Broad Marsh, on March 26. The soloists were Miss Gertrude Crisp, Madame Ethel Dennis, Mr. Herbert Smith and Mr. John Browning. Mr. G. H. Smith conducted a full orchestra and a chorus of over eighty voices.

Instrumental music has been represented by a return visit of Kreisler and the appearance of Creatore, but of native effort there is Miss Cantelo's last subscription concert to report, when she was assisted by the Brodsky Quartet, on March 30. To lovers of chamber music these concerts are a great treat, and this season's programmes have been specially interesting.

The students at the Nottingham University have a choir of some 200 voices, admirably trained by Professor A. Henderson. This year they gave their concert at the Mechanics' Large Hall on March 29, when the main feature of the programme was Coleridge-Taylor's 'Death of Minnehaha,' and Miss Emma Mundella's 'The Victory of Song.'

The Gedling Choral Society finished its season with Cowen's 'Rose Maiden' on April 2, when the solos were undertaken by Madame Clara Gardiner, Miss Evelyn Willcox, Mr. Alfred Clarke and Mr. Andrew Taylor. The chorus and orchestra, who did their part well, were conducted by Mr. E. M. Barber.

On April 4 the Derby Orchestral Society—an old Society now resuscitated—gave its first concert under the direction of Mr. W. Lyell-Taylor. The effectively-rendered programme comprised the 'Oberon' and 'William Tell' overtures, the 'Unfinished' symphony, first 'Peer Gynt' suite, and an Intermezzo (Walton), the last-named a local but quite worthy composition.

The Carlton (Notts) Choral Society concluded its season on April 13 with a performance of Gounod's 'Messe Solennelle,' under the direction of the Rev. F. J. Perry.

MUSIC IN SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

The season's activities of the Sheffield Musical Union culminated in the closing days of March when, to a large audience of subscribers, Dr. Walford Davies's 'Everyman' and Dr. Cowen's 'John Gilpin' were performed under the direction of Dr. Coward. The juxtaposition of two works so widely dissimilar in scope and sentiment had been cleverly avoided by some 'buffer' pieces, which enabled the audience to descend by easy stages from the contemplation of serious issues—in 'Everyman'—to the unrestrained fun and frolic of the clever setting of 'John Gilpin.' Dr. Davies's taxing choral problems were fully solved by Dr. Coward's fine body of singers. Occasionally there were slight lapses from the Musical Union's own lofty standard, but on the whole a very impressive and, in places, a singularly beautiful performance was given. 'John Gilpin' was sung with splendid dash, conductor and chorists travelling from London to Ware and back in record time. The soloists were Miss Caroline Hatchard, Miss Lilian Hovey, Mr. A. S. Burrows and Mr. Montague Borwell.

The closing days of March also saw two excellent concerts given in South Yorkshire which claim some special notice. The Rotherham Choral Society and the Doncaster Musical Society are both fortunate in having Mr. Thomas Brameld as their conductor, and each in equal measure benefits by his enlivening enthusiasm and competent musicianship. At Rotherham the chorists of the notable Choral Society maintained their proud traditions in Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha,' of which a well-planned and artistically carried out performance was given. At Doncaster, Berlioz's 'Faust' finished a winter's hard work, and the choral enthusiasts rose to the occasion. A very spirited and in all respects an admirable performance of the trying choral portions was given. The orchestra and soloists were in each case identical, the latter consisting of Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. Alfred Heather and Mr. Charles Tree. Mr. R. Crawshaw made an excellent Brander.

The Sheffield Choral Union, which has made considerable progress under Mr. Duffell's zealous direction, gave a well-studied performance of Schubert's Mass in E flat on April 5. The choralism was expressive and the ensemble good, despite a too limited number of tenors. The soloists were Miss Alice Cooke, Miss Ethel Prescott, Mr. G. Ibberson, and Mr. Frank Milner.

Several suburban choral concerts have called attention to the excellent educational work which is being done in the training of performers and audiences in the near districts about the city. Promising choral societies at Shiregreen, conductor, Mr. J. Gregory ('St. Paul'); Hillsborough, conductor, Mr. Frank Shimeld ('Judas Maccabeus'); Norton Lees, conductor, Mr. H. Reynolds ('King Arthur'); Beighton, conductor, Mr. Hallfield ('Last Judgment'); Penistone, conductor, Mr. Cooper ('Samson'); and Heeley, conductor, Mr. W. Chapman ('a Mendelssohn night') have proved what a valuable pioneer work is being carried on in those various centres.

Orchestral music has been well represented at the concerts of the Sheffield Philharmonic Orchestra (Schumann's second Symphony and Dr. G. J. Bennett's suite in D minor), under the conductorship of Mr. J. H. Parkes; the Sheffield Amateur Instrumental Society (Max Bruch's Violin concerto in G minor, solo Mr. C. M. Hawcroft; and ballet-music from Berlioz's 'Faust'), under Mr. Duffell, and the Ecclesfield Instrumental Society (Mr. T. Brameld).

MUSIC IN YORKSHIRE.

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LEEDS.

The Leeds Philharmonic Society gave, on March 28, an exceedingly fine interpretation of Brahms's 'German Requiem.' Sir Charles Stanford showed sympathy as well as understanding in his conducting, and he brought out the nobility of the music well, the dignity of the march-like 'Behold all flesh is as the grass' being uncommonly well realized. The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White and Mr. Frederic Austin. The excellent chorus-singing was a striking testimony to Mr. Fricker's able training.

The Leeds Choral Union gave, on April 4, an interesting Handel programme including some fine choruses from 'Deborah,' 'Saul,' and 'Samson,' as well as a selection from 'Israel in Egypt.' The chorus of the Society, itself a strong one, was strengthened by contingents from Sheffield, Huddersfield, and Morley till it numbered over 650 voices, while, as the band consisted of only sixty-five performers, it was not surprising if the general effect lacked much sense of proportion. Still more doubtful, from an artistic standpoint, was the expedient of giving the duet 'The Lord is a man of war' to the whole body of 280 tenors and basses, a practice which does not show conspicuous reverence for the composer's intention. The soloists were Miss Jenny Taggart, Miss Mary Peddle (who introduced a remarkably fine contralto air from 'Semele'), Mr. Charles Saunders and Mr. John Browning. Dr. Coward conducted and secured some fine effects from his chorus.

The Municipal Concerts ended on March 31, when a Wagner programme, not for the first time, proved, by the increased audience, its superior power of attraction. Some variety was given by Schumann's Pianoforte concerto, the solo part in which was played in thoroughly musical style by Mr. Percy Richardson. The introduction to Act II. of Max Schillings' 'Ingwilde' was an interesting novelty to Leeds, and it and the Wagner pieces—notably the 'Siegfried Idyll,' which was admirably played—gave evidence of the great efficiency the orchestra has now attained under Mr. Fricker's direction. On May 27 the Symphony Society, under Mr. Arthur Grimshaw, gave a programme including Haydn's 'Clock' Symphony and Bizet's Suite 'Jeux d'enfants.' One of Spohr's duets for two violins was played by Miss Simpkin and Miss Yeates, Mr. F. G. Broughton contributed some pianoforte solos, and the vocalist was Miss L. Coward. At the Leeds Bohemian chamber concert on March 21, a pleasing novelty was afforded in the shape of a new 'Divertimento' for string quartet by Mr. Arthur Grimshaw, founded on old English folk-tunes, such as 'Death and the lady,' 'Cheshire rounds,' and 'Shropshire rounds.' Mr. Grimshaw has already shown his aptitude for this exacting type of composition, and this example is as delightful as it is musicianly. It, and quartets by Mozart and Ippolitoff-Ivanoff, were well played by Messrs. Elliott, Wright, Moxon and Bolton, who have now developed a capital ensemble. A fresh quartet party, the Rasch Quartet, made its first appearance on April 6. Schumann's Quartet in F and Beethoven's posthumous Quartet in A minor (Op. 132) formed a sufficiently ambitious programme, but the four players, Messrs. Rasch, Drake, Haigh and Giessing, are experienced musicians, and though this was their first associated performance, they played with remarkable fire and spirit, and when they have had more opportunities of playing together, should form an excellent quartet.

OTHER TOWNS.

Both the Hull Societies have just brought the season to a close with performances of important choral works. On March 30 the Hull Harmonic Society gave, under Mr. Walter Porter's direction, Sullivan's 'Golden Legend.' Miss Gleeson-White, Miss Dewhurst, Mr. Brearley and Mr. Ivor Foster were the principals, and the chorus, though not very strong, sang well, while the orchestra, composed of Yorkshire musicians, was thoroughly satisfactory. On April 3, the Hull Vocal Society, under Dr. G. H. Smith, essayed Verdi's Requiem, together with Brahms's 'Song of Destiny'—a striking contrast of styles, but each great of its kind. Verdi's music tried the powers of the executants severely, but the chorus at least were familiar with their task. The principals were Miss Maggie Jaques, Miss Alice Lakin, Mr. H. Beaumont and Mr. Lycett.—Dr. Ely has done much for the cultivation of choral music at Scarborough, and such a performance as he directed on March 26 of Brahms's 'German Requiem,' at a concert of the Philharmonic Society, would have been impossible and almost incredible a few years back. The singers not only knew their parts, but sang them in an easy, vocal style that deprived the performance of any sense of effort. The principals—Miss Marion Richardson and Mr. Herbert Brown—were both thoroughly cultured artists, and Mr. Brown gave a really impressive interpretation of the baritone solos. The band, though not strong enough, was otherwise efficient, and the whole performance reflected credit on the Society, and especially on its conductor.

Elgar's 'King Olaf' was given by the Keighley Musical Union on March 27, under Mr. J. B. Summerscales's conductorship. Miss D'Argo, Mr. Davis and Mr. Ivor Foster were the soloists in a generally satisfactory performance.

The York Musical Society, under Mr. T. Tertius Noble—who, by-the-way, has just been nominated Canon Pemberton's successor as conductor of the Hovingham Festival—gave a miscellaneous concert on April 3; and on March 24 Miss Edith Wehner gave a very agreeable chamber concert in York. With Miss Rhoda von Glehn she sang some charming duets, Miss Lilla von Glehn being the violinist and Mr. C. Henrich the pianist.

The Huddersfield subscription concert on March 27 was of unusual interest, Dr. Richter and the Hallé Orchestra appearing in a programme which included Beethoven's eighth Symphony, Elgar's 'In the South' and Strauss's 'Till Eulenspiegel.' Miss Maud McCarthy's playing of Saint-Saëns's Violin concerto in B minor was an interesting feature of the concert.

Foreign Notes.

AUGSBURG.

The first German performance of Mons. Gabriel Pierné's oratorio 'The children's crusade' (La croisade des enfants) took place on April 1 in the presence of the composer, who met with an enthusiastic reception. The work is considered one of the most important contributions to modern choral music, and its introduction into Germany has been hailed with genuine pleasure and appreciation. The performance of the local Oratorienverein, under Prof. W. Weber—who made the German translation and also wrote an elucidatory analysis of the music—was excellent in every respect.

BADEN-BADEN.

At the instigation of the municipal Kurdirector, Count Vitzthum, a musical festival, the first of its kind in this town, will be held here on June 9, 10 and 11. Herren Richard Strauss, Paul Hein and Musikdirektor Beines will act as conductors, while Messrs. Henri Marteau and Ferruccio Busoni will be the instrumental soloists.

BARMEN.

A great success attended the production of a new MS. orchestral Suite (Op. 80, No. 2) by Herr Max Bruch. The work is in five movements, which are chiefly based on Swedish folk-tunes, e.g., a War-song dating from the time of Gustav Wasa (1496-1560), a Royal march of 1700, some love songs, a Dalekarlian dance, &c.

BERLIN.

Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari's new opera 'Die vier Grobiane' was performed here for the first time on March 21—two days after its production at Munich—at the Theatre des Westens, Charlottenburg, in the presence of the composer and warmly received. In fact, its reception was in marked contrast to that which greeted the work at Munich, though the press, or at any rate the composer's admirers amongst the critics, confess to some disappointment, because the new work shows no distinct advance in the gifted German-Italian master's development.—An orchestral concert given by four young Polish composers—G. Fitelberg, Prince L. Lubomirski, L. Rósycki and K. Szymanowski—proved a great disappointment, because only the first-named, who conducted, showed sufficient talent to warrant some hopes that the young Polish School may eventually produce music worth performing and listening to.

BORDIGHERA.

Two performances of Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' were given in the Victoria Hall, on April 5, by the combined Choral Societies of Bordighera and San Remo, under the direction of Mr. W. H. Woodward, organist of All Saints' Church, San Remo, Italy. Dvorák's 'Stabat Mater' was also given by the San Remo Choral Society, in All Saints' Church, San Remo, on April 11. The Rev. H. Briscoe conducted.

BRUSSELS.

'Déidamia,' a lyric-drama in four acts, founded on Alfred de Musset's 'La coupe et les lèvres' by Messrs. Lucien Solvay and François Rasse and composed by M. François Rasse, was produced at the Théâtre de la Monnaie on April 3. It is the composer's first dramatic work and his success has been both genuine and spontaneous.

DARMSTADT.

A posthumous String quintet in F by the late gifted Bohemian composer, Miroslav Weber, was produced on March 19 by the Darmstadt String Quartet. The work is praised for its grace and charm, no less than for its excellent workmanship.

DORTMUND.

Liszt's rarely heard oratorio 'Christus' was given at the fourth concert of the local Musikverein under Prof. Julius Janssen, and, aided by a splendid performance, created a deep impression.

DRESDEN.

A new Symphony in C, composed by Reinhold Becker, has been produced by the Royal Orchestra under Hofkapellmeister Schuch.

DÜSSELDORF.

The proposed performance of Elgar's 'Apostles' has had to be postponed till May 10, in consequence of Prof. Julius Büths having been temporarily incapacitated by a severe attack of influenza. He has undertaken to furnish the German translation of the new portion of the 'Apostles' which is to be produced at the forthcoming Birmingham Festival in October.

ESSEN-ON-THE-RUHR.

The programme of this year's Tonkünstlerfest (Festival of the German General Music Society), to be held on May 24-27, will include, besides Gustav Mahler's new (sixth) two-hour Symphony, the following novelties: 'Heroic tone-poem,' by Rudolf Siegel; 'Seedrift,' for baritone solo, chorus and orchestra, by Frederick Delius; a symphony by Hermann Bischoff; a scene from an opera, 'Fallada,' by Walter Braunfels; a Violin concerto entitled 'Das Leben ein Traum' (Life a dream) by Dr. Otto Neitzel; a 'Hymn' for chorus and orchestra by Engelbert Humperdinck; a tone-poem, 'Dem Schmerz sein Recht' (To sorrow its due), by Herr Mors; and several chamber works.

FLORENCE.

A new oratorio, 'Giuditta,' by Emilio Cianchi has been produced here with success.

FRANKFURT-ON-MAIN.

The most important musical event of the season so far has been the sudden resignation of the conductorship of the famous museum concerts by Herr Siegmund von Hausegger, which means a great loss to our art in this music-loving place. Herr Hausegger's reasons are variously stated, and much discussion has already taken place in connection with what promises to be a cause célèbre of its kind. To end the matter Herr Hausegger promises to state his reasons fully and publicly in due course. The last choral concert which he conducted was devoted to Liszt's 'Saint Elizabeth,' of which a splendid performance was given, Herr Hausegger being a Liszt conductor of quite exceptional ability.—The Rühl'scher Verein—which is now conducted by Prof. Siegfried Ochs, performed no fewer than five of Bach's Church Cantatas at its last concert. It seems a special gift of Germany's foremost choir-trainer to make Bach palatable to both singers and audiences, so that even a 'heavy' programme, like the one in question, is keenly enjoyed and not merely endured for the sake of appearing 'musical.'

GOTHA.

'La Biondinetta,' a three-act opera by the Greek composer, Spiro Samara, a pupil of Délibes and Massenet, was performed for the first time in Germany on April 11 at the local Court theatre and very favourably received. The work has, so far, only been heard at Milan, but it is also announced for presentation at the Coburg Court theatre.

GRAZ.

Richard Strauss's opera 'Salome' is at present in rehearsal and will be performed three times at the end of May under the direction of the composer. All seats for this trio of representations have already been sold, and to meet the demand arrangements may have to be made for further representations of a work which, repulsive though it must be to many even of the gifted composer's admirers, illustrates once more the truth of the old adage that nothing succeeds like success.

HALLE.

The latest Symphony by Prince Heinrich XXIV. of Reuss, was lately produced privately by the band of the 36th Infantry Regiment.

HAMBURG.

Felix Woyrsch's mystery, 'Totentanz' (Dance of death), achieved a brilliant success on its performance here—the first since the original production at Cologne—under the direction of the composer. There can be little doubt that 'Totentanz' is perhaps the most important German contribution to choral music produced in recent years. The libretto (by the composer) meets with as much approval as the powerful music, and the story, suggested by Holbein's famous designs, grips the audience as only such intensely solemn, mystery-laden subjects can—e.g., 'Dream of Gerontius,' 'Everyman,' &c.—The Town Council has unanimously voted 100,000 marks towards the municipal theatre orchestra and a series of good popular concerts.

HANOVER.

Hermann Götz's delightful opera, 'The taming of the shrew,' has been revived here with much success after having been allowed to drop out of the repertoire for sixteen years.

KARLSRUHE.

A new one-act comic-romantic opera, 'Der fahrende Schüler' (The student-errant), by Herr Edgar Istel, was produced at the Court theatre on March 24 under the direction of Kapellmeister Balling. The plot is founded on a story by Cervantes; the music is bright and merry.

LEIPZIG.

Herren Bernhard Stavenhagen and Felix Berber gave a recital of violin and pianoforte sonatas on April 4, the programme of which consisted of Brahms's three works of this class (in G, A and D minor) and Beethoven's immortal 'Kreutzer.' The juxtaposition of Brahms's beautiful masterpieces proved especially interesting.—On April 7 the Leipziger Männerchor gave a most successful Friedrich Hegar concert. The greatest success was made with the powerful, weird 'Totenvolk' (The phantom host). Other impressive pieces were 'Ahasver's awakening,' 'Young Volker' and 'The heart of Douglas.' The veteran composer, who conducted, was enthusiastically received.—A fantastic operetta, 'Die Narrenkappe' (The fool's cap), by the English composer Mr. G. H. Clutsam, was but partly successful on its production at the Old Theatre.

LÜBECK.

At the sixth Symphony concert a new symphonic poem, 'Memento vivere,' by Karl Ehrenberg, the second conductor at the municipal theatre of Posen, was produced and very favourably received.

MAGDEBURG.

A one-act music-drama 'Die Brautnacht' (The bridal night), by Albert Mattausch, was produced here on April 1 and met with a favourable reception. There are only three characters in the work, viz., two brothers in love with the same woman who, as usual in dramas, marries the one she does not care for, and thus prepares the way for the tragic dénouement upon which the curtain descends, after much nerve-tearing and heart-burning, with language and music to match.

MAYENCE.

Mr. Eugen d'Albert's comic opera 'Flauto solo,' which, since its very successful production in Prague, has met with similar good fortune in a number of other towns, was performed here for the first time on March 17. The composer was present to receive the enthusiastic plaudits of the delighted audience. The performance, conducted by Herr Emil Steinbach, was first-rate.

MENTONE.

A successful concert was given by the Choral Society in the Windsor Palace Hotel on March 24, when Bendall's 'The Lady of Shalott' and Liza Lehmann's song-cycle 'The daisy chain' were performed. The solo vocalists were Miss Minnie Phillips, Mrs. Edith Williams, Mr. W. J. Rodda, Mr. Henry Dobson and the Rev. E. B. Brackenbury, and two violin solos were cleverly played by Signorina Fanchiotti. The concert was under the direction of Mr. C. E. de M. Leathes, organist of St. John's Church, who ably accompanied.

MILAN.

Baron Albert Franchetti's new opera, based on d'Annunzio's drama 'Jorio's daughter,' was coldly received at its production at the Scala Theatre on March 29.—'Resurrezione,' a new opera founded on Tolstoi's 'Resurrection,' was produced at the same theatre with great success. The young composer is Signor Alfano.—Dom Lorenzo Perosi, hitherto chiefly known as the composer of a number of greatly-advertised but sadly unsuccessful oratorios, has written a symphony 'on classic lines,' which is shortly to be produced here by Signor Martucci.

MONTE CARLO.

A great impression was produced by Anton Rubinstein's opera 'The Demon,' performed here on March 27 for the first time in France. The famous Russian bass, Schaliapine—more famous perhaps in Western Europe as the much-discussed political friend of Maxim Gorki—sang the part of the protagonist, and Miss Sigrid Arnoldson was the unfortunate heroine Tamara. Both artists were much fêted, the King of Sweden having come specially from Cap Martin to be present at the performance and to witness the triumph of the famous Swedish songstress.

MÜNCHEN-GLADBACH.

Handel's oratorio 'Esther'—which, even in England, is scarcely ever performed—was revived (in a new edition, by Prof. F. W. Franke, of Cologne) at the last concert of the local Gesangverein 'Caecilia' conducted by Musikdirektor Hans Gelbke.

MUNICH.

On March 19 there was produced at the Court Theatre the new comic opera 'Die vier Grobiane' (The four louts), by Signor Ermanno Wolf-Ferrari, without, however, achieving complete success.

PARIS.

A Mozart Festival, conducted by M. Reynaldo Hahn, took place on March 23, 25 and 29 at the Nouveau-théâtre and attracted distinctly 'high-life' audiences, each of the three concerts having been under the patronage of some lady of the 'upper ten.' Madame Lilli Lehmann—her voice as fresh as ever—delighted everybody with her singing of some of Mozart's most famous airs.—Richard Strauss's 'Domestic' symphony was performed for the first time in France at the Colonne concert on March 25, under the direction of the composer, and enthusiastically received in spite of the protests of a small anti-German, or anti-Strauss minority.—A new opera, in five acts, by M. Camille Erlanger, entitled 'Aphrodite,' was produced at the Opéra-comique on March 27 and enthusiastically received. The libretto, based by M. Louis de Gramont upon a novel by Pierre Louys, deals with the most corrupt period (57 B.C.) in the history of Alexandria during the reign of Queen Berenice IV., the sister of Cleopatra. The chief characters are a sculptor, Demetrios, a courtesan, Chrysis, and a cruel, voluptuous hetæra, Bacchis. It will be readily understood that with such material to work upon both librettist and musician had opportunities for as exotic and orgiastic a series of scenes as even the Paris operatic stage has rarely seen. M. Erlanger's score contains the best he has so far offered to the public and the staging was superb in every way. Miss Mary Garden as Chrysis, M. Léon Beyle as Demetrios, and Mlle. Friché as Bacchis were all that could be desired, and the orchestra, under M. Lugini, was first-rate.

PRAGUE.

Spain counts for so little in the musical world just now—at any rate as regards creative genius—that the first performance in the German language of an opera by a Spaniard deserves more than a passing reference. The work in question is entitled 'Dolores,' a three-act opera after a drama by José Feliú y Codina, written and composed by the undoubtedly foremost living Spanish composer, Tomas Breton. The interesting event took place at the new German theatre here, whose director, Herr Angelo Neumann, seems to be a firm believer in Señor Breton's powers, since on two previous occasions he produced operas by the same master, viz., 'The lovers of Fernel' and 'Garin.' That was a good many years ago. Since then the composer has gradually changed his style, from that of the Wagnerian music-drama to that of the modern Italian Verismo with its freedom and explosiveness. This seems to be better suited to the subject of the new work, since it deals with a waitress for the heroine, and her four lovers, one of whom, Lazaro, a quiet, shy student of theology, kills the brutal ruffian Melchior, whom the beautiful Dolores (the waitress in question) favours, though he, after a promise of marriage, is about to leave her for another charmer. The curtain falls as Lazaro, the student, is led away after confessing his crime, and after Dolores, to save her gallant and devoted young admirer, has accused herself of the deed. Breton's music—in which Spanish rhythms and other characteristics abound—is aglow with southern life and colour, and the third act especially pulsates with feverish passion, rising to frenzied outbursts of rage and despair. The composer, who, in spite of his age, conducted with youthful vigour, was received with the utmost enthusiasm.

STUTTGART.

A great Hugo Wolf Festival, lasting five days (from October 4-8) is announced, at which, besides the opera 'Der Corregidor,' a comprehensive selection from the unfortunate master's choral, orchestral and chamber works will be performed, in addition to a large number of his beautiful songs.

ZÜRICH.

Dr. Friedrich Hegar, the foremost Swiss composer, has retired from public life after forty years' activity as a conductor. The farewell took place on April 3 at the last of the season's concerts in the splendid Tonhalle, standing on the shores of the lake of Zürich. The public, and the orchestra which he has directed during all these years, gave him a great ovation and almost buried him under countless floral offerings deposited on the rostrum. The usual Festessen (Festival supper) followed, at which Dr. Hegar entertained his friends and admirers with reminiscences and anecdotes of his long and highly successful career.

The Morecambe Musical Festival, to be held May 9-12, retains all the commendable characteristics that have made it famous, and sustains its great interest as the leading event of its kind. In addition to the various competitions, and a performance of Roedel's cantata 'Merrie Old England,' sung by the combined choirs of children, the following works will be rendered by the Festival choir and orchestra, numbering 400 performers: 'The Pied Piper of Hamelin' (Parry), 'The Revenge' (Stanford), and 'The Pilgrimage to Kevlaar' (Humperdinck). Dr. H. Coward will conduct, and the vocalists retained are Mrs. Henry J. Wood, Mr. Webster Millar and Mr. Frederic Austin. The adjudicators are Dr. McNaught, Dr. Walford Davies, and Mr. Ivor Atkins.

Mr. Granville Bantock, owing to his increasing duties in connection with the Midland Institute and the growing demands which are now being made upon him as a composer, has felt compelled, though very reluctantly, to resign the conductorship of the Wolverhampton Festival Choral Society. An equally regrettable resignation—that of Mr. J. M. Preston, conductor of the Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union—is referred to by our Newcastle correspondent on page 340.

The third annual conference of the Girls' School Music Union is announced to be held at the Guildhall School of Music on May 5, particulars of which will be found in our advertisement columns.

Country and Colonial News.

BRIEFLY SUMMARIZED.

BARNET.—The Choral Society gave a performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' in the Town Hall on April 3. Much credit is due to Mr. F. B. Wood, who conducted, for the excellence of the interpretation. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Ambrose, Miss G. Bompas, Mr. Bennet Griffin, Mr. John Barnes and Mr. Ernest White. The singing of the choristers from Holy Trinity Church, Lyonsdown, as the Celestial Choir, deserves recognition.

BLACKBURN.—Elgar's 'Dream of Gerontius' was given for the first time here, in the Exchange Hall, on April 6, with great success, by the St. Cecilia and Vocal Union. The choir of 200 voices sang throughout with precision and intelligence. The orchestra of sixty performers, selected from Hallé's Band—acquired themselves admirably. The solo vocalists were Miss Edna Thornton, Mr. John Coates and Mr. Joseph Lycett. Dr. E. C. Bairstow conducted.

BRIGHTON.—The Sacred Harmonic Society gave a performance of Mozart's 'Requiem' and Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' on March 29. The choir, especially as regards the male voices, sang with fine tone and much spirit, and the solo vocalists were Miss Kate Cherry, Madame Edith Hands, Mr. James Davis and Mr. Harry Dearth, all being excellent. Mr. Robert Taylor conducted.

BROMLEY (KENT).—The Musical Society gave its fourth concert this season on April 3 at the Drill Hall, when Somervell's ode 'The forsaken merman,' W. H. Speer's cantata 'The jackdaw of Rheims,' and the chorus 'The challenge of Thor' (Elgar), were performed by the choir and orchestra of over 150 members. The orchestra also played the overtures to Ambroise Thomas's 'Mignon' and Smetana's 'The bartered bride,' and Schubert's 'Rosamunde' Entr'acte. Mr. F. Lewis Thomas conducted.

BURRY PORT (S. WALES).—Beethoven's 'Mount of Olives,' with a miscellaneous selection, was performed by the Jerusalem Chapel Choir on April 3. The choir consisted of 180 voices, and there was an efficient orchestra, led by Mr. W. F. Hulley. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Lister, Mr. John Bardsley and Mr. David Brazell. Mr. W. T. Roberts acted as organist and accompanist, and Mr. Frank King was the conductor.

CARDIFF.—A successful performance of Lee Williams's 'Last night at Bethany' was given by the Clare Gardens Wesleyan Choir on Good Friday evening, assisted by a small orchestra. Misses Kitty Mathias and C. Hambly, Messrs. Harry Morgan and J. W. Griffiths were the soloists. The organist of the church, Mr. T. Diamond, conducted.

CHELMSFORD.—The Musical Society brought its twenty-fourth season to a successful close on March 27, by an admirable performance of Mozart's 'Requiem Mass' and Part 2 of Handel's 'Messiah.' The chorus-singing was excellent. The soloists were Miss Dorothy Purser, Miss Amy Crosland, Mr. Sidwell Jones and Mr. Thomas Abel. The orchestra was led by Mr. G. Wilby, and Mr. F. R. Frye conducted.

CONNAH'S QUAY (FLINTSHIRE).—The Connah's Quay Choral Society gave its first performance of oratorio in the Drill Hall on April 11, with Gounod's 'Redemption,' the choruses being rendered with excellent spirit and precision. The solos were sung by Mr. Alfred Greenwood, Mr. A. M. Proctor, and Miss Ada Roberts; Miss I. Prince and Miss A. Morris taking part in the trios. The orchestra (led by Mr. Horace Haselden) included members of the Richter Orchestra and the Liverpool Symphony Orchestra, the general body of strings consisting of amateurs of the district. Mr. C. Lewis-Jones conducted.

DOVER.—The sacred cantata 'Olivet to Calvary,' by J. H. Maunder, was sung by the College Chapel Choir on April 7 with marked success, under the direction of the Rev. A. H. Stevens, who also played the organ accompaniments.

EASTBOURNE.—A concert in aid of the Deputy Mayor's Cottage Homes Scheme was given at the Town Hall on April 4 by Miss Mina Hudson's Ladies' Choir. The programme included Orlando Morgan's cantata 'The legend of Eloisa,' of which the composer conducted an excellent performance.

GRAHAMSTOWN.—The second season of the Orchestral Society opened successfully on March 8 in the Town Hall, when the performance included the 'Athalie' march, Elvey's Gavotte, Cowen's 'Graceful Dance' and the overture to 'Figaro.' The soloists were Madame Marie Dona Lloyd, Mr. Philip Sangster and Mr. Bernard Streatfield (vocalists), Mrs. Bernard Streatfield (violin), and Miss W. Deane (pianoforte), who played Beethoven's 'Funeral March on the death of a hero,' the concert being given on the eve of the unveiling of a memorial to those who fell in the late war.—On March 9 a concert was given by the Grahamstown Symphony Orchestra, the selections including Costa's march 'Eli,' German's 'Nell Gwyn Dances' and Haydn's 'Surprise' symphony. Violin solos were given by the conductor, Mr. E. A. Abbott, and pianoforte solos by Mr. Hubert Sallmann. The solo vocalists were Miss Ethel Collings, Mrs. M. Dower, Mr. C. Steward and Mr. W. A. Jeanes.

GRIMSBY.—The Philharmonic Society's second concert this season took place in the Town Hall on March 27, when Sullivan's 'Golden Legend' was performed under the direction of Mr. Walter Porter.

HARROGATE.—Mauder's cantata 'Olivet to Calvary' was sung at the Presbyterian Church on April 8 (Palm Sunday), under the direction of Mr. J. Adelberg Lawson, organist and choirmaster of the church, who presided at the organ.

HARTHILL (YORKS).—On Good Friday evening the parish church choir gave a performance of Gounod's 'Redemption' (Part 1), the solo parts being taken by members of the choir. The choruses were sung with precision and brightness of tone throughout, and Mr. Arthur Harvey, organist and choirmaster of the church, accompanied.

ILKLEY.—Elgar's 'King Olaf' was the principal feature in the programme of the Vocal Society's concert given in the Lecture Hall on March 29. The choir sang with much spirit and good expression, and were well supported by an efficient orchestra. The solo vocalists were Miss Nellie Judson, Mr. Henry Brearley and Mr. John Browning; and Mr. A. T. Akeroyd was a very able conductor.

IVERNESS.—Sir Hubert Parry's 'Pied Piper of Hamelin' was given by the Philharmonic Choral-Orchestral Society on March 30, in the Music Hall. The chorus fairly revelled in the work; Mr. Robert Burnett and Mr. H. Tyhurst were the solo vocalists. The music greatly pleased the large audience. Mr. F. L. Willgoose led the orchestra, and Mr. F. W. Whitehead conducted.

IPSWICH.—An excellent rendering of Mendelssohn's 'Elijah' was given on Good Friday in the Social Settlement Hall, under the able conductorship of Mr. G. King-Smith. The soloists were Miss Eva Hart, Miss Marie Stiven, Mr. Vivian Bennetts and Mr. Graham Smart. Mr. Smart's interpretation of the part of the Prophet was particularly good, and the well-balanced choir of 180 voices acquitted themselves admirably. The accompanists were: organ (Mr. W. J. Wightman), several brass instrumentalists and drums, while Mr. Barrington Hunnibell played the violoncello obbligato in the air 'It is enough.'

KIRKCALDY.—The fortieth season of the Musical Society was brought to a close by a very successful performance of Handel's 'Israel in Egypt,' on March 21. The solo vocalists were Madame Clementine de Vere, Miss Marion Richardson, Miss Gertrude Lonsdale and Mr. Charles Saunders. The accompaniments were played by an orchestra under the leadership of Mr. W. H. Cole. Mr. James Gray presided at the organ, and Mr. Charles M. Cowe conducted.

LEAMINGTON.—The Madrigal Society gave a concert in the Town Hall on March 28, when the selection of part-music included 'The Cavaliers' (Clutsam), 'Lady, see on every side' (Marenzio), 'If I had but two little wings' (Parry), 'The dawn of song' (Dr. E. C. Bairstow), two Irish airs arranged by the conductor, and two humorous choral songs, 'The little drummer' (Kappey) and 'Lilian' (Waddington). Arensky's Trio (Op. 32) for violin, violoncello and pianoforte, was played by Messrs. T. H. Smith, Percy Hall and E. Roberts West, the last-named being the conductor of the concert.

LEAVESDEN.—The Woodside Choral Society gave a concert in the Asylum on April 3, the chief item being J. H. Maunder's 'Olivet to Calvary.' Madame Hayes, Madame Davis, Messrs. J. H. Parish and E. H. Slade were the soloists. The choir sang in a manner which reflected great credit upon themselves and their conductor (Rev. A. Clark). The concert was repeated next evening to the inmates.

LEIGHTON BUZZARD.—Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed in the Corn Exchange on April 19 by the Leighton and Linslade Musical Society. The solo vocalists were Miss Florence Griffiths, Mr. Henry Beaumont and Mr. Charles Griffiths. Mr. R. Richardson-Jones conducted.

LEITCHWORTH GARDEN-CITY (HERTS).—A successful concert was given in the Howard Memorial Hall (opened for the first time that afternoon) on Saturday evening, March 31, by the newly-formed Garden City Choral Society (assisted by a small orchestra), under the able conductorship of Miss Margaret Fowles. Mendelssohn's 'As the hart pants,' with Miss Constance Morphy in the solo part, was the main feature of the programme. The Choral Society also contributed two part-songs by Elgar, 'Weary wind of the west' and 'A Spanish serenade.' The other vocalists who appeared were Miss Jessie Atkinson and Mr. Barry Parker, and Mr. Blake contributed a violoncello solo.

LOCKWOOD.—The Musical Society gave a good performance of Rossini's 'Stabat Mater' and Cowen's 'St. John's Eve' on April 3. The soloists were Madame Sadler Fogg, Madame Rina Robinson, Mr. Fred Fallas and Mr. William Riley. Dr. A. Eaglefield Hull conducted.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.—Mr. Lee Williams's sacred cantata 'Gethsemane' was performed in St. Andrew's Church on April 13. The choir sang with much intelligence, and Mr. Oswald, who directed the work, presided at the organ.

PONTARDAWE.—Two performances of Handel's 'Jephtha' were given on April 13 and 14 by the Tabernacle Congregational Chapel Choir. The solo vocalists were Miss Marion Squire, Miss Rachel Thomas, Mr. Merlyn Davies and Mr. H. Bowen. The orchestra was led by Mr. W. F. Hulley, and the work was excellently rendered under the direction of Mr. James Davies.

SOUTHPORT.—The Choral Society gave its last concert of the season on April 3, in the Cambridge Hall. The programme included Coleridge-Taylor's 'Hiawatha's departure,' Brahms's 'Song of destiny,' Beethoven's 'Leonora' overture (No. 3) and Tchaikovsky's 'Pathetic' symphony. The principal vocalists were Miss Ida Kahn, Mr. Walter Lawley and Mr. Herbert Brown. Mr. J. C. Clarke conducted an excellent performance.

SWANSEA.—The newly-formed Orpheus Choral Society gave its first concert on April 9, when Coleridge-Taylor's 'Scenes from Hiawatha' was given in its entirety. The soloists were Miss Gleeson-White, Mr. Lloyd Chandos and Mr. Ivor Foster. The well-balanced choir consisted of about 175 voices, and together with the orchestra was deserving of high praise. The whole performance was in the experienced hands of Mr. Donald W. Lott. This Society, it is interesting to know, has specially in view 'the study and performance of modern works.' In this respect it turns aside from the well-trodden paths of Welsh choral bodies generally.

THIRSK.—Mozart's 'Requiem' was performed by the Choral Society in the parish church on April 5. The solo vocalists were Miss Emily Waddington, Mr. C. D. Sproule, Mr. A. Monaghan and Mr. J. W. Senior. Mr. C. H. Moody, organist of Ripon Cathedral, presided at the organ, and the pianoforte and tympani were played by Miss F. Wright and Mr. J. J. Chard respectively. Mr. A. J. Todd, organist and choirmaster of the parish church, conducted.

WEST HOUGHTON.—On the evening of Good Friday the choir of the parish church rendered Maunder's cantata 'Olivet to Calvary.' The organist and choirmaster, Mr. R. W. Brown, accompanied.

WITHAM.—Mendelssohn's 'St. Paul' was performed by the Musical Society on March 27 with much success. The band and chorus numbered about eighty, and the solo vocalists were Miss Bessie Cartwright, Miss Isabel Clear, Mr. Leonard Wright and Mr. W. H. Bullock. Mr. N. Linley Howlett conducted.

Answers to Correspondents.

MILLICENT.—(1) The literal meaning of 'portamento' is 'carrying, bearing.' In regard to its application to music, we give two definitions by trustworthy authorities: 'A "carrying" of the voice from one note to another. It is the highest perfection of legato. The word is chiefly used in connection with singing, but is also applicable to the playing of wind and bow-stringed instruments' (Niecks). 'A lifting of the voice, or gliding from one note to another' (Stainer and Barrett). (2) No, but he is on our list.

J. M.—The song mentioned by Carlyle in his 'French Revolution' (vol. 1., bk. 7), is 'O Richard, O mon Roi, l'univers t'abandonne.' It is by Grétry, and from the finest of all his works, ('Richard cœur de Lion'), produced on October 21, 1784. This particular air has obtained historic importance in that it was sung at Versailles on October 1, 1789.

C. R. S.—From inquiries we have made it seems that the seat in the Royal Albert Hall to which you refer is of the value of 'about £25,' the sum you mention as being offered. This may appear to you a small amount, but as it is a single seat it is not a very marketable article, as no one, unless he or she were a confirmed bachelor or a deep-dyed spinster, would think of buying a resting-place of so lonesome a nature.

J. G.—In order to obtain some idea of the value of your Stainer violin you should submit it to such reliable experts as Messrs. W. E. Hill & Sons, New Bond Street, who, in return for a fee, would put a price upon your treasure. The damaged neck, and the necessity for a new one, will, of course, be taken into account, though we hope it is hardly a case of neck or nothing.

STUDENT.—(1) The price of Tchaikovsky's opera 'Eugene Onegin' (vocal score) is 20s.: it can be obtained from Messrs. Novello. (2) Shortly before the approaching Birmingham Festival, when the price will be made known. (3) Yes, Bach's church cantata 'The Sages of Sheba' does contain a bass solo, and moreover a very fine one, 'God of Ophir is but vain,' preceded by an equally fine recitative.

W. J. P.—There is no book that exactly corresponds to Mr. Lightwood's 'Hymn-tunes and their story'; but you might consult 'Studies in Worship-music' (first series), by J. S. Curwen (Curwen); 'Scottish Church Music,' by James Love (Blackwood); and 'The Music of the Church Hymnary,' by William Cowan and James Love (Frowde).

A. K.—For information concerning 'Bells and their musical characteristics,' see two interesting and informing papers read before the Musical Association on December 10, 1901, and January 10, 1905, respectively entitled 'Bells and bell tones' and 'Carillons': they are printed in the Proceedings of the Musical Association.

J. A.—Without giving a detailed opinion on your poem, we prefer 'to wipe a tear' to 'to calm a tear,' that being a more natural method; though, as an angel removes this lachrymal fluid, the poet may claim full licence, regardless of the criterion of everyday life.

A. A.—In the absence of any dictionary—manuscript or printed—of musical jokes, it is impossible to say whether anyone has used the adjective 'bath-etic' as applied to the 'Sinfonia Domestica.'

HILTON.—'The easiest exam. to pass to allow the wearing of a hood?' We give it up. Things have come to a pretty pass if a pretty hood is the be-all and end-all of an examination.

GLEEMAN.—We cannot trace the publication of the three male-voice glees you mention—at least not in any accessible form. Perhaps Messrs. Novello may be disposed to issue them.

G. N.—Why not write to the composer—addressing him care of his publishers—as to the progressions in the chorus to which you refer?

H. M.—'The Chord' ceased to exist (or vibrate), after a brief existence, six years ago. Inquiries made at the time elicited the answer that it had become a lost chord.

ANXIOUS.—In order to free you from anxiety you had better inquire of the publishers of the poems as to whether they are copyright or not.
